Dear Sir,—As I am unable to reply to all the letters I have received with reference to my short papers in The Christian on the condition of our village poor, will you allow me to assure those who have questioned my motive in writing them, that it has neither been my aim nor desire to attack classes or to pain individuals. I have simply sought to bring the sorrows of these people under the notice of their richer neighbours.

Since I penned my first paper on the scarcity of work, thousands of men all through the country have been discharged from their employment, because, with the harvest ended, their employers have needed their services no longer. A large farmer has just told me that in the parish to which he belongs there will probably be thirty or forty men out of work all through the winter. In another village not far from here, fourteen labourers were to be dismissed last Saturday night. Poor souls, what are they to do? They got deeply into debt last winter, nor have they been able to recover themselves during the few summer weeks that have just come to an end.

There must be State-aided emigration for those who are willing to cross the sea, and there must be public works for those who cannot leave England. There will, doubtless, be a loud clamour raised against increased taxation, but if the selfishness that raises it shall be successful, I venture to say that it will prove its own punishment. Alas, for the owners of property, if those who have hitherto suffered so patiently should be driven to desperation! And a wondrous power to rouse a parent has the cry of a hungry child! I feel I could manage to endure the pangs of poverty myself; but were my Charlie, Jack, or Rob, or my little Ethelwyn, to appeal to me for food, and I had no food to give them, perhaps I should not regard revolution with the same kind of horror that it has for me now. God give the spirit of understanding and wisdom to those who possess this world's wealth, when remedial measures shall be proposed to meet the present distress. Selfishness, just now, will find it pay to play the part of generosity. As for the children of God, now should be our opportunity to show whose we are, and whom we serve. We are going to be weighed in the balances; God forbid that any of us shall be found wanting.

In conclusion, I would thank, in the Master's name, all those who have sent aid to my old friend Isaac Hipkiss. If these will kindly give their own address I will acknowledge their contributions direct to themselves. That the Lord will accept their offerings, as given to his Son in the person of his poor old servant, is the earnest prayer of John E. Linnell.

Pavenham Vicarage, Bedford.

DIED AT HIS POST.

SUDDEN DEATH OF REV. W. FRASER, BRIGHTON.

The Brighton community were startled and grieved on Sunday last by the news that Rev. W. Fraser, the esteemed pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Queen's-road, while delivering his morning sermon, had succumbed to heart disease, after an attack of ten minutes' duration. For some months he had been known to be suffering from that insidious complaint, and Sunday last was but the third Sunday on which he officiated after returning from a lengthened period of holiday rest. The deep regret felt in Brighton at his tragically sudden decease will be shared by large numbers in Scotland, where he was well known as an acceptable minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He was brother to Dr. Donald Fraser, of Marylebone, and was about the age of sixty-seven when the sudden call came. In an obituary notice, The Sussex Daily News of Monday says:—

His qualities were of a sterling kind, just such as bade fair to endure, and to enable him to minister with success for a long series of years. With a pleasing voice, and calm, but not monotonous, manner, and with a wide acquaintance with not only the Scriptures, but with literature generally, Mr. Fraser could never be uninteresting; and at times he was particularly happy in his presentations of truth. Besides carrying on the regular services of the church, and taking the pastoral oversight of its institutions, he took a warm and practical interest in many movements of a religious character outside of his own ministerial sphere, joining heartily with Christians of all denominations in any kind of work, having for its professed object the advance of the kingdom of God in the world. In this connection his appearances upon public platforms were frequent, and always welcome. In aggressive mission work he was also thoroughly at home, and took an active part in such movements as the Sunday evening services, which, for a time, were held in the Gaiety Music Hall in North-street, in the young men's service at the Odd Fellows' Hall, the Y.M.C.A., the Brighton Town Mission, the Open-air Mission, and other unsectarian movements.

YOUNG MEN'S EMIGRATION SOCIETY.—In connection with this branch of the Manchester Y.M.C.A. work, the twenty-fifth party of young men this year sailed for Canada on September 15, per ss. Parisian. They go out to join some of those already established on farms there.

THE NUMBER OF CONVICTS in Great Britain at the present time is only one fifth of what it was fifty years ago, though the population has so enormously increased. In 1837 there were fifty thousand, and, if the proportion of criminals had kept pace with the population, the numbers now would be nearly one hundred thousand.

VALEDICTORY MISSIONARY MEETING.—On Tuesday week a largely attended meeting was held at Park Chapel, Camden-town, to bid farewell to several missionaries of the London Missionary Society, who are about to proceed to various parts of the mission field. The following missionaries were present:—Rev. Jonathan Lees and Mrs. Lees, Mr. F. C. Roberts, M.B.C.M., the Misses Browne, Gilfillan, Pearson, and Winterbotham, Rev. C. D. Helm and Mrs. Helm, and Rev. Bowen Rees.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. George Clarke has been preaching the Gospel at Airdrie, N.B., to large gatherings; many tokens of blessing have followed the proclamation of the word.

Mr. J. M. Scroggie is to evangelise for six months in the east end of Glasgow. Thirteen Free Churches in the east end have combined for a well-sustained effort.

Mr. John Elliott, of the Evangelisation Society, has recently held a mission at the Congregational Chapel, Puriton, Somerset, which has resulted in much blessing.

Baltonsborough, Somerset.—A most successful mission has been held in this place by Mr. Henry Hilton, in a tent belonging to the Evangelisation Society. People came from long distances to hear the Gospel, and many professed conversion.

Lancaster.—Mr. Thomas Cook, the Wesleyan evangelist, has been conducting a mission in this town with great blessing to many. After the services on Sunday, the 11th, and again on the following day, large numbers came forward, and professed their desire to follow Christ.

Southsea.—The new hall, erected in connection with Mr. J. Denning's Mission, was opened for Gospel work on Sunday last; a public meeting was held on Wednesday. We regret to learn that the mission tent on Southsea-common has been considerably damaged by the recent gales.

The Protestant Mission, which was started six years ago by Mr. James Butcher, in the Girls' Board School-room, Turnham Green, is doing a quiet work. The Gospel is preached with earnestness and force, and, judging by the attendance, with success in winning souls to the Lord Jesus.

Nottingham Goose Fair.—This great annual carnival takes place on October 6, 7, and 8. The secretary of the local Y.M.C.A. is again organising a special band of workers for open-air work, &c. Gifts of tracts will be very acceptable, and the prayers of God's people are earnestly desired.

H. Johnson, Sec.

Goldington, near Bedford.—A quiet work, in a quiet way, has since last November been carried on amongst the inhabitants of this village. A Bible-class and prayer-meeting have been held weekly, and well attended. Cottage and Gospel meetings, presided over occasionally by Rev. J. E. Linnell, of Pavenham, Bedford, have been held from time to time. Much blessing has resulted.

Royal Victoria Hall, New Cut.—It will be interesting to note that the Sunday evening Gospel services are sustained with interest and blessing, under the practical management of a committee, with Mr. Neal Horne as hon. secretary. An address was given on Sunday evening by Mr. John Kirk, which was followed by a Gospel temperance address. There was a large attentive audience, and the effort evidently meets a want in this poor neighbourhood, with its teeming throngs of non-churchgoers.

Blackdown Hills Mission.—For the past eleven years we have had two tents at work, one in Dorchester, under Mr. E. Venn, where the Lord has greatly blessed the Gospel, so that a large number have been converted, and added to the Lord. Another has been erected in various villages in North Devon—Bampton, four weeks; Dulverton, three weeks; Bishops Nympton, three weeks. At the last-named place the tent was blown down in the late gale, and sustained considerable damage, which will require very considerable repairs before it can be used again. Mr. Veasey, who had the charge of the latter tent, has had many tokens of blessing in each place.

Geo. Brealey.

Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset.

Gospel Tent Work.—Through the good hand of our God upon us, we have closed our summer tent campaign in Somerset and Gloucester. A season of happy fruitful work for the Master under canvas has been experienced, and many have been the trophies of his grace from amongst sinners, and the restored and revived ones amongst saints as the result of the Gospel preached and sung. We have been privileged to conduct tent services in many places, giving particular attention to dark and needy villages. At Weston-Super-Mare our wooden-sided tent was much appreciated by the visitors and residents, and during the fourteen weeks of the tent mission 210 services were conducted. The gale of August 31 blew our canvas roof to ribbons, so that we were compelled to remove the meetings to the Gospel Hall, Waterloo-road.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

At Egremont since the Church Army has commenced its work, more than forty persons have professed conversion.

The Ven. H. J. Matthew, Archdeacon of Lahore, will in all probability succeed Right Rev. Thomas Valpy French as bishop of that diocese.

Rev. Stewart Headlam has appealed to the Archbishop of Canterbury against the refusal of the Bishop of London to give him a general licence for the diocese.

There has lately been much blessing in connection with the Church Army services at Christ Church, East Greenwich. The meetings in the tent and open-air have been well attended, and many persons have professed conversion.

St. Giles' Fair, held at Oxford recently, was the occasion for a special evangelistic effort by the members of the Church Army connected with St. Aldate's. Open-air meetings were held throughout the day, and the earnest addresses were attentively listened to.

The English Episcopalians and the French Reformed Church are unitedly erecting a wooden châlet church at Champéry (Valais). It is to hold about two hundred persons, and will serve for the worship of the two denominations in the morning and evening of the Lord's day.

During the past year the missionaries of the Rochester Diocesan Society have paid more than one thousand visits to police-courts and cells, had interviews with eight thousand accused persons, and visited six thousand houses, besides dealing with two hundred and fifty special cases.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The congregation of the pretty little church in Midvale-road, Jersey, has increased so much under the ministry of Rev. Dr. M'Caw, late of Manchester, that an enlargement of the building has become necessary.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

J. B. Hodgkin and wife are paying very acceptable visits to Friends' mission stations in the West. Workers who feel their isolation are thus encouraged and helped.

J. H, Douglas, U.S.A., has been greatly blessed in his tent meetings all through the summer. Hundreds have been brought to decision, or helped to a higher level in the Christian Life. He has gone to Iowa yearly meeting with his tent.

Jonathan Grubb, of Sudbury, has been engaged in Birmingham, notwithstanding his advanced years, in holding meetings with the public, visiting hospitals and workhouses, and extending sympathy to the poor. He has long been occupied, as the way opened, in this Christ-like work, greatly to the comfort and help of the sorrowful and needy.

A successful mission has been held at Painswick, Gloucestershire, conducted by George Wood, Frederick Sessions, and F. de Carteret. Bible-readings in the afternoons and Gospel meetings in the evening were held, and the local ministers threw themselves heartily into the work; as might be expected, the united effort has been greatly blessed.

METHODIST.

"Children's Day," a prominent feature in the Methodist churches, falls this year on October 16. Year by year, says The Methodist Times, "it has been increasingly a season of blessing among our children and young people, and a day whereon much fruit has been gathered as the result of patient seed-sowing on many a previous Sabbath."

At Farnworth, on a recent Saturday evening, was provided a supper of potato pie and buttermilk for upwards of three hundred people, at the charge of a penny each. Many of them had often been convicted for drunkenness, and their remark was that the publicans had never treated them like that. At the close of a glorious meeting, many signed the pledge, and ten professed their desire to lead a new life.

The open-air services conducted for twenty-seven years past, during the summer, by Mr. John Skidmore, of the Middle Lock Chapel, West Bromwich, were recently closed for the season. Some ten or twelve thousand people were present at the final meeting, held a mile from the town. The address was full of illustration, expressing great truths, which evidently went home to the hearts of these Black Country people.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Colmer B. Symes, late of Kensington, has accepted a call to the Leytonstone Congregational church.

Rev. Arthur Mursell is to deliver a new lecture at the City Temple on October 17, its title being, "Breathing Books and Living Libraries."

Rev. H. Elwyn Thomas, of Arundel-square Church, has commenced a series of "Monthly Services for the People." The subject of his first address was, "Who, what, and where is Christ?"

The church at Dresden, Stafford (Rev. J. H. Howshall, pastor), is entering upon its winter's work in earnest. It has arranged to carry on cottage services in various parts of the neighbourhood, a young men's improvement class, a weekly system of tract distribution, band of hope, &c.

An eight days' mission at Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham, has been conducted by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes. Many professed to give their hearts to Christ, and not a few Christians were aroused. Congregations of 400 to 500 came together every evening; the workers spared no trouble to get outsiders into the chapel.

While Rev. Newman Hall was on his tour in Switzerland, the chaplain at Bel-Alp, a young man of twenty-six, and the representative of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, waited upon him one Saturday night and requested him not to attend the Holy Communion next morning, on the ground that he had not been confirmed!

BAPTIST.

Bristol Baptist College has sent out during the last five years twenty-four men, fifteen of whom have been settled at home, while eight have been accepted for service in the mission field.

At the third quarterly conference of the North-west Kent branch of the London Baptist Association, interesting accounts of mission work carried on at Orpington, Woolwich, Erith, Charlton, Greenwich, and other places were given.

Mr. Bilborough, whose recent death was referred to by Mr. Spurgeon on Monday last week, has been for many years very active in seeking to rescue fallen women, and has been the means of reclaiming one hundred and fifty of such characters. As far as can be known only two of this number have returned to their evil life.

SALVATION ARMY.

We are glad to learn that Miss Eva Booth is better, and that good hopes are now entertained of her recovery.

One of the cadets at Rome had recently a very narrow escape from an attempt at assassination. Fortunately, only a slight wound was inflicted.

In the twenty-five Corps of the Devon Division, 1473 persons have professed to find salvation during the year, of whom 343 have become soldiers, bringing up the total at present enrolled to 1743.

At Chipping Norton, since the Army commenced work five months ago, over three hundred persons have professed conversion, the majority of whom are now doing good service in the ranks.

Four hundred families are thoroughly visited every week in Seven Dials by the cellar, gutter, and garret lasses, besides lodging-house and other work. In three weeks, thirteen poor creatures, sunk in the deepest wretchedness, have been won for Christ.

A room containing "nothing but a narrow bed, a table, a chair, and a box," and so small that the chair must be put on the bed before the little party could kneel down, is the picture given in The War Cry of the Grecian slum-post. Good work is being done by its devoted officers.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The third jubilee of Moravian home mission work in Ireland is being observed in various places in this country.

As the result of a remarkable work of revival going on in the Methodist mission tent at Churchill, Rev. J. S. McDade, general missionary, has postponed an intended mission in the Irvinestown circuit.

The report of the Belfast branch of the Missions to Seamen has been issued. During the year the chaplains have boarded, by means of the new mission steam-ship which fully answers the purposes for which it was intended. 1022 vessels anchoring in the Lough.

Rev. Dr. Hall, of New York, who has been for some time on a visit to his friends in Ireland, has returned to America. Before setting sail he conducted a most impressive service in the Presbyterian church at Queenstown, at which several of his fellow passengers were present.

Strabane.—At the request of a number of earnest workers in this town, the Irish evangelisation Society sent a tent in which Messrs. Thompson and Nesbett have been holding services for the past few weeks. The meetings have been well attended and a good work done for God and eternity.

Evangelistic services were conducted each evening last week in the United Presbyterian Church, Belfast, by ministers of various denominations, among others Revs. H. M. Williamson, James Harpur, and James Cregan. There was an encouraging attendance, and good is believed to have been done.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Robert Stephenson Ellis, formerly chaplain to the British Legation at Copenhagen.—Rev. John Parkin, rector of Halton, "the father of the Church," as he was called at Hastings, having gone to that town fifty-three years ago.—Rev. Simon Fraser, of Fortrose, one of the oldest ministers in the Free Church.—Rev. Daniel Katterns, for thirty-four years co-pastor and pastor of the Church at Mare-street, Hackney.—Mr. J. R. Robertson, for many years an active elder in Regent-square.—Mr. William Nelson, senior partner in the well-known publishing firm of Thomas Nelson & Sons, and an eminent Christian philanthropist.—Rev. Canon Swainson, D.D., Master of Christ's College, Cambridge.—Miss Wear, of Liverpool, well known in that city and throughout the West Riding of Yorkshire as an earnest worker of the Methodist Church.—Bishop Harris, of the American Methodist Episcopal Church.—Dr. M'Millan, of Liverpool, for upwards of fifty years a devoted worker in the Methodist Church.—Mrs. Hugh Jones, of Bangor, for forty-four years an earnest member of the Methodist Church.—Mr. Ralph Green, a prominent member of High-street (Methodist) Circuit, Lincoln.

SIR ANDREW CLARK, BART., M.D., will on Friday evening, the 7th of October, give an address at the Young Men's Christian Association, Aldersgate-street, the occasion being the commencement of a series of "Friendly Talks to Young Men." Sir Andrew specially desires to address himself to young men who are troubled with sceptical doubts.

THE BETHEL CHRISTIAN WORKERS' ASSOCIATION, of Barbados, West Indies, is doing a grand spiritual work among the blacks of that island. It stands greatly in need of tracts. The people thirst for the Gospel. Parcels should be addressed, L. C. Abrams, secretary, Bethel Christian Workers' Association, Nelson-street, Bridgetown, Barbados, W.I.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

In The Alliance News the terrible "Fruits of the Traffic" are still recorded weekly, and are as painful to read as ever.

Lady Henry Somerset has been creating considerable sensation in Worcestershire with her Gospel temperance tent services and peripatetic preaching.

The World's Women's Temperance Union has issued an earnest address asking for the repeal of the Act allowing licences to grocers and confectioners.

"Tips for Tricyclists" advises its clients never to take stimulants when on a journey. If they do, they will become jaded and feverish, possibly for the entire day.

The Irish Temperance League Journal, discussing "the barrenness of the session," argues that only by "squeezing" Governments will any effective temperance reforms be won.

Manchester Diocesan Temperance Sunday is to be November 20, when, it is expected, many temperance sermons will be delivered in various churches in the diocese.

Complaint is made that on Sundays Welsh people on the English border cross to the English side and indulge in liquor to excess. If England had Sunday closing the nuisance would cease.

A recent plebiscite of the inhabitants of Inverness showed an overwhelming majority of votes, not only in favour of a reduction of licences, but of local option to suppress the traffic by popular vote.

Four hundred pledges were taken during a seven days' Gospel temperance mission in Manchester, conducted by the Canning-street branch of the Manchester, Salford, and District Temperance Union.

The City Press states that quite respectable-looking girls may now be seen entering public-houses in London, both with and without members of the male sex. What miserable wives and mothers such will make!

The memorial to the Government referred to in our "Temperance Notes" last week, emanated, not from the British Medical Association, but from the British Medical Temperance Association, the members of which are all total abstainers.

The old Victoria Theatre in the Waterloo-road, now known as the Royal Victoria Coffee Music Hall, was recently the scene of a temperance demonstration to inaugurate the new season. Dr. Dawson Burns, Mr. Robert Rae, and other prominent temperance men were amongst the speakers.

FOREIGN.

In Burmah whisky is becoming a fashionable drink.

An organisation has been formed at Kimberley, South Africa, to protect the natives at the gold mines from the evils of the drink traffic.

The proposal to change the basis of the Indian Army Temperance Societies from total abstinence to "dual" is practically abandoned.

In Iowa, under Prohibition, the contractors of prison-labour are said to be losing enormously, owing to the lack of convicts to complete the orders!

In Ireland and Canada industrial exhibitions are held in connection with temperance organisations. One such was held recently, with success, at Coburg, Canada.

The Berlin correspondent of The Daily Telegraph says the quantity of beer middle-class Germans consume on holiday occasions is something enormous, and by English people would scarcely be believed.

In an article in The Forum General Greely, of Arctic fame, testified that for all subject to severe and exhausting toil, or to exposure to extreme cold, alcohol is not only unnecessary but positively injurious.

Rev. James Johnson, of Lagos, West Africa, addressed to the Colonial Secretary a respectful but earnest protest against the drink trade with that colony. The Secretary replied that unless France and Germany cooperated, British action would be useless.

Appeals.

Plymouth Y.W.C.A.—Earnest appeal is made for funds for the purchase of the new Institute, furniture, &c., for this Association; £2000 is urgently needed on account of a considerable extension of the work. Subscriptions to Miss Lewis, 3, St. Andrew's-place, Plymouth.

Books for Missionaries.—An excellent work is being done in connection with the Missionary Leaves Association, in sending helpful books on the Christian life to C.M.S. missionaries. Many letters of grateful acknowledgment are received. Any help towards this effort will be welcomed by Mrs. Malaber, 20, Compton-terrace, Upper-street, Islington, N.

Rev. George Friedman, missionary of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews in Lithuania, makes earnest appeal for funds to support a colporteur, to go amongst the millions of Jews in that country, who do not even know of the Gospel. He speaks of much work done in his immediate locality, of much willingness to listen to the Scriptures, but says it is impossible, without the aid of a colporteur, to reach distant parts of the land. Mr. Adler, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews (Conference Hall, Mildmay, N.), was recently in the field with Mr. Friedman, and would answer any inquiries.

FULHAM GOSPEL MISSION.—In our recent notice of this Mission it was stated by mistake that the superintendent was Mr. Roper; that office is held by Mr. W. A. Chant, of 4, Cranmore-terrace, Bishop's-road, Fulham, S.W.

GAZE'S ORIENTAL TOURS—Annual Autumn Tour leaves London October 31, for Alexandria, Cairo, Pyramids, Suez Canal; and CAMPING TOUR THROUGH PALESTINE, returning via Asia Minor, Turkey, Greece, &c.—H. GAZE & SON (Originators and First Conductors of Oriental Tours), 142, Strand, London.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

ADVANCED CONSUMPTION.—AN "INCURABLE CASE."—REPORTED BY REV. D. POWELL, B.M., RHAYADER.

It is nearly two years ago since Mr. Powell first wrote me on behalf of Mrs. Like, of Painscastle, Radnorshire.

Two of the patient's sisters had died of Consumption. She herself had been always weakly. Some time since a slight cough was observed, which became constant and violent, with difficult expectoration, mingled with blood, and was accompanied with pains in the side and back, flushings, disordered secretions, heart affected, extreme weakness, loss of flesh all over. An eminent physician of Builth had pronounced her lungs to be badly diseased, and the case hopeless.

In less than a month, Mr. Powell reported her to be receiving benefit—a little improvement in all the symptoms.

The patient gradually recovered health and strength.

Writing me May 20, 1887, Mr. Powell says: "I am happy to inform you she is quite restored, and I have been taking every opportunity to recommend your treatment."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Hyde Park Hall Mission.—Closing meeting in Hyde-park, Sunday, September 25. Metropolitan Music-hall.—Opening night, Sunday, October 2, 6.30 p.m.

THE BRIGHTON DELUSION, we are glad to hear, has been exploded, for the present at least. The meetings are suspended, and the hall in Edward-street is closed. The recent successful summonses for assault brought against the doorkeepers appear to have been the instrument in putting a stop to this travesty of everything sacred.

Subscriptions Received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Monday, September 19, 1837.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

RESCUE THE PERISHING.—A midnight meeting was held last week by Mr. R. T. Bodker, of 30, Holland-road, Brixton, in St. John's schoolroom, Church-street, Waterloo-road, S. E. About forty-five were present. Three went to Homes, and others promised to go next day.

GOSPEL WORK AT LOWESTOFT.—The annual meeting of the Sailors' and Fishermen's Mission, under the charge of Mr. Wm. Johnson, was held recently in the Bethel. Many striking testimonies were borne to the blessings here received. The work has been diligently and faithfully continued for thirty-seven years, Mr. Johnson having guided its operations during the whole time. Gospel meetings, which are often blessed seasons of prayer and praise, are held every night all the year round. Open-air meetings, led by Mr. H. Cook and his Gospel band of workers, mostly fishermen, who speak out of the fulness of their heart of the love of Christ to them, are maintained three or four times a week, and numbers have joined the various churches as a result of this effort. At the annual meeting Rev. L. Price, rector of Pakefield, with several Nonconformist ministers, expressed their deep sense of the value of this agency.

It will stand between the Homerton Roman Catholic Church at one end of the Brookfield-road, and the St. Augustine's Ritualistic Church at the other end. Nearly five hundred pounds is already subscribed. The total cost of the entire premises will be £1000. Donations should be sent immediately. "The King's business requires haste."—Rev. JOHN FLETCHER PORTER, 69, Driffield-road, North Bow, London, E.

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS, E.C.—Our Mission having for some time past been suffering through the death of some of our warmest supporters, as also through the depression of trade, felt alike by many organisations, we find it needful to make a special effort for increased funds on behalf of our work in the East Central District, by holding a Sale of Useful and Fancy Articles at the end of October (D.V.). The kind contribution of articles by Christian friends towards that object, or other help, is earnestly requested in the interest of God's ancient people.—Parcels to be sent to Mrs. WARSCHAWSKI, 11, Torriano-avenue, Camden-road, London, N.W.

CONTRIBUTIONS OF CLOTHING for distribution among the poorer patients and their families are earnestly solicited by the Committee of the Ladies' Samaritan Society, National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen-square, Bloomsbury.—Parcels should be addressed to Miss S. WHITMORE, Clerk to the Ladies' Committee, at the Hospital. Donations in money will also be thankfully received.

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE, 58, St. George's-road, S.W.—The Committee will receive a Lady as Student, who can pay 50 guineas towards her two years' training (including board, residence, and instruction), the remainder being contributed by friends.—Address The HON. SEC.

A FEW BIBLE CHRISTIANS united to build a Chapel at Gloweth, near Truro (no other being accessible), but a debt of £110 was incurred, which they feel should not attach to any House of God. The Chairman at their last annual meeting kindly promised ten per cent. on any sum collected by them this year; but they, being mostly agricultural labouring men, with very limited means, have failed, through local resources, and fear to lose the benefit of this kind offer. Will some of the Lord's stewards extend a helping hand? — Donations would be gratefully received by

C. F. JARVIS, Chevelah House, Truro.

SUNDAY SCHOOL EXTENSION on the Continent.—Special fund devoted to this work now exhausted. Seventeen missionaries employed, but Committee without means to pay salaries falling due, and other grants already pledged. Appeals therefore, to all friends of religious education for immediate and generous assistance. Contributions gratefully received by Mr. J. E. TRESSIDER, Financial Secretary, Sunday School Union, 56, Old Bailey, E.C.

HOME FOR BLIND CHILDREN, College-avenue, Hackney.—A Jubilee Extension Fund has been started to obtain a larger house, which is absolutely necessary for the health of the children.—Contributions gratefully received by Miss RYE, or Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT.

BUNYAN BICENTENARY.—Powis Hall, Talbot-road, Bayswater. A Lecture, entitled, "John Bunyan and his Book," will be given (D.V.) on Monday, September 26, 1887, at 7.30 p.m., by Mr. FRANK H. WHITE. Illustrated by many beautiful and costly Dissolving Views, all hand-painted, specially prepared for this Lecture. Admission 6d. Proceeds to Building Fund.

THE BETHSHAN, Leeds.—Meetings for Holiness and Divine Healing, Sundays and Tuesdays, 2.30 p.m.; Thursdays, 7.30 p.m. Christians wishing for teaching on Divine Healing, can be received into the house.—Miss GIBBS, 10, St. John's-terrace, Belle Vue-road, Leeds.

MRS. PARSONS' ORPHAN HOME, WALTHAMSTOW.

THE ANNUAL SALE in aid of this work will (D.V.) be held at the Home on TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, October 4th and 5th, commencing each day at 3 o'clock.

Funds are urgently needed, and Gifts of all sorts for Sale are earnestly solicited, Provisions, Groceries, Garden Produce, and Articles of Household Use, as well as Plain and Fancy Work, Children's Clothing, Ornaments, &c.

Address—MRS. PARSONS, Eastfield House, Hoe Street, Walthamstow, Essex.

EVANGELICAL MISSION TO ISRAEL (Jerusalem).—We thank the friends for their prayers and support during the summer. We are thankful to say that the sympathy was not in vain; the Lord hath blessed the work. Now we need again to ask the friends on behalf of the winter work; the Lord who hath answered prayers in the past, will also answer in the future.—The following will receive help: Mr. R. MORGAN, 138, Clifden-road, Clapton, London; Mrs. T. WALKER, The Hall, Glenn Magna, Leicester; H. TASKER, Esq., Brookside, Andover; at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN; or to Mr. D. C. JOSEPH, Mission House, Jerusalem. Cheques to be crossed, Messrs. Beagham & Sons. Letters to Jerusalem with valuables to be registered. Pray for the peace of Jerusalem.

DIVINE HEALING and Power for Service.—Meetings conducted by the Rev. JOHN ALLEN or his workers. Bishopsgate (32, Spital-square), Tuesdays, 7.30 p.m. Camberwell Gate (The Hall, Horsley-street). Tuesdays, 7 p.m. Hackney (Trinity Church, Triangle, Mare-street), Sundays, 3 p.m.; Mondays, 7 p.m.; on Fridays, Baptism of the Spirit, 7 p.m.

Postal address, Balclutha Lodge, Southgate, N.

Educational.

SEASIDE EDUCATION.—An Officer can highly recommend a Christian Home School at Southsea for a few Girls of good position. Pupils have successfully passed R.A.M. and R.C.P. Examinations. Terms very moderate. Terms 40 guineas to fill a vacancy.—INSPECTOR-GENERAL GORDON, R.N., View Bank, Brechin, Forfarshire, N.B.

HOME SCHOOL for Girls. Limited number of Boarders. Good education, based on Bible teaching, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness." Pupils prepared for the various Exams. Kindergarten for Juniors. Terms inclusive. Recommended by R. C. Morgan and parents of pupils.—Mrs. SILVESTER, Clarence House, Pellatt-grove, Wood Green.

SUPERIOR EDUCATION for young Ladies.—Principal, Mrs. WATKINS, F.S.Sc., Dyreham College, North Finchley.—Pupils prepared for public examinations. Fees, including music, French, and drawing, 14 and 16 guineas per term, prepaid.

"I have the greatest pleasure in recommending Mrs. Watkins' School to parents seeking a good Christian home and a high-class education for their daughters. The School is situated in a fine healthy neighbourhood."—Josiah Spiers, Children's Special Service Mission.

MORAVIAN LADIES' SCHOOL, St. Peter's, Bedford.—Accommodation for a limited number of Boarders and Day Pupils. Pupils prepared for Cambridge Local Examinations. For terms and all particulars, apply to Miss SEIFFERTH, Principal.

BELLE VUE, AMBLESIDE.—Good School for Girls. Principal, Mrs. FLEMING. Healthy and beautiful situation; large rooms, garden, tennis. Careful Christian training, and thorough teaching. Cambridge Examinations. Resident foreign and English governesses. Masters. 50 to 60 guineas. Reduced terms for children under 12.

HIGH-CLASS CHRISTIAN SCHOOL for the Daughters of Gentlemen. — Miss PENN receives a limited number of pupils. Efficient resident governesses and visiting masters. Individual Christian influence. Home comforts. Large house and garden. Entire charge taken of pupils from abroad. Languages and music specialities. Young Ladies are also received to pursue certain studies only, or to take lessons in dressmaking, cooking, &c.

St. John's de Ocklynge, Eastbourne.

ILFRACOMBE, 2, Oxford-park.—Home School for Girls. Principal, Mrs. RICHARD WARE. Careful Christian training and thorough teaching. Motherly care taken of delicate children. Good references.

THE "GOLDEN TREASURY" BIRTHDAY BOOK.
VERY SUITABLE FOR A BIRTHDAY PRESENT.

BOGATZKY'S GOLDEN TREASURY has been translated into nearly all European languages, and has obtained an enormous circulation in Germany and Great Britain. In this country very few books, except the "Pilgrim's Progress," have been so largely circulated or so widely read. In addition to the issue of BOGATZKY in the ordinary form, the Publishers have also produced an Edition

ARRANGED AS A BIRTHDAY BOOK,

a form in which it is believed the volume will be welcomed by many. In this "Birthday" Edition, four additional pages are introduced at the close of each month's portions. These extra pages are arranged with thirty or thirty-one blank squares or spaces—one for every day of the month. Each of these squares is adapted for receiving four entries, consequently, the total number of names which can be inscribed in the special pages of the "Birthday" Edition amounts to OVER FIFTEEN HUNDRED.

SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS NOT SINLESS PERFECTION.
By Rev. CHARLES GRAHAM,
Author of "Christ our Light," "The Highway of Holiness," etc., etc.

COMMENDATORY NOTICES.

"We are glad to see that Mr. Graham does not come forward as an advocate of what is called 'sinless perfection'; and his arguments in favour of striving towards the attainment of a higher life than any of us live are sound and Scriptural." The Rock.

"His treatment is simple and Scriptural, and not the least satisfactory point in his argument is his refutation of the idea of 'sinless perfection' from the writings of that very apostle who is supposed by some people to teach it."—The Baptist.

"The book is full of the marrow of the Gospel, and will do anyone good who reads it." Irish Baptist Magazine.

"Mr. Graham clearly teaches the truth of complete and certain victory, always within the reach of all believers. He teaches also how this victory is to be sustained day by day, and how also it may be lost. Our readers will do well, with open Bible, to read this little eighteenpenny book."—Penuel

REV. S. MACFARLANE, LL.D., F.R.G.S.

Pioneer Missionary in Lifu and New Guinea.

ON June 29, 1871, a group of men were to be seen standing on the deck of a small vessel and gazing intently at the peaks of some distant mountains, whilst a thick mist shrouded the lone land of New Guinea from their view. The most prominent figure of that band, a stalwart man of commanding mien, whose quick eyes betokened a mind always alert, is the subject of our present sketch.

SAMUEL MACFARLANE was born at Johnstone, N.B., in 1837, and was a member of the Oldham-road Chapel, Manchester, when accepted by the London Missionary Society in 1854. He studied at Bedford, and, being appointed as pioneer missionary to the Island of Lifu, he was ordained in November, 1858. Before leaving England, Mr. Macfarlane married Miss E. U. Joyce, of Bedford, who has been a most valuable helpmeet in all his arduous service.

Mission work had already been begun on Lifu by coloured teachers, the forerunner being a godly native of Rarotonga, named Pao, who seems to have been specially raised by God for the work of a pioneer teacher. Other teachers from Samoa and Rarotonga followed, and did as much as such agents can accomplish, without European aid.

A few months before the arrival of Dr. Macfarlane, two Roman Catholic priests came to Lifu at the invitation of a dissatisfied heathen chief named Ukenezo. He called together all the chiefs and people upon his half of the island and urged them to accept the Catholic faith. The Protestants declared that they had a religion the power of which they had seen. They determined to stand by the teachers and wait for missionaries, and, if need be, "xome aköte" (endure suffering) on account of their faith. These poor people were subsequently assailed by all kinds of bribery, stratagems, threats, and annoyances.

Mr. Macfarlane's arrival was a time of great rejoicing. He resolved to settle at Chepenehe. There he set to work with his customary energy to superintend the converts, and also to erect a substantial mission-house. He made a tour round the island, visited the fifty-five villages, and inquired thoroughly into the affairs of the mission and the condition of the people. The majority were little more than nominally Christian; some were still cannibals; morally, socially, and spiritually they were very low when compared with our ideas of Christians, although high indeed if we try to look down into the pit whence they had been drawn. The Christian life of the best of them was such as we are accustomed to see in children, with many heathen habits and superstitions added. The time, however, soon arrived when a church should be formed and a higher standard introduced. There were plenty of candidates, some 2000 natives being anxious to join the "ekalesia" (church), but Mr. Maclarlane felt that few were really suitable. Eight churches were formed, of about thirty members each, and, notwithstanding the many trials and persecutions, they rapidly increased. The first annual arrival of the John Williams found the mission prosperous, with a school-book and a hymn-book, the work of the missionary, and printed at the mission press on the adjacent island, already in the hands of the people.

Dr. Macfarlane felt that the future strength and usefulness of the mission depended upon the development of the powers of its converts, and resolved, in 1863, to establish a seminary for the training of native pastors for the churches on the Loyalty Islands, and pioneer teachers, for the heathen islands around. Numerous applicants were recommended by the teachers of whom twenty were selected. They were not only trained in the knowledge requisite for their calling, but various trades were taught. Heathen people think much more of men who can build good houses, make canoes, boxes, and furniture, than they do of those who only talk of things of which they cannot in their dark state perceive the value. In 1866, Dr. Macfarlane completed the translation of the New Testament into the Lifu language.

The priests having written a letter in the name of Ukenezo to the Governor of New Caledonia, requesting the location of soldiers at Lifu, a man-of-war arrived early in May, 1864, and landed a number of troops commanded by a young officer, who was styled commandant of the Loyalty Isles, although the formality of annexation had not been gone through. Then began a series of brutalities, such as had not been equalled by any European nation for many years. The missionaries were silenced, and confined to their houses; teachers were seized; Protestant chiefs, and prominent Christians, deacons and others, were imprisoned, starved, and horribly ill-treated by a degraded soldiery, because they would not become Roman Catholics.

Mr. Macfarlane was not the man to submit to a continuance of such ill-treatment without protest. While instructing the natives not to resist their oppressors, he went to New Caledonia and saw the Governor. Failing to obtain redress, he appealed through the the British Government to the late Emperor of the French, who ordered a Commission of Inquiry, with the result that the Commandant, and afterwards also the Governor, were superseded, and a certain amount of liberty accorded. The French Government, however, asked that Mr. Macfarlane might be stationed elsewhere.

The Directors of the London Missionary Society had long been desirous of founding a mission on New Guinea, and here was an energetic and eminently qualified missionary ordained by events, ready for the arduous work. After an adventurous pioneering voyage and a careful survey of the new field, extending over five months, Mr. Macfarlane returned to England, and prepared to prosecute the work boldly. By a generous gift of £2000 from Miss Baxter, of Dundee, the London Missionary Society was enabled to purchase and fit out a small steamer, called the Ellengowan. This little vessel steamed from London to New Guinea in 1874, and was employed in placing and removing teachers, surveying and exploring. Finding the coast unhealthy, both in the West, on the Peninsula, and at South and East Capes, Dr. Macfarlane determined to ascend the rivers, and see if high land could be found. In this, however, he failed.

He concluded that a healthy island was the only possible resort for founding a central station and sanatorium. Murray Island appeared the most suitable. Dr. Macfarlane determined to train natives, and accordingly opened a Seminary and Industrial School on Murray Island. The education given is similar to that given in the South Sea Colleges, and there are workshops for various trades, such as carpenters and blacksmiths. Besides building houses, they have repaired the mission vessels and built the Mary, a fine little vessel of twenty tons, under the superintendence of Mr. Bruce, their instructor. Thirty young men have been sent out as teachers to their countrymen, and sixty are now there undergoing a four years' course.

The New Guinea Mission differs from all other such modern efforts in one thing: the success has come early. They have not had to wait for twenty or thirty weary years, as in so many cases; but promptly and with no uncertain sound about it, the Word has entered in and given light and life. Most delightful has it been to Dr. Macfarlane to witness in three or four years after the placing of teachers, with much anxiety and many prayers, a change so thorough and rapid in the ways of the people.

Not only in Lifu and New Guinea has Dr. Macfarlane helped the missionary cause, but throughout Australia, New Zealand, and the United Kingdom his cheery voice and soul-stirring words have created a deep interest in the great dark island. A high appreciation of his courageous and laborious service has also been expressed in many ways, both publicly and in private. The Senatus Academicus of St. Andrews University have conferred upon him the degree of LL.D., while the Royal Geographical Society have elected him a Fellow. We regret being unable to give an account of his explorations, and the great service he rendered to Captain Everill's expedition up the Fly River.

We trust that the new work which he has undertaken, as a special agent in raising funds in the Midland and Eastern Counties of England for the London Missionary Society, will be equally successful. At the same time our hearts send up the prayer that from the lava slopes of Murray Island may go forth to New Guinea a continual stream of men filled with that Divine fire which will overrun the great land with its wonder-working power, and bring newness of life wherever it flows.

BRETON EVANGELICAL MISSION.

The efforts to make known the Gospel amongst the Breton people are meeting with much encouragement. Large numbers come to Guernsey and Jersey during the summer months, and this year Pasteur Lecoat, with his wife, has been labouring amongst them. These people are mostly Catholics, and from communes where the agents for the Mission have not yet penetrated; but in Jersey they are free to listen, which they would not be in their own homes, and this they were very willing to do. Many asked for further instruction; in response, members of the various Protestant churches in Jersey formed themselves into a committee, and a month's mission was undertaken. Much earnest work was done, with evident result, and the hearty thanks of the poor labourers gave hope that the good seed sown will yet bear fruit.

There are many well-grounded converts amongst the Bretons, who might be sent out to evangelise, and thus largely extend the work. A number of friends have visited the mission station at Tremel this summer, and one lady has undertaken to erect a building for a girls' day school. Another visitor has given a substantial amount to start a permanent work amongst the Breton labourers at Havre.

The Bible carriage is an immense success, though the local magnates and priests, who really govern in Brittany, are bitterly opposed to this means of circulating the Scriptures. But for the action of the Bishop, there would, no doubt, be more open acts of violence, such as were formerly perpetrated.

Mr. Joseph Wates, 4, Princess-road, Lewisham-hill, S.E., is secretary to the Mission.

WORLDLINESS AND ITS REMEDY—1.

By Rev. CLEMENT CLEMANCE, D.D.

AN ADDRESS TO THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE, ABERDEEN.

The topic on which I have been announced to speak has been chosen by the Alliance, but it will give me greater freedom of utterance, perhaps, if I am permitted at the outset to say that, for the method of treatment and for the sentiments uttered therein, I alone am responsible.

I have to speak upon :—

"The Study of the Word of God, the Remedy for Present-day Worldliness and Erroneous Teaching."

By "erroneous teaching" we here intend such as is seriously erroneous; that which is subversive of, or detrimental to, Christian faith and life; not, of course, those minor differences which the Alliance assumes to exist among the varied Christian churches here represented; but such errors as are born, in fact, of worldliness and carnality. There are such: for we find that while the Apostle John sets forth worldliness in one form, the Apostle Paul sets forth carnality in another. When the former says, "Love not the world"; by "the world," he defines his meaning to be that which indulges in "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life." When we read the Apostle Paul's first Epistle to the Corinthians, we are not a little astonished to find that, in his third chapter he actually charges members of the Corinthian Church with being carnal, and walking according to man; that is, with assimilating their conduct to that of unsanctified, unregenerate men! This is the more remarkable, inasmuch as the forms of carnality specified by him are totally different from the forms of worldliness specified by St. John. There are among the Corinthians "envying, and strife, and divisions"; everyone of you saith, "I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ." Thus we see that while the Apostle John warns against earth-born worldliness, the Apostle Paul condemns church-born carnality.

So that if we witness a considerable amount of both kinds of worldliness in our day, it is no otherwise than was the case in apostolic times. Its forms may vary, but the essence thereof is the same. The like spirit may assume legion forms. Supposing we were asked, What do you look upon as the features of present-day worldliness in the professing Church and among professing Christians? in replying, we should find it helpful to arrange the phenomena which may be witnessed under the two divisions to which we have referred: even the carnality of the Church, and the earthliness of the world.

CHURCH CARNALITY.

There are forms of thought and life in Christendom, connected with the name, profession, and ritual of religion, which savour of carnality, and of walking according to man. Briefly to specify some of them is all that our space and time will permit, selecting those against which the very existence of this Alliance is a needed and constant protest:—

(1) It is a piece of carnality, when, assuming large and pompous titles, men would dominate over the body of Christian people, ignoring the fact that as Christians they are kings and priests unto God, and claiming a dominion over their faith, which, were they true successors of the Apostles, they would entirely disavow.

(2) It is a piece of carnality when the rue unity of all believers in Christ is gnored, and when Church unity is supposed to consist in the observance of like forms, the assumption of the same names, or subjection to the same towering hierarchy.

(3) It is a piece of carnality when the enforced connection of a Christian church with a secular State is regarded as putting on that church the seal of legitimacy. We are as far as possible from indicating any opinion as to whether a church should or should not be connected with the State; all that we maintain now is that such State-connection can never create a true church, nor can the absence of it put on a church any brand of inferiority whatsoever.

(4) It is a piece of carnality when the validity of a church claim is supposed to depend in any way on the succession of an official priesthood in a historic line of consecration. To the Ritualist's doctrine, per se, we fully subscribe—viz., that the presence of the Holy Ghost alone can seal a church's validity; but the mischief creeps in when man would limit the presence, the power, and the seal of the Holy Ghost to one specific line, after the commandments and doctrines of men.

(5) It is a piece of carnality when men attribute any spiritual virtue to the water of baptism, or to the bread and wine in the Lord's Supper. Both these pieces of superstition are "earth-born clouds," and are both condemned in the third and sixth chapters of St. John's Gospel.

(6) It is a piece of carnality when the members of any one Christian fellowship arrogate to themselves the exclusive right to the title of "Church," and put on other Christian people a mark of depreciation, by calling them members of a "sect."

(7) It is a piece of carnality when men regard the observance of any forms, however appropriate in themselves, as making or constituting a true Christian. He is not a Christian who is one outwardly, but he is a Christian who is one inwardly; and baptism is not merely that of water but that by the Holy Ghost—in the Spirit and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God.

(8) It is a piece of carnality when men love to fasten their gaze rather on the points on which Christian people differ, than on those far higher ones on which they agree. When such differences are exaggerated, and made barriers against interchange of service, and manifestations of brother love, oh! it is a Christ-grieving piece of carnality. The tendency of some to split up into parties over small differences of opinion is surely most foreign from the mind of Christ.

When we think of all these signs of a carnal spirit in varied departments of Christendom, it is with trembling, yea, almost with terror that we read, "judgment must begin at the house of God!"

EARTHLY WORLDLINESS.

Over and above the carnality of the Church there is also a very considerable element of earthly worldliness in many individuals who bear the Christian name.

This is, in some sort, a less serious evil than the others, because, although it may indicate a character of a lower type, yet it is one which attaches to individuals, and which we have no reason to think marks individuals in one church rather than in any other. Are not such features as these too commonly witnessed in our day?

In the thorny region of politics how much more do some make of party than of principle, so that the conception of the true politician as one who contends simply and solely for equity in the nation, comes in many cases to be almost ignored?

In the commercial world we too often find that men make haste to be rich; even now there are some who devour widows' houses, and yet make long prayers! In social circles a man is sought out and flattered according to his wealth, rather than according to his worth! In private life a torpor is often to be observed, and a grievous indifference, to the advance of our Lord's kingdom. Many will spend thousands of pounds on a single picture who care not to give as many pence towards the subjugation of the world to God. Numbers who bear the Christian name are steeped in luxury, corrupted by conventional maxims and customs, live as if they would rival the veriest worldlings in display, caring far more to stand well in society than to uphold the great and mighty cause of God. To them the sacred day of rest is far from being as sacred a day as it was to their fathers; and, with all this looseness in religious matters, there is a manifest deterioration of character. They seem to aim neither at the government of motive, temper, nor tongue, and, notwithstanding their Christian profession, they read their Bible so little that they know less of what is in it than of what is said about it and against it; hence their "helmet of salvation" is knocked almost out of shape by the enemy's blows; they cease to be able to formulate their faith and to fit it to what they think is "modern" thought, so that they make one fear that unless the mischief be checked, they will ere long drift away from the very name and faith of the Christian, and from all association with the Christian Church!

THE REMEDY.

Now, the question will, must, come up—ought to come up. What is the remedy for these forms of worldliness? In reply, we at once make our appeal to the Book which all the churches accept as the Word of God, and we would cry aloud, STUDY THAT! Nor do we at all care to conceal our very strong conviction that the lack of such study is at once the effect of much worldliness and the cause of a great deal more.

We are not unaware of the risk we are incurring, at such a time as this, of the charge of defective reading being laid at our door, on account of the title of our paper. For no one can doubt that by the expression, the Word of God, we mean the Word of God as contained in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, i.e., in the Bible; and that we indicate thereby its unity. It may be asked, Is it not too late in the day to speak of the Bible as if it were a unity, seeing that it is a library, a literature, made up of some sixty or seventy books, diverse in age, in style, in value, and in the character of their contents? Is it not too late to speak of it as a unity, when just now it is by accomplished Hebraists being separated into its several documents, those documents again into their several parts, and those parts assigned to their several periods?

THE BIBLE A UNITY.

Our reply is calmly and deliberately, but most emphatically, No! For whatever may turn out to be the ultimate conclusion as to the human channels through which, or the methods by which, each separate document has come to our hands as it is this day, nothing can shake the solid fact that there is, beneath the surface, a record of a progressive, historic redemption, which is seen to be moving forward through the pre-Christian ages, in preparation for the first coming of Him who is the light of the world; of the carrying on of that redemption by means of the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow; and also of the actual application of that redemption to man, through the power of the Spirit, in the converting of the sinner and the training of the saint, showing us that the Second Divine Paraclete is thus leading on redemption to its culminating point and its perfect seal, the dwelling of God in man and the rest of man in God. This unity of the books cannot be destroyed, nor even disturbed, by any criticism whatsoever!

But there is in the Bible even something more than this wondrous unity, even a living and breathing Spirit; and, in fact, without the Spirit of Christ first breathing into the writers, such a unity as we have described could not possibly have been brought about.

(To be concluded.)

BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.

The twelfth annual report of this Mission gives a graphic account of the work. There is, first, the description of the dedication of a new chapel in Doodhiani. Large numbers, it is said, are convinced of the truths of the Gospel, but are afraid to confess Christ openly. The work of education is a difficult one, yet last year there were thirty-six boys and young men and twenty-two girls in the training schools. There were also twelve village schools, whose great need is better teachers. Mr. A. Haegert, who, with his wife, is at present in England, sends to us the following particulars:—

"The work of this Mission is carried on by fourteen native preachers and eleven schoolmasters. Since May ten persons have been baptized, and there is hope of more to follow; 240 men and women have been baptized since 1883. During the last twelve months eleven new chapels have been completed. They have been built under great difficulty, one, when half erected, having been destroyed by the devan (landlord's manager). There are also nine dispensaries covering about 1000 square miles, and last year sufferers from 115 villages sought medical relief. Some lives were saved, and much misery removed."

Miss Hollyer will leave this country for India at the beginning of October to resume her mission work among the Santhals. Two other ladies going out as missionaries will accompany her as far as Madras. Miss Hollyer intends to carry on her tent-work amongst the heathen villages, so as to reach those who have not heard the Gospel before. Miss Adam will, it is hoped, accompany her on this tenting mission, which will last till the end of February.

Further information can be obtained of Miss M. C. Gurney, Granville-lodge, Granville-road, Eastbourne.

THEATRICAL TEA MEETING.—On Wednesday, last week, an interesting meeting was held in the schoolroom of the Bible Christian Chapel, Waterloo-road, when, in response to an invitation by Mr. William Forbes, a number of ladies of the ballet, and others employed at theatres, met for tea. The guests seemed to thoroughly enjoy themselves. After tea several hymns were sung, and Mr. Forbes then delivered a short and homely address on the "Brazen Serpent." A gentleman present offered some remarks on the fact that Christ becoming a surety for us, made his life and death efficacious on our behalf, by our looking to Him—in other words, believing in Him. Miss Forbes sang some solos during the evening. There was evident interest felt in the proceedings, as shown by the earnest attention to the speakers. A number of flowers sent from the Flower Mission, each bunch having attached to it a text, were distributed to the guests as they left the room.

ELIJAH THE PROPHET.—20.

FILLED WITH THE HOLY GHOST.

Luke i. 15, 17.

What may not one man do in one brief life, if he is willing to be simply a living conduit-pipe through which the power of God may descend to men? There is simply no limit to the possible usefulness of such a life. There, on the one hand, is the oceanic fulness of God; here, on the other, are the awful need and desolation of man, guilty, weak, bankrupt, diseased; all that is required is a channel of communication between the two; and when that channel is made and opened, and kept free from the silting sand, there will ensue one great, plenteous, and equable flow of power carrying the fulness of God to the weary emptiness of man. Why shouldest thou not be such a channel, my reader?

There is a splendid illustration of this in the life of Elijah, of which we are now taking our farewell. For more than a hundred years the tide had been running strongly against the truth of God. Idolatry had passed from the worship of Jeroboam's calves to that of Baal and Astarte, with the licentious orgies and hideous rites which gathered around the ancient worship of the forces of Nature. The system was maintained by an immense organisation of wily priests, who had settled down upon the national life like a fungus growth, striking its roots into the heart. The court was in its favour. The throne was occupied by an effeminate man, the weak tool of his unscrupulous and beautiful wife—the Lady Macbeth of Jewish history. Jehovah's altars were thrown down; his prophets silenced and in hiding; his faithful worshippers a mere handful, whose existence was so secret as to be known only to Him. The lamp of truth had been overturned, and there was only a tiny spark of light feebly burning, to show where once the light of true religion brightly shone.

Into such a state of things Elijah came, unarmed, from his native trans-Jordanic hills; a highlander, unkempt, unpolished; unaccustomed to the manners of a court, or the learning of the schools. Withal a man weak where we are weak, tempted where we are tempted, of like passions with ourselves. And at once the tide began to turn. The progress of idolatry received a decisive check. The existence and power of Jehovah were vindicated. New courage was infused into the timid remnant of true-hearted disciples. Altars were rebuilt; colleges were opened for the training of the godly youth; a successor was appointed; and an impetus given to the cause of truth, which was felt for many generations.

Perhaps the greatest tribute to Elijah's power with his contemporaries is in the fact that his name and work stood out in bold and clear outline for nine hundred years after his death; surpassing the whole school of Jewish prophets, as the Jungfrau rears her snow-clad peaks above the giants of her chain; and furnishing a model with which to set forth the power and courage of the forerunner of our Lord. The Holy Spirit, speaking in Malachi, the last of the prophets, could find no better symbol of the pioneer of the Christ than to compare him with the famous prophet who, centuries before, had swept to heaven in the chariot of flame: "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the great and terrible day of the Lord come." The bright angel, Gabriel, standing four hundred years after amid the ascending incense of the holy place, found no easier method of conveying to the aged priest the type of the wondrous son that was to gladden his old age, than to liken him to Elijah. "He shall go before his face in the spirit and power of Elijah." Whenever a notable religious movement was stirring through the land, the people were accustomed to think that the prophet of Carmel had again returned to earth; and thus the deputation asked John the Baptist, saying, "Art thou Elijah?" and when a mightier than John had set all men musing in their hearts, as the disciples told our Lord, many of the common people believed that the long expectation of centuries was realised, and that Elijah was risen again. It was commonly believed that no other of woman-born was great enough to precede the Messiah; and that he would anticipate his advent by an interval of three days, during which he should proclaim, in a voice heard over all the earth, peace, happiness, and salvation. Other religions, the Mohammedans and Zoroastrians, have also held his name in veneration and esteem, and Christian buildings have risen to his memory.

All these things are evidences of the towering greatness of Elijah's character and work. He was the Knox, the Luther, the Charles Martel, of his time. With all the failures and mistakes to which such natures are prone, he was a great man, and did a noble work. And the secret of all was to be found, not in any intrinsic qualities, but in the fact that he was filled with the Holy Ghost. Let us pause here, and ask ourselves if we can give our thoughtful assent to this statement. If we cannot, we must count much of our time and labour in these chapters wasted, for our one aim has been to establish this point. But if we can, then, as we close these chapters of stirring, sacred biography, we may resolve that we will never rest until we, too, are filled with the Holy Ghost. We will not rest satisfied in being imitators merely, but we will seek to be filled with the same Spirit, that He may work again through us the marvels of the past.

If I may venture so to put it, God is in extremity for men who, thoughtless for themselves, will desire only to be receivers and channels of his power. He will take young men and women, old men and children, servants and handmaidens, in the waning days of this era, and will fill them with the selfsame Spirit whose power was once reserved for a favoured few. Besides all this, the positive command has never been repealed which bids us be "filled with the Spirit" (Eph. v. 18). And we cannot reiterate too often that those who feel themselves bound to strict temperance in respect to wine by the former clause, should feel the latter one to be equally imperative. Moreover, what God commands, He is prepared to do all that is needful on his side to effect. Then when, like John the Baptist, we are filled with the Holy Ghost, like John the Baptist, we shall go "before his face in the spirit and power of Elijah, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to walk in the wisdom of the just; to make ready for the Lord, a people prepared for Him."

I.—This filling of the Holy Ghost was the characteristic of the Primitive Church.—On the day of Pentecost they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, women as well as men; obscure disciples as well as illustrious apostles; and, to guard against the leakage which is, alas! too common to us all, they were filled and filled again; those who are described as filled in Acts ii. 4 are spoken of as filled again in Acts iv. 31. New converts, like Saul of Tarsus, were bidden to expect this blessed filling. Deacons called to do the secular business of the Church must be men filled with the Holy Ghost. That he was a good man, full of the Holy Ghost, was a greater recommendation of Barnabas than that he had parted with his lands. And even churches, like those in the highlands of Galatia, were no sooner brought into existence by the labours of the Apostle Paul than they were filled with the Holy Ghost. In point of fact, the Christians of the first age were taught to expect this blessed filling. And the early Church was a collection of Holy-Ghost-filled people. Probably it was the exception, rather than the rule, not to be filled with the blessed presence of God the Holy Ghost.

There is no formal conclusion to the Acts of the Apostles, because God meant the story to be prolonged, through the ages, after the same manner. Let us not think that God resembles some who put a portico of marble to a building which they finish with common brick. He did not give at Pentecost an experience which He either would not or could not maintain. Pentecost was simply meant to be the specimen and type of all the days of all the years of the present age. And if our times seem to have fallen far below this blessed level, it is not because of any failure on God's part, but because the Church has neglected this holy doctrine. Christians have seemed to suppose that the filling of the Holy Ghost was the prerogative of a few; the majority of them have never thought of it as within their reach; and the Church has been simply paralysed for want of the only power that can avail her in her conflict against the world; a power which was distinctly pledged to her by her ascending Lord. We never can regain or hold our true position until all believers see that the filling of the Holy Ghost is equally for them as for the first Christians, and that the barriers are broken down which once limited it to a few. We do not seek the sound of rushing wind, or the coronet of flame, or the special gifts which were conferred for a special purpose. These are the minor accessories of this filling, with which we can dispense. But what we cannot dispense with, and must not dream of missing, is the distinct filling of the Holy Ghost. No doubt He is in us if we are Christians, but we must never be content until He is in us in power. Not a breath, but a mighty wind. Not a rill, but a torrent. Not an influence, but a mighty, energising Person.

II. We must comply with certain conditions, if we would be filled.—(1) We must desire to be filled for the glory of God.—A lady told me lately that she had been seeking the power of the Spirit for long, in vain. She could not understand the cause of her failure, till she came to see that she was seeking Him for the joy that He would bring, rather than for the glory that would accrue to God. Not for our happiness or comfort; nor yet for the good that we may be the better able to effect; but that "Christ may be magnified in our bodies, whether by life or death."

(2) We must bring cleansed vessels.—God will not deposit his most precious gift in unclean receptacles. And we need cleansing in the precious blood, ere we can presume to expect that God will give us what we seek. We cannot expect to be free from indwelling sin, but we may at least be washed in the blood of Christ from all conscious filthiness and stain.

(3) We must be prepared to let the Holy Spirit do as He will with and through us.—There must be no reserve, no holding back, no contrariety of purpose. The whole nature must be unbarred, and every part yielded. There is a law in physics that forces work in the direction of least resistance. Let us place no resistance whatever to the working of the Holy Ghost. He who resists least will possess most.

(4) We must appropriate Him by faith.—There is no need for us to wait ten days, because the Holy Spirit has been given to the Church. This is included in the spiritual blessings with which our Father hath blessed us in Christ Jesus. We need not struggle, and agonise, and convulse ourselves in the vehemence of entreaty. We have simply to take what God has allotted to us, and is waiting to impart. Open your mouth wide, and He will fill it. Dig the ditches, and, though you can discern no evidences of the entering floods, they shall be filled. Ask as a little child asks for its breakfast, already on the table. So soon as you ask, you do receive, though you experience no rush of transcendent joy; go your way reckoning yourself filled, whether you feel so or not; and as the days go on you will find that you have been filled, and are being filled with new power, and joy, and wealth. You will not long be left to the reckoning of faith, for you will be made aware of a virtue going out from you, which shall heal and save.

III. Time would fail to enumerate all the blessings that will ensue.—It is a well-known fact that the germs of disease are always latent around us; but they are powerless in the presence of buoyant health. They can only work their fell designs on the weakly and unhealthy. The Phylloxera thrives only on degenerate vines plant the hills with a hardier species, and the progress of the disease will be instantly arrested. And the same explanation will indicate how the blight visits the potatoe fields, and the grouse disease decimates the sportsman's bags. There is a true analogy here. When luxurious living and false teaching invade a church, you may be sure that there is an unhealthiness there which has made the nidus for the evil. And if you would get rid of it, there is no expedient so good as to bring about soul-health through the mighty indwelling of God the Holy Ghost. And when He comes into the heart, He brings with Him all manner of lovely things, which before were rare exotics, but which become the naturalised products of the Spirit.

There is victory over sin.—The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus makes us free from the law of sin and death, just as the law of the elasticity of the air makes the bird free from the predominating power of the down-pull of gravitation.

There is the indwelling of the Lord Jesus.—Christ dwells in the heart by the Holy Ghost; so that sometimes the first and only symptom of the blessed filling we have received consists in the growing fragrance of his name.

There is the quickening of the mortal body.—An expression which certainly points to the Resurrection, but which may mean some special strength and health imparted to our present mortal bodies; the tabernacles and temples of his indwelling.

There are all the fruits of the Spirit, which come with linked hands, so that it is impossible to admit one of the golden sisterhood, without her introducing all the radiant band. Love brings joy, and joy peace, and peace longsuffering, and similarly through the whole series; so that the heart becomes at length tenanted, as was the grave of Christ, with angels.

There is also power for service.—No longer timid and frightened, the Apostles give their witness with great power. The Gospel comes in power and demonstration through consecrated lips and lives. The very devils are exorcised, and great crowds are brought to the feet of Christ.

This and much more is awaiting the moment in thy life, my reader, when thou shalt definitely avail thyself of thy privilege and become filled with the Holy Ghost. Then, as time rolls on, thou shalt work great deliverances among men, careless of praise or blame. Perhaps thou shalt know what it is to pass upward to meet Christ in the air. But certainly thou shalt stand beside Him in the regeneration when He shall appear in glory. And then in all the radiant throng there shall be nought to divert thy gaze from "Jesus only," or thy thought from the decease (the exodus) which He accomplished at Jerusalem.

And amid the myriads of stars that shall shine for ever in the firmament of heaven, not one shall sparkle with more brilliant or more steady glory than Elijah; a man of like passions with ourselves, who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, out of weakness was made strong, waxed valiant in fight, swept to heaven unhurt by death, and stood beside Christ on the Transfiguration Mount. Prophet of Fire, till then, Farewell!

THE BIBLE IN RUSSIA.

Writing from Moscow to acknowledge a contribution of £20 from Mrs. Robertson of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures, Dr. Baedeker says:—

I had in anticipation of your Association's liberality already expended about £6 for the poor Esthonians. It is really sad to find that the Lutheran Church and pastors have left these dear people in such gross ignorance of the things of God. They have preached sermons to them, but they have not instructed them to search the Scriptures; and even the educated Germans of the Lutheran Church are lamentably ignorant of the truth as revealed in the Word of God. The consequence is that the Esthonians and Letts are easily persuaded to leave the Lutheran and to join the Greek Church whenever any pecuniary advantage is presented to them. Of the more enlightened Germans, many are infidels, although they still belong nominally to the Lutheran Church. The nobility, which consists only of Germans, look upon their poor Esthonian and Lettish brethren as belonging to an altogether different race.

But to the poor the Gospel is preached, and it is a real joy to meet with them and to give them even a morsel of the bread of life. What is greatly needed amongst Lutherans is Bible-readings, Bible in hand; and for such, a band of men and women who know their Bibles would be a real blessing. The land is so enormously large before me that I cannot stay long enough in one place, but I do not lose sight of this great need, and I trust some friends may take up the matter. The Lutheran pastors are so overburdened with mere official duties that they cannot, even if they were capable and willing, find time for Bible-readings for the people. They do not, as a rule, encourage them to use their Bibles, but give them prayer-books and hymn-books instead. The great lack of Scriptural knowledge is certainly one of the causes why there is so little conscious faith, and so much wavering to and fro.

With all this it is sad that the Lutheran pastors, as a rule, are more intolerant than any others against those who want to preach Christ and Him crucified. I shall be thankful if this matter is laid on the hearts of English Christians for much prayer. During say twenty years' experience as an evangelist, the Lutheran clergy have been my only opponents in Germany, as well as in Russia, and also in America. Here in Russia the Lutheran Church claims possession of whole provinces of nominally Lutheran colonists. Whilst they have not the men nor the means to provide preachers, they strongly oppose any free evangelist on the ground that the land is theirs. I know of large provinces in South Russia chiefly inhabited by Germans where a pastor is only able to visit the different colonies once or twice a year, and on these occasions all official duties are performed, the Lord's Supper given, the money (one rubel a household) received, and he departs again. During the pastor's absence a sermon is read every Sunday by the schoolmaster, who in many cases is by no means a spiritually-minded man. There is something radically wrong in a system which will not tolerate the Gospel to be preached by any but the appointed pastor, who alone claims the right to preach, to administer the Lord's Supper, and the baptism of infants. There are many good-living pastors in the Lutheran Church who sigh and groan under the burdens and restrictions, yet they cannot free themselves, or go beyond the prescribed limits.

I am now on the way to the Volga, where there are many large German settlements. I go to Nischney Novgorod, thence by steamer to Kasan and Samara, and thence to Orenburg, to visit my exiled friends who were sent there from Tiflis because of their religious propaganda. I hold permission from the civil authorities which enables me, under the form of popular lectures, to make known the Gospel of the grace of God, in spite of the opposition by the pastors. I know you will lay this matter before the Lord, that I may have meekness to endure, and yet hardness as a good soldier of the risen Christ.

AMONG THE HOP-PICKERS.

It has again been our joy, in company with Mr. T. S. Heley and other friends, to visit the hop-yards of Hereford and Worcester. As on former occasions, we worked our way from Wing, Leighton Buzzard, to the scene of picking, visiting with pony and carriage the villages in our route and some out of our route.

By the kindness of local friends we were enabled to do the work with less fatigue than on any other tour. Among such friends we would specially mention Mr. Edwards, of Frome Hill, who has been working for God in a lonely corner of the vineyard for twenty five years, and Mr. Turner, of Eardiston, a Christian farmer, who threw his house open to receive us in the name of the Lord. Other friends showed us no small kindness.

By the pickers themselves we were well received, many of them proving their good-will by the offer of the cider they seemed to enjoy so much themselves. As far as we could judge we reached about 7000 persons in the hop-grounds; they were of various classes and ages. Some we sought to rebuke, others we tried to comfort. Three deaths were met with, reminding us that the enemy was in the field, and that we were dealing with dying men and women.

We had many happy meetings in the hop-yards while the people were at work, as well as individual talking at the separate bins. Some were so ignorant that they could not read; others were so eager to exhibit their attainments that they read the tracts out to their companions. The influence of our visits were manifested in the behaviour of the toilers. In many cases we found hymns were started as we passed round, while almost all bad language was, for the time at least, silenced. As we drew near one group, a wasp was flying round the man's head. Putting up his hand in a rage he shouted, "Get away, you——" Seeing us approaching, he did not finish the sentence, but gave us the chance of telling of One who is always listening.

When leaving the district we passed several of our Sunday congregation, who sent their benedictions after us. On the way home we held open-air meetings in the towns through which we passed. In the courts of Worcester we had three short meetings, without a word of interruption. Will readers pray the Lord to bless this effort?

LOVE—THE SUPREME GIFT.

AN ADDRESS AT THE NORTHFIELD CONFERENCE.

BY PROFESSOR HENRY DRUMMOND.*

EVERY one of you has asked himself the great question of antiquity as of the modern world: What is the summum bonum—the supreme good? You have life before you. That is the burning question for you to face: What is the supreme object of desire—the supreme gift to covet? We have been accustomed to be told that the greatest thing in the religious world was faith. That has been the key-note for centuries of the evangelical religion; and we have learned to look upon that as the greatest thing in the world. Well, we are wrong. If we have been told that, we have been told wrong. I have taken you in the chapter which I have read to-night (1 Corinthians xiii.) to Christianity at its source; and there we have read, "The greatest of these is love." It is not an oversight. Paul was speaking of faith just a moment before. He says, "If I have all faith, so that I can remove mountains, and have not love, I am nothing." It is not an oversight; and it is not prejudice. A man is apt to recommend to others his own strong point. Love was not Paul's strong point. There is a beautiful tenderness which the observing student can detect as Paul gets old—growing and ripening all through his character; but the hand that wrote, "The greatest of these is love," when we meet it first, is stained with blood. Nor is Paul singular in singling out love as the summum bonum. The three masters of Christianity are agreed about it. Peter says, "Above all things have fervent love among yourselves." And John goes farther, "God is love."

And you remember what Christ Himself said about it—"Love is the fulfilling of the law." Did you ever think what He meant by that? In those days men were working their passage to heaven by keeping the Ten Commandments, and the hundred and ten other commandments which they had manufactured out of them. Christ came and said, "I will show you a more excellent way. If you do one thing, you will do these hundred and ten things, without ever thinking about it—unconsciously. If you love, you will fulfil the whole law." And you can readily see for yourselves how that comes to be. Take any of the commandments. "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me." If a man love God, you will not have to tell him that Love is the fulfilling of the law. "Take not his name in vain." He would never dream of taking his name in vain if he loved Him. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." He would be too glad to have a day to meditate upon the object of his affection. Love would fulfil all these laws. And so, if he loved man, you would never require to tell him to honour his father and mother. He would do that without thinking about it. It would be preposterous to tell him not to kill. He would never dream of it. It would be absurd to tell him not to steal. He would never steal from those he loved. He would rather they possessed the goods than that he should possess them. It would be absurd to tell him not to bear false witness against his neighbour. If he loved him it would be the last thing he would do. And you would never have to tell him not to covet what his neighbour had. He would be rejoicing in his neighbour's possessions. So, you see, "love is the fulfilling of the law."

Now, Paul had learned that; and in this argument which has been read this evening we have a most wonderful account of the summum bonum. We may divide it into three parts. In the beginning of this little chapter we have love contrasted; in the middle of it we have love analysed; towards the end of it we have love defended as the supreme gift.

LOVE CONTRASTED.

Paul begins by contrasting love with other things that men in those days thought much of. I shall not attempt to go over those things in detail. They are very obvious. He contrasts it with eloquence. How many men covet eloquence!—and what a noble thing it is—the gift of playing upon the minds and souls and wills of men—of moulding them! Paul says: "If I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not love, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." He contrasts it with prophecy. He contrasts it with mysteries. He contrasts it with faith. He contrasts it with charity. Love is greater than faith, because the end is greater than the means. And love is greater than charity, because the whole is greater than a part. Love, I say, is greater than faith, because the end is greater than the means. What is the use of having faith? Is it to connect the soul with God? It is to become like God. For "God is love." That is to say faith is in order to love. The end is greater than the means. Love, therefore, obviously is greater than faith. It is greater than charity, because the whole is greater than a part. Charity is only a little bit of love, but there is a great deal of charity without love. It is a very easy thing to toss a twenty-five cent piece to a beggar. It is a very easy thing to do that when the love is in withholding. We purchase relief from the sympathetic feelings which are aroused by the spectacle of misery, at the cost of a quarter of a dollar. It is too cheap—too cheap for us, and it is often too dear for the beggar. We must either do more for him or less. Then Paul contrasts it with sacrifice and martyrdom; and I beg the little band—shall I not say the large band?—of missionaries (and I have the honour to call some by this name for the first time)—shall I not say to you missionaries, Remember that though you give your bodies to be burned, and have not love, it profits nothing—nothing! You can take nothing greater to the heathen than the impress and reflection of love of God upon your own character—nothing. That is the universal language. It will take you years to speak in Chinese, or in the dialects of India: from the day you land, that language of love—understood by all, and eloquent to everyone—will be going forth from you, consciously or unconsciously; and it is the man who is the missionary, it is not his words. In the heart of Africa, among the lakes, I have come across black men and women who remembered the only white man they ever saw before—David Livingstone; and as you cross his footsteps in that dark Continent, you see men's faces light up as they speak of the kind Doctor who passed there years ago. They could not understand him; but they felt the love that beat in that great heart. They knew that it was love—that that life was laying itself down for Africa—although he spoke no word. Take into your sphere of labour where you are laying down your life, that simple charm, and your life must succeed. You can take nothing greater. You may take every accomplishment; but if you give your body to be burned, and have not love, it will profit you and the cause of Christ nothing.

LOVE ANALYSED.

After contrasting love with these things, Paul in three verses, very short, gives us an amazing analysis of what this supreme thing is. I ask you to look at it. It is a compound thing, he tells us. It is like light. And as you have seen a natural philosopher take a beam of light and pass it through his crystal prism, and as you have seen it come out on the other side of the prism broken up into six component colours—red, and blue, and yellow, and violet, and orange, and all the colours of the rainbow—so Paul passes this thing, love, through the magnificent prism of inspired intellect, and it comes out on the other side broken up into its elements, and in these words we have the spectrum of love—the analysis of love. Will you observe what these things are? Will you notice that they have common names; that they are virtues which we hear about every day, they are things which can be practised by every man in every circumstance of life; and how by a multitude of small things and ordinary virtues the supreme thing, the summum bonum, is made up? The spectrum of love has nine elements—nine colours—nine ingredients: Patience—"love suffereth long." Kindness—"and is kind." Generosity—"love envieth not." Humility—"love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up." Courtesy—love "doth not behave itself unseemly." Unselfishness—love "seeketh not her own." Good temper—love "is not easily provoked." Guilelessness—"thinketh no evil." Sincerity—"rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth." Patience; kindness; generosity; humility; courtesy; unselfishness; good temper; guilelessness; sincerity—these make up the supreme gift—the stature of the perfect man. We make a great deal of peace with God. God says much about peace on earth and good-will toward men. And you will observe that all these things, all these virtues and graces, are in relation to men—in relation to life—in relation to the known to-day and the near to-morrow, and not to the unknown eternity.

There is no time to do more than make a passing note upon each of these ingredients. Love is Patience. Love passive. The normal attitude of love—love waiting to begin; not in a hurry; not petulant; not hasty; calm; composed—waiting to begin when the summons comes, but meantime wearing the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit.

Kindness. Love active. Have you ever noticed how much of Christ's life was spent in doing kind things—in merely doing kind things? Run over it with that in view, and you will find that He spent a great proportion of his time simply in making people happy—in doing good turns to people. There is only one thing greater than happiness in this world, and that is holiness; and that is not in our keeping—God reserves that for Himself; but what He has put in our power is the happiness of our fellow-creatures, and that is to be secured by our being kind. After we have been kind—after love, after long waiting, has gone out into action and done its beautiful work—we must then exercise the third of these graces; go back into the shade again, and say nothing about it. "Love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up." "Love vaunteth not."

Generosity. That is love in competition with others. Whenever you have done a good turn—done a good work—you will find other men doing the same kind of work. Envy them not. Envy is a feeling of ill-will to that man who is in the same line as ourselves—a feeling of ill-will—and we hate ourselves for cherishing it. That will spring up the moment you get to your field—be it in this land or in any other land—unless you have learned generosity: to envy not. And then, after having learned that, you have to learn the further thing; to go into the shade—to hide, and not let your right hand know what your left hand has done.

Humility. Love hiding. "Vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up." And the fifth ingredient is a somewhat strange one to find in this summum bonum: Courtesy—love in relation to etiquette. "Love doth not behave itself unseemly." Politeness has been defined as love in trifles. Courtesy has been defined as love in little things. And the secret of politeness is to love. Love cannot behave itself unseemly. You can take the most untutored persons and put them in society, and if they have love as a reservoir in their heart, they will not behave themselves unseemly. They simply cannot do it. Carlyle said of Robert Burns that there was no truer gentleman in Europe than the ploughman-poet. It was because he lived to love everything—the mouse, and the daisy, and all the things, great and small, that God made; and so he could go into any society—into courts and palaces—from his little cottage on the banks of the Ayr. We heard the other day from one of the speakers on this platform about the meaning of the word "gentleman." It means a gentle man—a man who does things gently, with love. "Love doth not behave itself unseemly."

Unselfishness. "Love seeketh not her own." Observe: Seeketh not even that which is her own. In Britain the Englishman is devoted to his rights. He likes to stand up for his rights—his rights as a man and his rights as an Englishman. And I fancy you have the same kind of patriotism. You stand up for your rights; and every man as an individual or as a citizen feels a sense of property over what he calls his rights. It is the privilege of that man to give up even his rights, if necessary, for the sake of another. "Seeketh not her own." It is easy to give up things that we are not quite certain are our own; but the things that are obviously yours—that are legally yours—that you have earned perhaps by years of labour and sacrifice of trouble or money—to give up those things which are your own, that is the hard thing. And yet the most obvious lesson of the Gospel is that there is no happiness in having and getting, but only in giving. I say, there is no happiness in having or in getting, but only in giving; and half the world is on the wrong scent in the pursuit of happiness. They think it consists in having and getting, and in being served by others. It consists in giving and in serving others. And he that would be great among you, let him serve. He that would be happy, let him remember that it is more blessed—more happy—to give than to receive.

The next ingredient is also a remarkable one: Good temper. "Love is not easily provoked." Now, we are inclined to look upon bad temper as a very harmless infirmity, We speak of it as being a mere infirmity of nature—not a thing to take into very serious account in estimating a man's character—a kind of accident—a matter of temperament, and so on. And yet here, right in the middle of this analysis of love, Paul plants that thing; and the Bible again and again comes to that little infirmity, as we call it, and makes a great deal of it. It is not a little infirmity to smile at. The peculiarity of ill-temper is that it is the vice of the virtuous. It is the one blot on an otherwise noble character. You know men who are all but perfect, and who would be almost entirely perfect, but you say they are hasty—they are touchy—they are ill-tempered. Now, there is nothing that a Christian has to take more trouble to eradicate for ever from his being than ill-temper. It requires the struggle of years—perhaps of a lifetime; but it has to be done. It has to be done. It is not to be looked upon as an accident of temperament; but it is a sin—one of the blackest of all the sins. It is the symptom of an unloving nature at bottom. A want of patience—a want of kindness—a want of generosity—a want of humility—a want of courtesy—a want of unselfishness—are all symbolised in one flash of evil temper. It is the revelation of what is inside a man, and therefore the man who has that must have his whole nature sweetened. It is not enough to deal with the temper. You must go to the root and sweeten the whole nature, and then temper will die away of itself. But how can a man who has not had a victory over that part of his nature have a part in God's people in this world or in the next world? How is it possible? Why, a man with a temper such as I have described would make heaven miserable for all the people who are in it; and except such a man be born again he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. Christ says, "If you offend me of these little ones, it were better for you that a millstone were hanging about your neck, and that you were cast into the depths of the sea." That is to say, it is the deliberate verdict of the Lord Jesus that it is better not to live than not to love.

I shall spend no time over the last of these two virtues. Guilelessness. Courtesy is love in society. Unselfishness is love undying. Good temper is love restraining. Guilelessness is love believing. And, Sincerity is love learning. Guilelessness is the grace for suspicious people. "Thinketh no evil." The way to win a man is to believe in him. That is the greatest secret of the Christian worker. The way to elevate a man is to believe in him and trust him. Love "thinketh no evil" imputes no motive—puts the best construction on every action. What a delightful frame of mind to live in! And then love is sincere—wears no masks. "Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth;" rejoiceth not in our doctrine—in this church's doctrine or in that church's doctrine, in this ism or that ism—but rejoiceth in the truth.

ENGLISHWOMEN IN BRUSSELS.

Dear Sir,—I have been on the Continent, and have found something that I think will interest your readers, especially those who are concerned about the difficulties and dangers of our young country-women on the Continent—an institution started by two English ladies, Mrs. Jenkins and Miss Young, at the end of last year, at 26, Rue de Vienne, Brussels. It is intended to do for Englishwomen in that city what Miss Leigh's Home is doing for them in Paris. The only qualifications for its hospitality are to be an Englishwoman, and engaged in some calling for a livelihood. Recently I spent two months at Brussels, on an errand that was held to promote me to the aristocracy of labour under the second rubric, and, therefore, qualified me to share the hospitality of this Home. I cannot bear too high testimony to the kindly and considerate care taken of its guests, nor to the loving sympathy shown in their individual cares and interests, which goes so far towards making a place home-like.

The Home has only been established since last November, so that it has not so many thrilling stories to tell as older institutions have; yet it has already its share. I saw one young girl welcomed, who had, unannounced, fled there for refuge from a position of danger into which her own wilfulness had led her. Another, equally without notice, was received to be nursed, because her health was breaking down in a situation where no consideration was shown to her. There is a large room specially set apart as the Invalids' Room, and was only recently vacated by two cases of illness which had been carefully nursed back to health. The Sunday afternoon tea is a bright spot in the week in many dull young lives, and some maturer ones too, an occasion when troubles can be lightened by pouring them into sympathetic ears, and week-day hardships evaporated in a hearty laugh over their narration.

Besides this reception, there is a sort of Sunday-school, a gathering of the children of English working parents residing in Brussels. The little ones are amused for a time, to win their confidence, and make them enjoy coming, then they are gathered into classes for Bible teaching; after that they have tea, then they sing hymns, and, finally, those who are old enough are taken to evening service at the little English church.

Perhaps during the darkening autumn days, when leisure time can less freely be spent out of doors, some English children would like to make gifts for a Christmas tree for these little compatriots in a foreign land. There is the poor girl who lost her little sister from diphtheria, and moped and pined after her for months, till she got a little bit cheered by the weekly meeting with other children. And there is the naughty little girl who pretended she had hurt herself and could not walk, until it was found that nothing was the matter, and then owned that she had done it, "pour rire," which I will leave French scholars to translate. And there are the two little people who are locked into their room alone day after day, while their parents are away at work; and, though, from what I hear, I am afraid they quarrel sometimes, yet now they often enliven their dulness by singing some of the pretty hymns they learn on Sunday afternoons. And many others besides. Perhaps somebody could spare some old children's hymn books.

This institution is gradually winning favour among its fellow-citizens, English and Belgian. A Belgian gentleman sent it a present of furniture while I was there, which was much valued, as the house is not yet fully furnished, for the terms for board and lodging do not cover current expenses, and the enterprise is only making a struggling commencement of existence as yet. But it is much needed, and is likely to do a good work. I am sure, when English Christians know of its existence, they will not be behindhand in showing it sympathy and help. These two ladies are bravely establishing (on an unsectarian basis) an advance post of the great national work of caring for our young women abroad. They are ready in any way in their power to befriend unprotected Englishwomen; to receive them into their house; to nurse them if sick; to visit them at home, in situations, or in hospital; to make search and inquiry for those who are missing or who are causing anxiety to their friends.

BIBLE STUDY.

GOD'S WORD IN RELATION TO MAN.

(1) Convincing.—"The word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart" (Heb. iv. 12).

(2) Converting.—"Of his own will begat He us with the word of truth...Receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls" (James i. 18, 21). "Being born again... by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever" (1 Pet. i. 23).

(3) Quickening.—(Keeping alive as well as making alive.) "Thy word hath quickened me" (Ps. cxix. 50). "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matt. iv. 4). "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life" (John vi. 63).

(4) Healing.—"He sent his word and healed them" (Ps. cvii. 20). "Speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed" (Matt. viii. 8). "Sorrow not, even as others which have no hope...Comfort one another with these words" (1 Thess. iv. 13, 18).

(5) Enlightening.—"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path" (Ps. cxix. 105). "The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple" (Ps. cxix. 130). "I understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts" (Ps. cxix. 100). "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom" (Col. iii. 16).

(6) Strengthening.—"Where the word of a king is, there is power" (Eccles viii. 4). "This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein; for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success. Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of a good courage" (Josh. i. 8, 9). "We have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing: nevertheless, at thy word I will let down the net" (Luke v. 5).

(7) Cleansing.—"Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to thy word...Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee" (Ps. cxix. 9, 11). "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you" (John xv. 3). "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth" (John xvii. 17). "Christ...loved the Church, and gave Himself for it; that He might cleanse it with the washing of water by the word" (Eph. v. 25, 26).

(8) Testing.—"The word of the Lord tried him" (Ps. cv. 19). "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them" (Isa. viii. 20). "Jesus answered and said, It is written, &c." (Matt. iv. 4, 7, 10). "Whosoever ...shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. v. 19).

(9) Resting.—"The word of my lord the king shall now be for rest" (marg.) (2 Sam. xiv. 17). "The people rested themselves upon the words" (2 Chron. xxxii. 8). "Be content with such things as ye have: for He hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee" (Heb. xiii. 5).

For the Young.

THE LITTLE BIT OF BLUE.

You have made a solemn promise
That the sparkling cup of wine
Ne'er shall wet your lips, and, vowing,
You have prayed for help divine,
That through trials and temptations,
God may ever keep you true:
Now, to show the side you've chosen,
Wear the little bit of blue.

Oft the soldier,* spent with fighting,
Lets despondency have sway,
And, alone midst hostile forces,
Almost longs to quit the fray;
But the well-remembered colours
Nerve his hand to strike anew,
So, to help despairing comrades,
Wear the little bit of blue.

For your own sake, for your brother's,
For the Saviour's, who has died;
For the fallen, sinning drunkard,
Bear your standard far and wide:
Never blush to own your colours,
Still your onward course pursue;
For the tempter shuns the wearer
Of the little bit of blue.

If with speech you are not ready,
Though you long the truth to spread,
Everywhere your silent preacher
Has a word to say instead;
For the youngest knows the story
It is telling by its hue;
Then, to help the great cause forward,
Wear the little bit of blue.

AMONG THE CHINESE.

Miss Webb, a missionary in Yang-Chow, formerly a worker at the Home of Industry, writes in a recent letter:—

Last Saturday we had our children's treat, which all had been looking forward to for over a fortnight...In all we were about thirty-six, and a real happy day each and every one had...We had plenty of singing; all the favourite hymns the girls had learned at Gan-King—"Jesus is coming again," "Redeemed,"&c....It was very pretty outside the city wall; up the river, so green and fresh, there were some gardens with beautiful flowers. We were bound for a place which has a temple (most of the Chinese temples are in lovely spots), but, while still some distance off, were told the water was shallow and the boat could not go farther. So after a meal, the most of us set off for a walk, Mr. Wang as leader. All the little ones came. Didn't the children enjoy the liberty of racing around in this quiet spot?

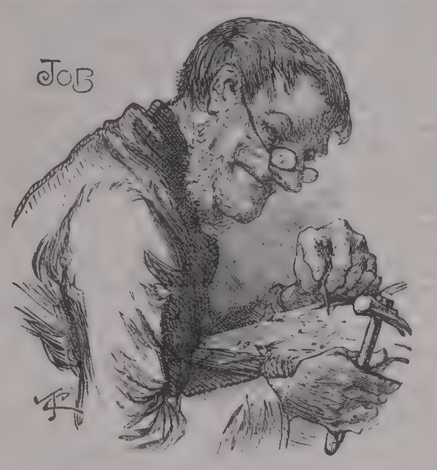
This temple has a great number of "gods;" someone said 3000. Oh! such horrid-looking great things; the girls said they were afraid of them. Praise God, these dear girls know, and many of them love the true God.

Some woman entered our house, and when telling her of Christ and his death on the cross for her, she asked who nailed Him to the cross; another asked if it was for his sins. Do pray that the women who hear the Gospel may have God's Spirit given them to aid their understanding; they know nothing about spiritual things. We had joy last week here; two of our girls have decided for Christ. We ask your prayers that they may grow strong Christians, so that when they leave us, it may be to spread the Gospel they themselves have received. There are still those in our school not yet upon the Lord's side.

Outside of this house there are several huts made of straw mats; although the people living in them are very poor, yet from each hut a number of crackers have been sent off, in hopes of driving the spirits away and such like. How sad it is to see men and women believing such things can help them; how long ere they shall all hear of Christ. God grant it may soon be, and that many of his children at home, who could come out to this land, may be willing to do so and help in this great work. In this city Yang-Chow, there are only seven of us; two are engaged here in the school. There are some native Christians, but "what are they among so many." Jesus sees, and surely grieves over all these large cities and many villages where He is not made known, as He did over Jerusalem when upon earth.

"THE GATE OF HEAVEN."*

It was arranged that Martin Magnus should meet his class in the cottage of Job Patient. The aged couple looked forward to this as a great privilege. It was wonderful how Job had mended broken articles of furniture, pounded fresh sand on the floor, and helped his "old woman," as he called her, to tidy things in readiness for the meeting. The diamond-panes in the window were as bright as they could be. The clock face shone with an extra polish. The crockery over the carved oak dresser glittered in the firelight. The round table was so spotlessly clean, that the grain of the wood made a study for the painter. The well-worn Bible, with brown calf binding and green baize cover, was laid upon the table; and the hymn-book, with yellow edges and large type, was placed beside it. All that could be done to spread a look of comfort in the meeting-place was done as a labour of love.



Mary Patient still busied herself with so many last touches, that Job said, "Now, mother, we've got th' house ready, let us keep a bit o' time to ask God to give us ready hearts. Happen a little tidyin' up within may help to a good meetin' as much as a clean kitchen and a bright fire."

The old couple knelt side by side on the hearthstone. In simple words and expressive faith they told Jesus how freely they opened, not only their cottage, but their hearts also, and trusted He would fill them with his presence. . . .

As Martin Magnus knelt by the arm-chair in Job Patient's cottage, the old clock struck out one, two, three, four, five, six, seven—hitting the last blow with a will which made old Job lift up his head and smile, as much as to say, "Well done, old clock, I never heard thee strike seven on 'em better! Thou'rt ringin' the chimes for a good meetin', and we shall hev one."

Mr. Magnus gave out the hymn:—

O for that tenderness of heart
Which bows before Thee, Lord,
Acknowledges how just Thou art,
And trembles at thy word.

He then called upon Job Patient to lead the meeting in prayer. Simply, like a little child, but with a reverence which told how his spirit was speaking face to face with Deity, the old man responded to his leader's call:—

"O Lord, we hev gladly made ready our cottage for Thee. If it wur a palace it would be honoured by thy presence. We canna invite Thee to a mansion. We canna offer Thee gold and silver, but such as we hev give we Thee. We welcome Thee to our home, an' we welcome Thee to our hearts. The pulse travels a bit slower than it used to do. The sperrit gives notice to quit the old body; but, blessed be thy name, the heart is as waarm to Thee as ever. If our weak voice trembles in its singin', an' our dim eyes make us fumble o'er thy precious Word, Thou knows we don't love it any less. We would sing like seraphs if we could, an' be quick o' sight an' foot to do thy biddin'. The old tabernacle's well nigh worn out. It's in the stage o' labour an' sorrow, but the soul is young as a little child. When Thou gives it a new house to live in, it shall praise Thee wi' all its powers. Bless our leader. Give him something to say as shall do us good. Make all our hearts tender. Help all on us to bow before the Lord. Take away any threads of the old veil that still hang between Thyself an' us. Let us see how holy Thou art, how wise an' good, how slow to anger, how ready to forgive, how Almighty an' All-sufficient. 'Blessed is the man whose strength is in Thee.' 'Blessed is the man that trusteth in Thee.' Thou says he's blessed, an' the Psalmist says he's blessed, an' I says he's blessed. O Lord, I know an' feel it! Lead everyone on us afresh into this blessedness, for Christ's sake!"

The influence of prayer rested upon the little assembly as the dew of heaven. A presence filled the place, which constrained the leader to read the testimony of Jacob: "This is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven."

"Thank God!" ejaculated Job. "If we hev gotten to th' gate, He'll let us in."

ITALIAN Y.M.C.A. AT GENEVA.—Last year a number of young Italians and Swiss-Italians formed themselves into a Christian Association, adopting the name of "Circolo Diodati," in honour of the great Geneva-Italian theologian, John Diodati, translator of the Italian Bible. This Y.M.C.A. is composed of students, clerks, and workmen, all hard-working people, against whom, as foreigners and mostly poor, there are sometimes strong prejudices. The Association numbers 45 members, of which about forty are converted Roman Catholics, with a committee of three Divinity students. During the past year it has done well, and excellent results have been obtained, as far as the literary, moral, and religious improvement of the members and of the large Italian-speaking population of Geneva is concerned. One great hindrance in the work is the want of a hall of their own. With a sum of £60 to £80 a year they would be able to rent a suitable place where they could have a reading-room, keep and increase their library, hold their social and public meetings, have the evening classes for the young and the working people, and an Italian Sunday-school (which numbers between seventy and eighty poor children, mostly of Roman Catholic parents). The president is Pastor T. D. Malan, B.D., 35, Champel, Geneva.

AMERICAN NOTES.

FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

"Camp-meeting John Allen" has fallen asleep in Jesus. He lived to a ripe old age. Eight years more would have made him a centenarian. He died in the midst of his beloved work, ministering at his three hundred and seventy-fourth camp meeting. From the time of his conversion, which occurred in camp, until his death, he rejoiced in this free and informal effort to plead with the unsaved. Rev. John Allen was a man of ordinary gifts, of which he made extraordinary use. His life was sweet and simple, his preaching vigorous yet tender, while his wit was of a quaint inoffensive order. The kindly old man was for years an attraction on the camp ground, enjoying the fellowship of God's people with great zest, and ministering enjoyment to others through his genial and cheerful sanctified nature.

The revival of interest in foreign missions is unabated. Within a year two thousand two hundred young men and young women have volunteered under the standard, with its motto, "the regions beyond." They now await the generous impulse of the Christian Church to send them forth. More Taylors are in order—Hudson Taylors and William Taylors, to lead this sacramental host to fields of warfare and victory.

A propos of missions, statistics reveal the fact that the revival spirit has not yet gotten hold of the pocket-book. Only two per cent. of all monies contributed for religious purposes is dedicated to the evangelisation of the nations. Ninety-eight per cent. is spent on the home field. The average amount from our church membership towards sending the Gospel to the heathen, is 1s. 4d. English churches have given per member the sum of 4s. 8d., while the Moravian Churches of the States, as a distinct body, have reached the encouraging amount of 18s. 8d. This discovery reveals the fact that costly churches at home are absorbing nearly all the wealth flowing into the Lord's treasury. The Moravians have no expensive buildings. They refuse to spend large amounts in luxurious fittings or extravagant salaries. Their last annual gift amounted to £40,000.

We are now face to face with the problem of placing among the benighted nations the 2200 volunteers. How shall they be sent, and how sustained? Eight billions of dollars are held in the hands of professing Christians. How are these hands to be unclasped? By diffusion of knowledge regarding the world's crying need; also "by prayer and fasting."

In a sense foreign missionary work is prosecuted at our doors. Major D. W. Whittle has spent his summer vacation in home and foreign evangelism. Pitching his tent in a certain locality, he next invaded the surrounding homes, and by a system of visitation on the part of his fellow-helpers made the acquaintance of 273 American families. 880 German, 95 Scandinavian, 40 Irish, mixed, 58. Two hundred and thirty-six families of the above number were entirely away from church or Christian influence.

The Chicago Evangelisation Society, through their lady visitors, have come into the homes of four thousand families, many of whom had only then become closely acquainted with Christian visitors. The ladies were received with unanimous goodwill, and frequently with earnest expressions of gratitude. We suggest that our young theological students spend their summer vacation in this school of human nature. Coming into personal contact with the spiritually destitute would transform many an effeminate youthful divine into a rugged and experimental labourer.

Prohibition as a political question is now coming squarely before the people. Republicans and Democrats are in a stew over the audaciousness and aggressiveness of this Third Party. Without expressing an opinion we record facts. At the New York State Prohibition Convention, when the question was put, "How many delegates are members of the Church?" every person present rose to their feet. This Convention opened its business session after a two-hours' prayer meeting. Thus far the leaders have shown their colours. The rock upon which the Party is threatened with shipwreck is the "Woman's Suffrage" question. The women who claim to have given birth to the Party cry loudly against non-recognition. The Socialistic, American and Labour Parties are all preparing for the struggle. Coming conventions may develop many political surprises.

The last few years have brought many new men into evangelistic work. Some are ex-pastors, and others ex-secretaries of Y.M.C.A. Amongst others, Dr. L. W. Munhall, Fay Mills, S. M. Sayford, and Rev. W. W. Clark, may be mentioned. These are all strong men, both intellectually and theologically. The older veterans show no abatement of zeal; most of them are about to commence protracted services throughout the country. The following names will be familiar:—D. L. Moody, E. P. Hammond, Thomas Needham, D. W. Whittle, S. H. Pratt, George C. Needham, and George F. Pentecost. Brethren, pray for these servants of Christ.

Midsummer Bible Conferences are rapidly multiplying in this country. There can be no common centre to which all may flock; hence the need of their establishment in several localities. The Niagara Believers' Meeting has grown in healthy influence, and is now generally recognised as an important summer school for Bible instruction. The Northfield Conference has already become world-wide in its scope, and Christians are met there from the ends of the earth. The youngest of these non-sectarian gatherings, known as "The Crescent Beach Conference," has closed its fourth anniversary. A committee of brethren, members of various evangelical churches, have erected a unique building, containing halls, kitchen and dining-rooms, bedrooms, and a large dormitory. Christian workers seeking seaside recuperation can be well accommodated at reasonable rates, and throughout the summer evangelistic meetings will be held. The plan of the Conference worked well this year. The morning hours were spent in mutual social Bible study, the afternoons to expository addresses, and the evenings to evangelistic preaching. Messrs. Erdman, Pierson, Sturgis, Bixby, Sayford, with Mr. and Mrs. George C. Needham, taught and preached.

The Baptists of Boston have entered upon a scheme to evangelise the city. The denomination has already made conquests by the establishment of mission churches, but now an old church building has been renovated at considerable expense, and transformed into "The Baptist Tabernacle." Nightly meetings are already in progress, and as the work proceeds all practicable religious and philanthropic work will be added. Prominent evangelists will aid in the movement, the opening services being under the care of Evangelist Munhall.

TRISTAN D'ACUNHA.—I should be much obliged if you would kindly allow me to ask some of your nautical readers how a book packet should be addressed to reach Tristan d'Acunha. This lonely island in the South Atlantic—about 1400 miles from the nearest inhabited land, St. Helena—has a population of one hundred persons, the descendants of shipwrecked English sailors; and as they can read, I should like to post them, now and then, a few Gospel publications, if I could do so with a prospect of their getting them. I believe the island is within the Cape station of the Royal Navy, and its ships occasionally visit it; but I do not know through what official at the Cape I could send. Whalers also call, but I do not know where they sail from.

MISSION AT WAKEFIELD

A general mission of twelve days, in connection with the Y.M.C.A., has been conducted by Mr. Spencer Walton, and was followed by a three days' conference. The meetings have been characterised throughout by signal tokens of Divine power in convicting and converting sinners. One prominent feature of the work has been the marked spirit of unity between the workers, belonging to different denominations. Meetings were held during the day in mills, factories, for policemen, railway-men, lodging-houses, and on one occasion to the inmates of the workhouse; the majority of these were conducted by Mr. John McAuliffe. Much interest and blessing attended Mr. Walton's Bible-readings given each afternoon; the same may be said of Mr. McAuliffe's "good-night pillows" at the close of the meetings, when the Christians gave each other a promise to sleep upon.

The three days' conference was a season of much soul refreshment and stimulus. Addresses were given by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. J. Luce, Mr. E. H. Glenny, Mr. Scott Moncrieff, Mr. T. W. Piggott, Mr. Eliot Walton, and others, besides the two mission preachers, Messrs. Spencer Walton and McAuliffe. The need for more entire consecration of life, and the claims of the great heathen world were alike pressed home on the hearts of all believers. All through the Conference a wonderful stream of blessing flowed. Both speakers and hearers received very definite blessing, and several, by letter and word of mouth, have owned it was one of the happiest conferences they were ever at. The children were not forgotten; about one thousand were collected and addressed by Mr. Alfred Haley, secretary of the Y.M.C.A., and Mr. John McAuliffe, with manifest tokens of God's presence.

One feature of the mission has been the number of young men converted—quite two-thirds of the converts; this will greatly increase the membership of the Association. A Y.W.C.A. is also to be launched, and many young women have already given their names as desiring to join.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN will commence her lectures for the season on Monday, Oct. 3, at the Brixton Wesleyan Chapel, when she will give her new lecture on the Life of Jacob, which is expected to present the life of the patriarch in some new light. She will repeat this lecture on the following evening at the Lewisham High-road Congregational Chapel.

THE YOUNG MINISTER who has not read and studied the sermons and writings of John Bunyan, Flavel, Charnock, Thomas Adams and Henry Smith, has lost a treat and passed by mines of spiritual truth which he is not likely to come up with in a thousand modern books. After being in company with these old masters of the Word, ordinary books and sermons seem like the veriest skimmed milk.—Dr. G. F. Pentecost.

PASTOR C. CHINIQUY recently returned from an evangelising tour of six weeks in Manitoba (900 miles from his home in Illinois), and was grieved to learn of the bankruptcy of his publisher, which will leave him very poor. He writes:—"It has been my unspeakable joy to receive a great number of abjurations from the errors of Popery." Any assistance for this zealous old Christian worker we shall be happy to receive and forward to him.

THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE.—The Executive Committee of the Memorial from the Women of England have resolved that the memorial sheets in the hands of the workers, and those persons interested in closing the public-houses on the Sundays in the different parts of England, be returned to Mrs. Spring, the secretary, No. 2, Y.M.C.A., Mount Pleasant, Liverpool, by October 1. It is hoped that the memorial to the Queen will be presented by a deputation of representative women, should Her Majesty graciously agree to receive one. The memorial in its present state includes upwards of three-quarters of a million of the signatures of the women of England.

DUNDEE CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The meetings of this Conference were held on September 21 to 23, when the Word was felt to be with power both among believers and the unsaved. We note the following particulars of interest in the teaching, and reports of the progress of the Kingdom :—

The general subject was, "The man of God throughly furnished to every good work, by the Word." The believer, although not perfect in attainment, is completely furnished by the Scriptures as a builder is, who has all the materials necessary for erecting a house. Christ conveys to us his mighty power by the Word, for the new life, for holiness, and for service. Holiness is a distinctively Christian grace, the product of the Spirit of God. Some heathen philosophers have been eminently moral and virtuous, but they have ever been strangers to holiness, the fruit of Christ reigning in the soul. Every regenerate soul is engaged in a life and death conflict against evil, and is distinguished from other men by his aspirations and desires heavenward. Nevertheless, we get sanctification by faith, even as we get justification. As we are justified by receiving Christ, so are we sanctified by receiving Him into our heart and into all the avenues of our life.

The ancient heathen associated service with servitude and degradation. Christ ennobled it, and revealed it as worthy of our highest aspirations. There is a ministry to the saints which first claims our attention. We are to do good to all men, but especially to the household of faith. This is a ministry both of instruction, restoration, and consolation.

The Church has also a ministry to the world. Here there is a great difference between the Christian idea of service and that of the John Stuart Mill school. The Christian idea implies the immortal worth of every human being. Other systems speak of corporated immortality. Christianity affirms individual immortality. Again, the Gospel holds the key which is to solve great social questions, such as that of capital and labour, and the relationship of the rich and the poor.

In regard to the conversion of the young, important Scripture truths were stated. Children are specially near the kingdom, and have not the difficulties and unbelief to contend with which occupy the minds of adults. The numbers of unconverted teachers and unconsecrated workers, and the inconsistent lives of Christian parents are sufficient to account for the comparative want of fruit from Sabbath-schools and children's services.

Conversions, as a rule, take place early in life; some say between the ages of sixteen and twenty-four. May we not rather say before the age of sixteen? Peculiarly interesting cases were mentioned of the conversion of little ones of four and five years, and of their surprising knowledge of the Scriptures, and of loving service rendered by them to the sick and the aged. Looking at the dark side of the picture, the practical banishing of Christ from the homes of many professing Christians, largely accounts for the worldly lives of many young people. Conversation at the table is occupied with worldly and ambitious schemes, and rank, wealth, and luxury, are presented as the chief objects of attraction in life. In pleasing contrast with this picture of worldliness, the speakers of the Conference were of one heart and mind in pleading with Almighty God not to exalt their children to lofty and easy positions in society, but that, possessing saving grace, they might become thoroughly consecrated to the Lord.

The children of godly parents need to be converted, even as others. Grace is not hereditary, but, as the question was asked, Why should it not be so? Are not promises given to believing parents? (Prov. xxii. 6; Acts ii. 29; xvi. 31).

Again, it is of vast importance that believers very early in life should learn actively to serve Christ. Very few men, indeed, at the age of thirty would learn a trade, and even if they did they would not be proficient in it. Most of those who serve Christ to purpose learn to do so in the bloom of youth. The devil is seeking to damage the Church by making her question whether children and Jews can be converted. Yet children are the hope of the Church, and Jews are the hope of the world.

Rev. John McNeill, Edinburgh, who delivered two addresses which riveted the attention of the vast audiences and fired the souls of many, said that when a student he had felt the tendency to spiritual deadness and unbelief, but had been preserved from being swept over the precipice by the sense of reality in religion which his father's prayers offered up at the family altar had begotten in his soul.

Most encouraging reports were given by missionaries of the rapid spread of Christianity among the heathen, and of the ingathering of Jew and Gentile to Christ. Rev. John Wilkinson, Mildmay, told of doors wide and effectual being opened up particularly in Austria and Russia, for the diffusion of the Gospel among the Jews.

Mr. John Anderson made an interesting statement regarding Gospel work in India. Although many there are prejudiced by the subtle power of the Church of Rome against the pure evangel, yet in their inmost souls they are yearning for Christ. Mr. William Lyons, British and Foreign Seamen's Society, made a most fervent and touching appeal for sympathy and prayer on behalf of our sailors. They have a special claim upon our regard. Their average life is only twelve years. Many of them never hear a sermon for twelve months. No class of men have such a faculty for speaking. When converted, they can all say a word for Jesus, in their honest, blunt style.

Rev. Dr. Orr, Hawick, spoke of the allegation frequently made—that, in proportion to the amount of money and labour expended on missions to the heathen, the results have not been satisfactory. In a speech wherein he made statistics interesting and eloquent, he scattered this allegation to the winds, by mentioning well accredited facts regarding the wonderful triumphs of the Gospel in the South Sea Islands, Madagascar, Africa, India, China, and Japan. Truly the Lord takes delight in these first beginnings to spread the Gospel among the nations. With fervent gratitude let us cry "What hath God wrought?"

We are persuaded the Conference will bear rich fruit in the consecrated lives of many believers, and in the salvation of not a few.

EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY.—Young men going as strangers to Edinburgh, and wishing to become acquainted with Christian friends, are invited to write to Rev. F. Stewart Sandeman, Shirley Warren, Southampton.

OLD POSTAGE STAMPS.—Miss Von Mielecka, who receives collections of stamps on behalf of the Cottage Hospital, Barcelona, has moved from Ryde to Lady Anne's House, Stamford, Lincolnshire, and requests that all communications may be directed there. All used stamps (except English penny ones) are acceptable.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN SAILORS' SOCIETY.—In acknowledging a donation of literature, Rev. E. W. Matthews, secretary of this Society, Mercer's-street, Shadwell, London, E., says :—We could put into immediate circulation tons of Scriptures, and suitable books and papers, such as The Christian. Parcels or boxes, with any knitted cuffs, comforters, &c., in view of the coming winter, may be sent carriage paid to me.

A GOOD WORK AT READING is being carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Day on behalf of the fallen. The sad interest which attaches to many of the cases which they have been the means of rescuing, cannot but deeply touch the hearts of those who are brought into contact with them. The work is not confined to Reading, but the Home is open to comers from all parts desirous to lead a better life. The address is Ivy House, St. Giles'-close, Reading.

Letters to the Editor.

"THE VILLAGE POOR."

Dear Sir,—Many of us are as sympathetic towards the poor as your correspondent Mr. Linnell is; and, having been in the business of agriculture all our lives, know, as a consequence, far more of its details. As regards the counties of Gloucester Hereford, and Berks, in particular, Mr. Linnell is utterly wrong in stating that good ordinary labourers never get more than an average of 11s. per week, or boys of sixteen about 5s.

The present are deeply distressing times, and they are going to become much worse, and the coming winter will prove my assertion. The general public will sympathise with labourers thrown out of employ, but will not lift a finger to get at the true causes which are rendering home industries unprofitable. The same public demand to be fed on "cheap foreign food;" they heavily tax home producers to their ruin, and let foreigners undersell us, and run us out of our own markets, throwing land out of cultivation and labourers out of employ. Three million acres have gone out of corn cultivation in recent years, and labourers lose for every acre so thrown out of cultivation. We must inquire into the causes of this trouble, and not merely excite sympathy for its effects.

Yours very truly, Jas. Hunt.

LADY VISITORS IN WORKHOUSES.

Sir,—Agreeing with the momentous remarks of your lady correspondent in a recent issue of The Christian, with regard to the many hindrances she has met with from the Guardians, in her endeavours to minister sympathy to the inmates, I should like to say a few words relative to my experience in the capacity of secretary to an infirmary in one of our provincial towns. I was connected with the Institution for some years, but during the last six months of that period a change was made in the nursing staff of the hospital, and a new matron and complement of nurses were engaged, who addressed each other as "Sister" and wore a distinctive uniform. The result of this change soon became apparent by the restrictions placed in the way of "visiting," which the matron was allowed to control; the consequence was that anything like a few moments quiet converse with a patient could never be obtained during visiting hours.

One lady who had visited the Institution for years, and of whose grateful ministrations I can bear willing testimony, told me some time ago that she could not now take a walk round the wards without being followed by "a Sister;" or, if the "Sister" was out of the way, she would find herself installed beside a Roman Catholic Sister of Mercy. She feelingly remarked on the contrast between the time when she was allowed to speak to each patient, and give such words of consolation as she felt led to do.

In this particular instance representations have been made to the Board, but matters have gone on just the same. From what I can learn, I fear there are many other institutions "governed" in the same way. This seems to show that Jesuitical influences in our public institutions are gaining ground. These "Sisters" hold diplomas, which are in too many instances the only things considered by the authorities, who appear to have no thought for the real spiritual well-being of those committed to their care. Beyond providing in the by-laws "that the morning and evening prayers shall be read," they actively repress, by every means in their power, the efforts of those who seek to "rescue the perishing."

THEATRICAL MISSION.—The Mission carried on at Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, continues to be much appreciated by the young people of the profession; even during the slack month of August, nearly four thousand attendances were registered at the Institute. Christian friends are much needed to assist in visiting cases of illness and distress; and it is the earnest desire of Mr. and Mrs. Courthope Todd that the rest of the money for the complete purchase of the building may be forthcoming.

PERTH CONFERENCE.

LADIES' MEETINGS.

In addition to the words of good cheer spoken by many ladies, in expounding various passages of Scripture, interesting reports of work were furnished from near and from far-distant fields.

At the tea meeting on Tuesday, Mrs. Mackenzie, from Swatow, said that in 1870 there were only three baptized adult Christians in that southern port; there are now 700. Many of these are women who are much more accessible than in India, as they are neither restricted by caste, nor secluded in Zenanas. In the large Mission Hospital there were from 1400 to 1500 patients last year; among these there were often from 60 to 100 women at a time, all hearing the Gospel preached. There is a large girls' school, given by the liberality of an Edinburgh friend. Seventy girls who have been there are now in homes of their own; twenty-five of them have married young teachers and preachers. There is also a house for training Bible-women, under the superintendence of Miss Ricketts. Much has to be done in the way of house-to-house visitation in the town and the district; and the women, who are very ignorant, need instruction. The Gospel does much for these poor women.

Miss Campbell, Glasgow, pleaded for more workers among policemen. There has been great blessing in Glasgow during the winter. An East-end branch was opened by a week of special meetings. The men have only every third Sunday to themselves, and many of them attend no place of worship. The wife of one man pointed to his Bible, and said he never went out on his beat now without reading a verse to strengthen him. Miss Gordon, of Midmar, has agreed to act as secretary for the North of Scotland, but many more workers are needed.

Mrs. Osborne spoke of work among soldiers, chiefly in Gibraltar. Some of the troops have been nicknamed the "praying Derbyshires" and "praying Shropshires." Miss Archibald and Miss Macdonald have volunteered to help in the work, but more workers are needed to visit the hospital, to distribute tracts, which are eagerly received by the men on board the troopships, and to look after the women and children, who are sorely tempted and much neglected.

At the breakfast on Wednesday morning, which was a united gathering, representing both the Y.W.C.A. and the G.F.S., Mrs. Gordon, of Parkhill, referred to preventive work among young women, which seeks not only to deliver from evil, but to bring unto Christ. Often it is the girls who made most profession and of whom we were most hopeful who fall into sin. Let us honestly tell them of the temptation and of the strong power to help. We need wisdom in this point.

Mrs. Tait gave a short account of the Scotch G.F.S. The motto is, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God." The chief object is to raise the standard of purity. The Perth branch was started in 1880, and there are now nearly 900 members and associates. They have regular Bible-classes, also classes for sewing, cookery, &c., and a prayer-meeting every Sunday morning, conducted by the members themselves

Mrs. Oatts, having recently returned from America, emphasised the necessity of watching our young women who emigrate. Many go in utter ignorance, and without a single friend. The United States Government does much for those who land at New York in a friendless condition, sending them to a Home, where they are looked after by a Christian matron, and lodged till they find situations. But those who have a little money to start with are more independent. The Y.W.C.A. is not yet organised in every town in America as it is here, but in most places someone can be found willing to help. In New York, Miss Clarke, 416, East 26th-street, is ready to meet young women on arrival. She only needs to be told the name of the vessel and date of sailing. She has a restaurant at her Mission, and can find lodgings when necessary.

Mrs. Cupples mentioned that the Y.W.C.A. work in Edinburgh is growing; a restaurant has now been added to the Servants' Home.

In Miss Stewart's unavoidable absence, Mrs. Gordon said that much good work had been done among the herring fishers this season. The Y.W.C.A. had four agents at work, while the Established Church and Free Church also employed lady workers. In spite of illness and many evils there had been much blessing.

The tea-meeting on Wednesday afternoon was largely attended. After an exposition by Mrs. Gordon, Miss M. Petrie said a few words about the students' branch of the Christian Women's Education Union. The object of the Union is to combine intellectual teaching with religious training. It is composed of girls above sixteen years of age, who no longer receive regular instruction, but are anxious for further education. There are now 1450 members; all these students promise to give half an hour every day to prayerful, intelligent study of the Bible under guidance. Among those who joined lately were a Roman Catholic and a Unitarian. It is impossible to show statistics of this work, yet there must be very definite results. Thus students add knowledge to the faith they imbibed in childhood, and are furnished to every good work.

Miss B. Mudie spoke of her work with Miss Geldard in the Drôme Valley. Miss Geldard had it laid on her heart some time ago to make a special effort for the children round about. Only in one village out of ten is anything regularly being done for them. She found she could employ a paid teacher to teach the children in five villages every week. In every village but one some room or school has been provided free of charge for meetings. In one village a Christian lady offered to teach. The French pastors who come very occasionally are cheered by the improvement in the children.

Miss M. Leitch spoke of work in Ceylon. She and her sister belong to the American Board of Missions, and have been seven years in Ceylon. They have never been home-sick for one moment, and it is their ambition to work there for forty years. They are the only missionaries among 20,000 brown faces. The C.M.S., the Wesleyans, and the Americans began work in Ceylon about the same time, seventy years ago. They work very harmoniously together. Their divisions are like the low mud walls which divide the rice-fields. When the rice grows up, in the time of fruit no partitions are seen—only one splendid expanse of rice. When the missionaries first began work in Ceylon, no woman knew how to read, people thought they could not learn; 15,000 children are now in Christian schools in Northern Ceylon, and 5000 of these are girls. The natives give a tenth of their wages, a tenth of their farm produce, the first of their lambs, chickens, &c., to the Lord. The women measuring out the daily allowance of food for their household, lay aside one handful for the Lord's work, which is collected week by week by the treasurer, instead of a collection once a year when funds are low! Thus they have raised £1500 to endow a school which is self-supporting. If a tenth of the income of this country were given to Foreign Missions the sum would be £100,000,000 a year, instead of about £1,250,000, while £122,000,000 is spent in strong drink. Miss Leitch concluded with an appeal for £30,000 for a Christian College which has been established in Jafna fourteen years.

Miss M. Douglas said a few words on behalf of Miss de Broen, who was unable to be present herself; 130 people are attending the Medical Mission four days a week, and Miss de Broen would gladly welcome any ladies who would help in this work.

A devotional meeting was held on Friday morning, the subject of which was "Praise." Interesting and profitable words were spoken by several of those present.

In the afternoon a meeting was held in connection with the Christian Women's Education Union. Lady Massey, who presided, spoke of the importance of Bible study. Mr. Müller says he has read the Bible through nearly one hundred times, and never tires of it.

Mrs. Bannerman, of Perth, read the annual report. Copies of the rules of the Students' Branch may be had from Miss M. Petrie, Hanover Lodge, South Kensington, London, S.W. In connection with the School Branch, including monthly letters to school girls, secretaries are needed for Edinburgh and Glasgow. This "Union," which is growing in Scotland, is fitted for girls of independent and critical bias.

Mrs. (Professor) Lindsay, from Glasgow, spoke of the use Christian women can make of education for God. It may be done directly by teaching others what we know. It may also be used indirectly. An educated nurse, for instance, is able to carry out a doctor's directions, note symptoms, and draw inferences in a way an uneducated person cannot do. Education enables us to see, discern, decide, and act. There is scope for every talent—teaching, cutting out, wood carving, cooking, sick nursing, &c. On School Boards and Parochial Boards Christian women may do work for God. At the same time the home sphere must not be forgotten.

Miss Petrie dwelt on the reflex action of spiritual and intellectual growth.

ALDERSHOT MISSION TO WOMEN.

A work which merits wide recognition and imitation in localities where similar need exists (says The Nonconformist) has been carried on for over four years at Aldershot for the rescue of fallen women. In 1883, with the assistance of a few friends, Rev. J. P. Gledstone, of Streatham-hill, placed at the camp a lady-missionary, Miss Tummon. With no personal friends there to begin with, she was kindly received by a few Christian people for her work's sake; and by degrees she, observing a strictly undenominational attitude, received help from the various churches of the locality. The plan pursued has been for her to live in a small cottage in the midst of the camp (3, Elizabeth-cottages, Central-avenue), to give shelter to any repentant young women over whom she could obtain influence, and then to secure their admission into a "Home" or domestic service. A great number of women have passed through Miss Tummon's hands, for the subsequent career of whom she has had occasion to bless God and take courage.

She has had many disappointments, too. Still the brave missionary woman keeps on her way, and can rejoice in the thought that between three and four score of fallen women have been snatched from the foulness to which they had sunk, and been restored to wholesome life and hope by her means. But it is a hard, very hard, life for a Christian woman to live; and she should receive from her Christian sisters every encouragement and much sympathy. It is no small thing for a woman to live in daily contact with vice, with sorrow, and with hideous suicide and other nameless forms of death. It is hoped, therefore, that both individuals and churches will give heed to her work, and will encourage, sustain, and extend it by every means in their power.

FORTUNES are often enough made by questionable methods; but it is not a fortune we need be in quest of—it is our wage; and our Father is rich enough to find in food and raiment every son of his who does his work.—Dr. O. Dykes.

UNION HALL MISSION.—The meeting of Christian workers held at the hall of this Mission in Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, last week was well attended and most profitable. Mr. R. Bilke, the Director of the Mission, asks for an interest in the prayers of our readers in connection with the winter work at the various halls.

YOUNG WOMEN IN BOURNEMOUTH—In connection with the Y.W.C.A. here, a restaurant has lately been opened for the exclusive use of young women engaged in business houses. Meals are provided at a very reasonable figure, and the need for such a place is shown by the way in which it is appreciated. The social, as well as the physical benefits of this branch of the work, are of growing importance, and every town Y.W.C.A. ought to have its restaurant.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Miss Cole, of the Mount Hermon Orphan Home, Kilburn.

The increasing scope and demands of the rescue work carried on by Mr. William Quarrier in Glasgow have necessitated the establishment of a distributing home in Canada, specially connected with the Glasgow headquarters, and responsible to it. Mr. Quarrier has recently visited Canada and established such a Home at Brockville. We do not doubt that this arrangement will further the interests of our good brother's remarkable work—one of the most wonderful that this generation has produced.

Last week Rev. Dr. Somerville left these shores on an evangelistic tour in Bohemia, Hungary, and other places in Eastern Europe, his first halt for work being at Prague. He is accompanied by his grandson, Mr. G. A. F. Knight, son of Rev. G. H. Knight, of Aberdeen. The mission will extend for several months, and the regions to be visited are very interesting historically in their relation to the Gospel, for there Christ's witnesses have suffered for the truth in great numbers. The first martyr for the truth in Scotland, more than a century before John Knox, was a Bohemian Christian, Paul Creud, who came as a medical missionary to our then dark island and perished at the stake in 1432. We earnestly bespeak the prayers of our readers on behalf of this new enterprise of the veteran evangelist.

Now that the harvest-thanksgiving season is upon us, and "church florists" are advertising their wares, a protest may fitly be entered against churches being turned into horticultural shows on the occasion of these functions, which apparently must be celebrated with due éclat whether the harvest be good or bad. By all means let us give thanks to Him who gives us "the kindly fruits of the earth," but this can be done without cartloads of vegetables, fruits, and flowers. The profuse and elaborate decorations which are so much in vogue tend rather to attract the wandering eye than to quicken the thankful heart. And in view of the falling off in this year's crops and the general commercial depression, which may for aught we know be God's way of dealing with us for our national sins, a note of humiliation may well be mingled with our thanksgivings.

Mr. Denham Smith's health is causing grave anxiety, and his family feel themselves utterly unable to answer the many letters of inquiry and sympathy addressed to them. Since he was brought from Ireland to London, in August, the most unremitting care and attention have failed to increase the much-needed strength, nor has the past month at the sea done much to diminish the concern felt by his family and many friends. Neither pain, weakness, nor languor has been able to disturb the perfect peace of mind which to those who see him makes it difficult to realise that one so thoroughly active through years of unselfish and untiring labour, has been so suddenly invalided. His complete happiness of heart is unchangeable in that same trust and rest in God which have strengthened so many for the last half century of constant speech and work for his Master.

It appears from an article in The Nineteenth Century that the passion for stimulants is finding vent to an alarming extent among the upper classes in the subcutaneous injection of morphia. Dr. Zambaco gave some very saddening details at the Medical Congress at Athens, showing the prevalence of the habit.

It is satisfactory to know that the reckless slaughter of sea-birds has not been suffered to go quite unchecked. At the Belford Petty Sessions last week two hundred and thirty-nine excursionists were prosecuted by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, for wholesale shooting of wild birds on the Farne Islands, and had to pay fines and expenses to the amount of £70. It is hoped that this will be a wholesome warning to those guilty of this cruel and brutal "sport." Excursionists, however, are not the only offenders; with too many of the upper classes, to be killing something appears to be synonymous with amusement.

By a letter from the British Consul at Bilbao, which was read the other day before the Cardiff Chamber of Commerce, further attention is called to the blot on the British seaman's escutcheon, to which allusion was made in these columns a few weeks ago. The Consul asserts that between 150 and 200 British seamen nightly get drunk at Bilbao, that the English sailors there are the most drunken, obnoxious, and quarrelsome class in the world, and that they outrage order and decency with impunity. These are serious and sweeping charges, which we feel slow to believe, especially as there is a Seamen's Mission at that port. It is hoped that the proposed investigation will prove them to be grossly exaggerated. The admitted vices of individuals should not be indiscrimately fastened upon a whole class.

But this medal has a reverse side. There has been a vast increase of total abstinence amongst seafaring men and bargemen of late years. Of this a striking illustration is afforded at Bristol, where, out of forty-nine public-houses which ten years ago were the haunts of sailors, twenty-two have now disappeared, and of the remaining publicans eight attend the Seamen's Church. Most of the sailors' lodging-houses have become respectable, and only two crimps remain out of fifty. This great improvement is no doubt due to the various mission efforts among seamen, as well as the stricter laws affecting the operations of the land sharks.

As the Kilburn House of Rest has followed the order of all living things, and grown year by year from a tiny seed to a widely-recognised mission, it is only right that its majority should be marked in some special manner. It is, therefore, purposed to celebrate the event by a public meeting in Exeter Hall on Tuesday evening, October 20. A large number of the Christian workers who have passed through the House are expected to be present. A "Majority Fund" of £2000 is being raised.

In the last two numbers of The Sword and the Trowel Mr. Spurgeon has sounded an alarm as to the doctrine and practice of some Nonconformist preachers and people of the present day. Some of the religious newspapers have contained editorial articles and letters from correspondents in contradiction or corroboration of Mr Spurgeon's view; while others have declined, on various grounds, to express an opinion when asked to do so. Mr. Spurgeon's terms were perhaps too general; in his next issue he may possibly write more definitely and give specific instances; though this is delicate and difficult ground to tread upon. For our own part, we do not at present intend to enter into this discussion. By and by we may find it profitable to take a review of the whole inquiry and its results.

A small volume entitled, "Christ and the Beginnings of Christianity, by a Physician of the First Century," and containing the Gospel by Luke and the Acts of the Apostles, was presented by Professor A. R. Simpson to each Member of the Ninth International Medical Congress just held at Washington. The following is the Preface:—

> Of all the treatises that physicians have ever penned, there are none that we could so ill afford to lose, or overlook, as the two reprinted here.
> The Hippocratic writings, with which "the beloved physician" of St. Paul seems to have been familiar, have long ceased to be of more than antiquarian interest. The systems of medicine which guide the practice of one epoch have each to make way for others evolved in the generations following. Doctrines and practices in favour at this International Congress are sure to be modified, and may be even superseded, at the next. The lapse of five years takes the bloom off the best of the text-books; and in ten they are discarded, or have to be well nigh rewritten.
> But wherever humanity has touched its highest levels, its most beneficent workers have had these treatises by Luke in their hands; and no writings that have since appeared can take their place, or supersede their power in purifying and enriching the life-blood of mankind.
> It must interest every member of the profession to find one of themselves, himself not personally acquainted with the founder of Christianity, pursuing those inquiries into his history which enabled him to write the fullest and most human Life of Christ; and to see him afterwards settling himself to record the first movements of the Christian life, from its source in the chief seat of religion at Jerusalem, past the chief seat of philosophy at Athens, on to the centre of power in Rome.
> It has seemed to me that my fellow-members might enjoy the perusal and re-perusal of these treatises on their journey homewards. On our last journey we can have no better vade-mecum.
> University of Edinburgh. A. R. Simpson, M.D.

Some months ago Mrs. Josephine Butler wrote, and Mr. Fisher Unwin published, a pamphlet dealing with the Irish problem, entitled, "Our Christianity Tested." An Irish Christian has lately written a reply with the title, "Our Christianity Defended," which is published by Mr. Kensit, Paternoster-row. Those who are interested in the study of this burning question, and have read one pamphlet, should read the other.

Mr. John Bright, writing to a gentleman in Toronto on the liquor traffic, considers that the whole question and its solution depend upon public opinion, which, while it may agree to important restrictions, will, he thinks, for some time, if not always, refuse absolute prohibition; he advocates as the most practical remedy a severe system of taxation which would decrease the number of houses and increase the cost of drink. While recognising with the veteran statesman that summary total prohibition at one stroke might by the inevitable reaction do harm, it is maintained that the public conscience is already quite ripe for the establishment of popular local control and progressive restriction. Let the people once obtain this power and they will speak out with no uncertain sound.

Evangelical Alliance Conference at Aberdeen,

SEPTEMBER 20, 21, and 22.

(From our Special Reporter.)

Although the Evangelical Alliance has repeated its visits to both the capital cities of Scotland, it has never penetrated so far into North Britain as "the Granite City" until this year. Last week, therefore, the annual Conference of the Society was held for the first time in Aberdeen. Early associated with the Alliance, there were numerous cordial supporters in the city, of whom only a few now survive. The other faithful friends of Christian union have since passed to their rest, but they have left behind the heritage of their prayers and goodly example for the encouragement of their venerable colleagues who still remain. One of them, Rev. Principal Brown, was the chief mover in the hearty invitation to the Alliance, and his initiative has been cordially sustained by the members of the Local Committee, who are representative of all the denominations of evangelical Christians in the city.

Notwithstanding the distance, there was a considerable number of members and friends present from the South of England, who have been well rewarded, not only by the sunny weather which has tempered the wind, but by the warmer greeting they have received from brethren in the North, with whom they have met in spiritual converse and prayer. The arrangements provided by the Committee were fully consistent with the comfort of all attending the Conference, many of whom accepted private hospitality, Lord Provost Henderson leading the way in the "entertainment of strangers." The meetings were held in the spacious Music Hall in Union-street, the finest thoroughfare of the city, and also in the accessible rooms kindly placed at the disposal of the Alliance by the Y.M.C.A.

As usual, a conversazione ushered in the preliminary meeting. The latter, a public gathering, was attended by two thousand five hundred persons at least, and it was a significant circumstance that, in addition to the demonstration of ministers on the platform, many were in the body of the hall. Ladies were present in large numbers, and it would seem that the Countess of Aberdeen took this fact into account when, on the following day she called together a meeting of the gentler sex in the large hall of the Christian Institute, held as soon as the afternoon Conference was over. As the gathering was considered private, the press did not intrude, and therefore only a brief account has found its way into the newspapers. What does appear, however, is well worthy of record as a sort of "meetinglet" dropped in among the greater assemblies of the Evangelical Alliance Conference. The record is a simple, but gratifying one. "After prayer, led by Mrs. Gibbon, and a few words from Lady Aberdeen, an account of life and work amongst West London factory girls was given by Miss Meredith Brown, the result of her own experience and that of her friend Miss Grattan Guinness, who accompanied her during her six nights' investigation. The Hon. Edith Waldegrave—a daughter of Lord Radstock, and whose sisters assist Miss Brown in work amongst this class in the evenings—spoke a few words, and closed the meeting with prayer."

Presiding at the opening meeting of the Conference, the Earl of Aberdeen touched upon the scope and operations of the Alliance, but the point he emphasised was its primary object, viz., the promotion of harmony and union among Christians, who were, he said, thirsting and craving for more union, or rather—as he seemed to imply—for a greater manifestation of the union existent amongst all true believers in Christ. That membership in different churches and different denominations of evangelical Christians was no bar to such union was illustrated by the representative character of the platform. Deprecating the bigotry which divided members of Christian churches, the noble Chairman called attention to the growth and development of human knowledge, which, as part of the Divine order and plan, had, of course, its influence and bearing upon religion. Then he drew from all this a valuable and wholesome lesson, not that we are to regard ourselves as more advanced or enlightened than others who retain other views, but that, while we need not feel disturbed at a loosening of the hold on subordinate points, there should be a corresponding increase of intensity and of earnestness regarding that which is vital. The applause with which this inference was received accentuated one of the leading principles of the Evangelical Alliance. The conclusion of the whole matter, Lord Aberdeen summed up in the words of an eminent preacher, who says:—"The real unity of Christendom is not to be found at last in identity of organisation, nor in identity of dogma, but in the unity of spiritual consecration to a common Lord—so earnestly sought by every soul, that though their apprehension of Him whom they are seeking shall be as various as are the lights into which a hundred jewels break the self-same sunlight, the search shall be so deep a fact, so much the deepest fact in every soul, that all the souls shall be one with each other in virtue of that simple fact, in virtue of that common reaching after Christ, that common earnestness of loyalty to what they know of Him. There is the only unity that is thoroughly worthy either of God or man."

The testimony of Principal Brown, who, of course, led the way in the "addresses of welcome," spoke volumes for the Alliance, and for Christian union all over the world. "I have never found," he said, "the slightest difficulty in getting alongside of all who love the Lord Jesus Christ. At these great gatherings for praise and prayer I have found myself in full sympathy with all present, without knowing to what denomination they belong until it was told me afterwards."

The Lord Provost, who followed, felt all the more delight in welcoming the Alliance, because Aberdeen was redeeming its character of former times, when that good and eminent Christian, Samuel Rutherford, was put into prison in their city. The presence of a veteran missionary from the South Sea Islands led the Lord Provost to mention the interesting fact that the last idol worshipped in the Island of Erromanga, where John Williams was murdered, was now preserved as a relic in Aberdeen.

The welcome Lord Polwarth (President of the Evangelical Alliance) acknowledged as "pre-eminently Christian and kind," showing, he said, that, although the city of Aberdeen is built of granite, cold and hard, the hearts of the people are intensely warm and kindly dispositioned. Taking a review of the past five and twenty years, the Master of Polwarth rejoiced that the spirit of bitterness, antagonism, and censoriousness had diminished, and that a spirit of forbearance, Christian sympathy, and Christian love had widely extended. He anticipated a still further enlargement from the holding of this Conference in Aberdeen.

After a few brief but cheering words from General Sir Robert Phayre, up rose Rev. Dean Vahl, of Denmark, to whom so much of the success of the International Conference in Copenhagen was due. Reverting to that memorable gathering, he bore this striking testimony:—"There were many attending those meetings who, though they did not understand the foreign language in which some of the brethren spoke, were yet so impressed by the utterances that they felt that the Spirit of God was over the whole Conference, and that such an influence reached their own hearts." He prayed that a similar blessing might rest upon the Conference in Aberdeen.

A thrilling address was given by Rev. W. Wyatt Gill, who has for thirty-six years been labouring as a missionary in the South Sea Islands. The story he told touched many a heart. He is at present on a visit to this country for the purpose of superintending the printing of a translation of the Bible into the Rarotongan tongue. A gentleman in London asked him why he went so far, and persisted in taking so deep an interest in the proceedings of the Alliance. This was his reply: To the Alliance they owed the universal week of prayer, which had been an unbounded blessing to the inhabitants of the South Pacific; to the Alliance also they owed the continual supply of information regarding the movements of the Christian Church throughout the world. The Alliance had been the means of saving some of the islanders from Jesuitism and death. There was an island not far from New Caledonia which he knew very well, and which was evangelised by a number of his own people. Some few years ago the people of that island were persecuted to the very death. He happened to be in Aberdeen about that time, and he should never forget the bitter days and nights of pain which he endured knowing what was going on in that place. On one occasion fourteen girls had their fingers pounded off—not cut off, which would have been merciful, but pounded off. If anyone said that the priests knew nothing about this procedure, he could reply that, to his knowledge, one of them lent his rifle for the purpose. It was due to the representations made by the Council of the Alliance that the French Governmens at last interfered to prevent the continuance of a thing which they should never have allowed at all. It was through the influence of this Alliance that 800 of the converts of the South Pacific Mission were alive. He knew of no other society that would have helped them in their dire distress, and ever since that time there had been peace and prosperity for these poor islands. Out of the small group of islands he referred to he knew at least 100 individuals who had gone literally to the death for the sake of the Gospel of Jesus. Arrows had slain some, clubs had slain some, and others had been poisoned by the natives of New Guinea. He had sometimes felt appalled at the loss of life. Despite Romanism, however; despite arrows, and despite the cruelties of the heathen world, he believed that at no distant time the nations of this world shall become the nations of the kingdom of our Master, and that He shall reign for ever.

Mr. DONALD MATHESON (Chairman of the Council) then addressed the meeting on "The Evangelical Alliance—its influence on the Christian Church, its Services in Defence of Evangelical Truth, and its efforts on behalf of Religious Liberty." The speech gave to the Aberdonians full information respecting the spirit, aim, and work of the Society. A few words of congratulation from the Noble Chairman brought to a close one of the most remarkable meetings of the Alliance.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

The days of the Conference were alternately sunny and cloudy, but with no sign of rain. On Wednesday the granite-built houses which line Union-street were enwreathed in a thin veil of mist of a kindred grey tinge. But the ardour of the friends of the Alliance was not abated one jot, and as bright and numerous a throng filled the Christian Institute as on any other day. There have been more than the average number of excellent addresses at this Conference, the Scottish divines almost excelling themselves by the eloquence and moral power of their speeches, especially when they touched in any way on Christian union. Professor Charteris's address, of which we give a full summary, was one of the most charming and acceptable, and was as gracefully delivered as it was chaste in style.

The President, Lord POLWARTH, led up to the attractive topic of the morning by drawing a parallel between the Evangelical Alliance and the granite rock from which the City of Aberdeen derives its poetic title. It was an ingenious thought, drawn, however, not from the hardness of the stone, but from the fact that it is composed of different particles welded compactly together by the very turmoil of nature in other times, and now presenting a firm and enduring whole. So, said the Master of Polwarth, in the Christian Church there are diversities of the component parts, but they are one, and firmly united in Jesus Christ.

Christian v. Ecclesiastical Union.

BY PROFESSOR CHARTERIS.

We must seek at the outset to define the terms we use. Ecclesiastical union I take to mean the bond which unites men in a church; Christian union is a bond which binds them together in Christ. It needs no argument to show that the latter is higher far. It may need consideration to see that one can exist without the other. If a church consisted of those who are really called of God out of the world to be the body of Christ, the pillar and ground of the truth, and if those so called were consistent in doing the works of Christ—consistent as a corporate body in union with the Divine Head—then there would be no controversy at all, and the union between members of a church would be the same as union between members of Christ. On the other hand, if membership of a church were merely an external matter; if the contention of some brethren were true that all organised churches are a sinful blending of the Church with the world, there would again be no controversy; and ecclesiastical union would only be vicious and bad. Further, if Christian union, as found in such an Alliance as ours, were altogether and only good, and if in it we realised all we need to be and do as disciples of Christ, the natural and necessary conclusion would be that all denominational churches should be abolished, and our banner should float above the widespread ruin……

There is a power in ecclesiastical union. Those who have been comrades in a hundred fights are bound close together. Those who have toiled at lifting the same load of other men's undone things, have learned the worth and power of each other's force, and have rejoiced in it. Those who have anxiously consulted together how to make the best of some gift to a mission in which they are interested, where to found a new station with funds happily increased, where to send the brave young volunteer whose offer to go wherever he is sent has made them glad: those men have learned to respect each other's fairness and patience and purity of purpose. It is not a little thing this—"We went to the house of God in company." "We have laboured together in the Gospel." Many of the closest friendships of the best men have been with brothers in the same church. No man who has had such experience can ever deny the power of ecclesiastical union to foster the highest friendship. If the union between members of a church led always and only to this comradeship in the highest things, then would it be my easy task to say that those two are one, as a part is one with a whole, as the first stage of a journey with its last, or as a pure body with a pure indwelling soul.

But unfortunately there is another side, and we must next look at it, for there we see what often prevents membership of a church from being brotherhood in Christ. We are struck first of all with the fact that whatever be the theory of church organisation there is no security for the profession which is sealed with membership being better than consistent hypocrisy, or let us say sad self-deception. The dream of some in all ages has been to have a pure Church without spot or wrinkle or any such thing, holiness without stains, joy without shame and sorrow. But it is a dream—though a most attractive dream, whose unsubstantial beauty dazzles eager souls while young and inexperienced; and from the days of Ananias and of Demas, until now, the unworthy have found their way into the visible Church of the living God. Then, further, we have to remember that much denominational work is not of a high order; much of the necessary work of ecclesiastical union is not what calls on the highest elements of Christian life. It is true that even those things might be so done as to elevate the work into high spiritual occupation; but there is something in such denominational work as we all know best which drags us down and narrows us. That one denomination has built a church in any locality is a reason for every other denomination which can afford it building another church quite near. We thus deny the adequacy of each other's ministrations. It seems a horrible necessity that we should exact if we are to hold our own, as the phrase is. As things stand among us in Great Britain, denominations rise and fall with the fall and rise of others; and the sum total of the heads we all count on our muster days is always much the same in itself, or at least in proportion, to the whole population of the country, though the items are from time to time differently apportioned among the various sections of the Church which seek to claim them. It is, not so much that we are willing to be poor for Christ's sake, as that we seek to beggar our neighbours. Apollos' party consists of those who left Paul; Cephas' party is made up of those who tired of both the others, and so on. It is, in the opinion of many of us, very doubtful whether home missions, as at present conducted, are capable, as a whole, of doing any lasting good. If they represent denominations, they are competing efforts; if they are undenominational, they lack vital connection with the organised body of Christ. We see the poor and non-churchgoing playing off our rivalries to the detriment of the cause dear to us all; we see the same thing—a little less in the concrete—amid the more cultured and professedly Christian. The spirit of rivalry is in everything. If we do not grudge that others succeed, we have at least a great longing that the success had come to those of our own way of thinking. What is all this but proof that we are carrying the carnal into the spiritual; and with our spirit of division rending the body of Christ? . . . . . .

The only mode of attaining to the better way is first of all to realise that it exists, and then to let God guide us into it. It exists as distinct; beneath the husk and trapping there is a core of good which is alone essential and abiding. For Christian union is union in Christ, which clearly means that each one of the united ones is in Christ. The more simply each is in Christ, the more attainable and the more complete the union between them all. The disciples had to forsake all and follow Him that they might be freed from all entanglements and complications of worldly business, and even home ties, and find companying with Christ, and under Him with each other, the great fact of their lives. Thus they were free to be attached to one another then; so it must still be. Until we forsake all and follow Him, we are not his disciples worthy of the name. But to forsake all—how hard! All that hinders it must mean. How hard that still is. I must bury my father; I must keep my possessions; I must abide in my home circle with my wife; to forego all these is hard enough, but harder still to escape the subtle snare of ecclesiasticism. So our Christian union is hindered because we carry our contentions into the very holy of holies, polluting the temple with faction as the partisans of John and Simon in the last agonies of Jerusalem.

I wonder whether this factiousness be curable. It surely is, for how it can exist passes all wonder. If we read our Bible we find no shadow of ground for it. We find the inner heart everything, the accidents of place and circumstance nothing. The Saviour's Sermon on the Mount deals, first of all, with the disposition, the heart; and then shows how that is worked out in our relation to our neighbour, and in our relation to God. The teachings of Paul are all to the effect that to be in Christ, together in Him, together with Him, is everything. The only Epistle which recognises distinctly sectional and hostile divisions within the Church, the Corinthian Epistles, treat them as equally right and equally wrong; and Paulinians and Apollosians are alike told that they are carnal and walk as men. The whole strain of the high teaching in the Epistle to the Ephesians is to show how apostles and prophets and all the rest of them, Jewish ancestries and Gentile surroundings, were but stepping-stones to the high unity of fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God. And so also say they all. I can find no place in the whole New Testament which justifies our infinite divisions, our infinitesimal distinctions: no place which even leaves room for them. They have been foisted in by the supposed necessities of truth and righteousness in later times; in reality, by the actual predominance of an unsanctified heart. We have dared to interpret, "First pure, then peaceable," as though the injunction stopped at "pure." We have interpreted "Speaking the truth in love," as though there were no love and no need of it in the whole chart of the Christian life, or at least as though in love were not as essential a part of the proposition as speaking truth. Yet all this is wrong, and we know it. We must come to a conclusion, as strange as it is true, that our denominational peculiarities were not provided for in the New Testament.

Such being the actual and distressing fact, such the beautiful desired ideal, what shall we do? Very obviously we have to keep Christian unity first and uppermost, reducing the other to its true place of subordination. The sectarian or sectional adhesion is what we cannot help; it is as needful meanwhile as clothes in our climate. But we can help overvaluing it. Many who think in their hearts that the life eternal is more important than clothes, do, notwithstanding, think far more about clothes than about immortality. Even so many who believe that churches are less than Christ; and that there is nothing in all that divides us so great as the one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one divine eternal Father that invite us, nevertheless give more of their toil by day, their thought by night, to their church than to Christ; to the specialities which are accidental than to the unity which is eternal. Wherefore let us be jealous of this lest it hinder us. Especially let us be anxious to do justice to individuals. It is easiest to get at a man's real attitude in great questions by observing his opinion of representative men who have taken a side in them. It is easy to see what views are disliked in heart by observing what men are suspected and disparaged. The heroes of the battle are the glory of all the host, and Shaftesbury, and Duff, and Livingstone, and Pattison, and Gordon—who cares to tell what section of the Church could claim them? In the work and fame of such men—and there are many others—everyone of us has a kinsman's share.

The very fact of meeting and knowing each other will bring us nearer together, and make it impossible for us to be so alienated in feeling as we might otherwise be. We have common work to do. The greatest task is to do our several things in a higher mood than is now usual. This is, I think, the unity for which our Lord prayed. To have diversities of operations in the one work is no hindrance of unity; neither is it a necessary hindrance to have diversities of opinion and organisation in things where the Lord has prescribed no rule. If only we could work in the consciousness of that, our denominations would simply be an illustration of the great modern principle of the division of labour, and our ecclesiastical unions be no more than a vigorous attempt to do some work in the spirit of Christian union.

After the warm applause which followed the concluding sentence of Professor Charteris's address had subsided, one of the original founders of the Alliance, and a Member of Council, Rev. J. S. Russell (London), read, according to custom at these Conferences, "The Practical Resolutions," which embody in succinct form the leading principles of the Evangelical Alliance. As it was Mr. Russell's privilege to be present at Freemason's Hall, in 1846, he was enabled to give a graphic and authoritative description of the scene at the formation of the Alliance. Brethen, he said, took each other by the hand, although strangers many of them, embraced one another with tears, smiles, and exclamations of praise and thanksgiving, finally joining, with still deeper emotion, in the Doxology. "That was a scene" (said Mr. Russell) "which, I suppose, for thrilling interest and excitement, enthusiasm, and Christian feeling, has never been surpassed since the Day of Pentecost." Turning to another original member, he continued, "Why, we found then that the Millennium was very near, Dr. Brown." For the Evangelical Alliance he claimed that it had done something to bring Christians into co-operation for common objects. It had united them to interpose between the persecuted and the oppressors. They never dreamed of incorporation, though even in those days there were some far-sighted men who looked forward to it. "Co-operation leading to incorporation" was a favourite phrase of Dr. Chalmers, who was charmed with the sound as well as the sense of the words; but whether incorporation come or not, co-operation was most desirable, and it had the advantage of being possible at once. Alluding to the inculcation of brotherly love and united prayer, even in the midst of discussion, Mr. Russell produced an excellent recipe for keeping the temper when people differed as in controversy they would. "We can hardly hate those for whom we pray. We can hardly help loving those for whom we pray much."

The report, the adoption of which was moved by Rev. Dr. Wylie, and seconded by Rev. J. de Kewer Williams, was presented by Mr. A. J. Arnold (one of the secretaries of the Alliance).

REPORT.

In their report, the Council noted the fact that in Scotland, during the last six or seven years, a revival of interest has taken place, and the numerous meetings held in connection with the secretarial visits, have resulted in the addition of over nine hundred new members. Progress had been made in England as well, no less than 850 members having been enrolled at headquarters alone. Year by year the observance of the January Week of Universal Prayer grows in extent and importance. In order to reach the interior mission stations of such vast countries as China and India, and also other distant places, in good time, the programme is despatched in large quantities early in the month of September. An increasing number of copies are required year by year, and it is a matter of still greater interest that the Week of Prayer programme is now translated into a great number of languages, including Greek, Hebrew, Arabic, Syriac, Turkish, Chinese, Japanese, Burmese, Rarotongan, Tahitian, Hindustani, Tamul, and many of the dialects of India. Thus native Christians everywhere are enabled to take an intelligent part in this world-wide concert in prayer, and Christians of all nations now, with one consent, offer their praises and supplications together before the throne of grace during the first few days of each new year.

An increasing interest has been manifested among the foreign branches of the Alliance. The Evangelical Alliance of the United States have decided to enlarge and extend their work by the formation of local branches throughout the country, by holding Conferences for the discussion of pressing and important questions in morals and practical religion, by collecting and publishing facts and statistics bearing upon all branches of Christian work, and by faithful and wise efforts to unite all evangelical Christians in such a way as to secure prompt and hearty co-operation in any important movement for religious liberty, evangelical work in cities, and the diffusion of correct information upon religious and moral subjects. The maintenance of the principle of freedom of conscience has always been one of the great objects of the Alliance, and several cases have engaged the anxious attention of the Council.

Arising out of the report, a resolution, bearing upon the important subject of Testimony to the Fundamental Truths of Christianity, was passed on the motion of Rev. Principal Douglas, seconded by Rev. Hubert Brooke. It was to the following effect:—

> That this Conference very cordially approves the proposal of the Council, for arranging a series of special meetings in the Metropolis, when faithful testimony to the cardinal principles of the Gospel should be borne by men of God who possess the confidence of the Christian public. The members of the Conference deeply realise with the Council the urgent need at the present time for such witness to God and his truth, and they commend the whole matter to the sympathy, prayer, and support of evangelical Christians, whether members of the Alliance or not.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

There was an undiminished attendance at the afternoon sitting, General Sir Robert Phayre presiding, and all present listened with great pleasure and deep attention to two able and forcible addresses: one on the first and the other on the second part of the selected topic—"The Insidious Growth of Sacerdotalism and Scepticism: (a) The True Antidote; (b) Christian Responsibility in contending for the Faith."

Sacerdotalism.

This subject fell to the lot of Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson, who charged the Church of Rome with contradicting deliberately—not of set purpose, however—the leading truths of the Gospel, and driving men away from the one foundation which God Himself has laid. Therefore, he said, "No truce, no peace with Rome." Union of a very wide kind was being talked of, not only between the Greek and the Anglican, but between the Greek and the Anglican and the Roman Catholics. All who resisted Sacerdotalism as unscriptural could have nothing to do with that union. The summary of Dr. Paterson's address, put into a single sentence, was:—Popery adds to and subtracts from the Word. It is in the Church of Rome that you have the fullest development of that sacerdotalism, which simply means that the priesthood on earth takes the place of the Priesthood on high. As for toleration, depend upon it all the tolerance we could give the Church of Rome would be taken advantage of to overturn and to overthrow the principles of the Gospel we loved; for Rome crushed every obstacle that interposed in its way and would not be stayed by any force except that which was greater than its own. The Priesthood of the Saviour is vital. He and He alone has done the work, and there is no salvation in any other. Salvation by proxy has no place in the Gospel.

The Growth of Infidelity.

By Rev. W. L. WATKINSON.

It is not my opinion that infidelity is really advancing in our midst. There is much inquiry amongst men touching the great articles of evangelical religion; but, confident as we are in the truth of our faith, this need inspire no anxiety. Indeed we may regard whatever vitality our systems of scepticism display as an indirect evidence of the reality and energy of the religious faith of our nation. Professor Tyndall has shown that the cold ice of the Alps has its origin in the heat of the sun, and that any lessening of the solar fire would cut off the glaciers at their source; that more heat and not less is required for the production of a glacial epoch. And so vigorous systems of sceptism can only exist whilst a living faith works and shines in the hearts of the multitude. But, as we see in Switzerland, changed conditions are causing the ice fields to retire rather than to advance on the green pastures and the vineyards, so I believe infidelity is really gaining no ground amongst us, and that in many aspects of the times we have much reason for gratitude and encouragement.

The advocates of unbelief are, however, active, and it is the duty of all Christian men to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. I am expected to speak of "the insidious advances of unbelief," and these are, of course, specially dangerous. The infidelity of our day, seeking to advance theories and doctrines of the most fatal character, does not always openly declare itself, but tries to mask its real character and programme; by a variety of subtle disguises it hides the fraud by which it would destroy us.

What are those insidious advances of unbelief which ought to inspire our solicitude? It seems to me the chief peril lies in this—the attempt of infidelity to identify itself with the great words which command human reverence, the great institutions and movements which evermore command human sympathy. Here is the real danger, that whilst infidelity aims to destroy faith in the doctrines which give to life its sacredness, its preciousness, its hopefulness, it should hide the fraud by identifying itself with terms, systems, sentiments, and movements which are truly noble and which directly and powerfully stir the hearts of men. It is the special business of the Church to take care that infidelity be not permitted to gain ground by thus concealing its true character and consequence. It is our duty then:—

(1) To resist the attempt of infidelity to set itself forth as a religion. The religiousness of human nature is too evident to be long denied, too intense to be long ignored. Our heart and flesh cry out for the living God; prayer is one of the deepest instincts of our nature; our thoughts persist in the endeavour to wander through eternity. It is perceived at last by even sceptical thinkers that a sentiment so profound, general, persistent, influential as the religious sentiment must be reckoned with, and some object be found for its exercise and satisfaction. This object some have found in literature and art. Others have sought an object for the religious instinct in patriotism. Others, again, have sought the satisfaction of the pious sentiment in friendship. But Comte, chiefly, with consummate ingenuity and boldness, sought to create a religion which was not a religion, to elaborate out of earthly elements a great scientific system which should wear the complexion of a faith, speak the language of theology, use the ceremonies of worship, and thus displace Christianity by presenting another and plausible satisfaction for the inextinguishable religious instinct of the race. Here, then, is a special danger. Whilst infidelity mocks the religious sentiment, it is far less dangerous; but when it proceeds to cheat that sentiment it behoves the Church faithfully and painfully to expose the attempted fraud so full of peril. All Christian men must keep before society the fact that this whole system is the blankest atheism; that, however disguised by religious names and symbols, it is a huge fraud, seeking subtilely to destroy the souls of men.

(2) To resist the attempt of infidelity to display itself as the champion of morality. Men generally have a profound belief in the reality and obligation of moral law, even when they violate it; they reverence duty, even when personally they neglect it; they sincerely admire noble character, no matter how painful their own shortcomings. So long then as infidelity appeared in association with a lax morality it was the less dangerous; it inspired in society generally suspicion and revolt. But this is not the position of contemporaneous infidelity. Our representative unbelievers express the greatest anxiety on the score of morality, they affect to decry supernaturalism, because of its moral inefficacy, and boldly advance what is declared to be a superior morality of their own. Here is an insidiousness the Church of Christ must carefully watch and duly provide against. Hitherto it has been felt that religious faith was the sustainer of morals, and we must continue to let the world know that the position is unchanged.

It must be made clear that the Church of Christ teaches the highest moral code. No moralist can produce a code of morality that excels the purity and beauty of the righteousness of God. The Bible differs from all other books in the frankness with which it relates the faults and errors of its heroes, Moses, Job, Abraham, David; the stains on their splendour are acknowledged with unfaltering faithfulness. And yet it is in this very book that we read of One of absolute, matchless moral perfection. "He did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth." It was the maxim of Winckelmann, the great art critic, that the portrait ought to be the ideal of the individual; but there was no need to idealise the life of Jesus, the literal life traced by prosaic pens is an ideal so majestic, so lovely, that it has in all generations extorted alike the admiration of infidels and the love of saints. The Church of Christ must keep before the eyes of men the glory of her Lord.

Finally, it is our duty:—

(3) To resist the effort of modern infidelity, to identify itself with the cause of humanity. There is a great deal of human nature in man, and any cause that manifests sympathy with man is bound to be so far popular. Modern infidelity expresses the deepest interest in man as we find him, in man as a citizen of this world; it claims to be the special champion of human nature and human development; it is the religion of humanity. It is eager to identify itself with science, knowledge, progress, enterprise, government, culture, happiness. Now, if unbelief succeeds in thus connecting itself with movements and themes intrinsically noble and infallibly popular, it hides its real contempt for human nature, and, under shelter of the fraud, gains disastrous prevalence. We must seek to prevent this calamity by showing how truly the religion of Christ is the religion of humanity. Some Christians insist on evangelical teaching, and they understand evangelical teaching in such a narrow sense as to give great advantage to scepticism. This must be avoided.

We must show that the religion of Christ is not ghostly only, but that it concerns itself immediately and warmly with man as he is here and now. That salvation comprehends civilisation, that the culture of the soul involves making the best of our personality at all points, that to secure the prizes of eternity is in a line with the realisation of the riches of earth and the true pleasures of life.

We must be careful to show also that the religion of Christ is adapted to develop every human capacity and susceptibility, and to direct, strengthen, and satisfy human life at all points. The Church of Christ is really as wide as nature, as wide as man, as wide as life. Let us fully recognise that "all things are ours," that we must save all men, and give them direction in all things. Christianity does not abolish art as Mahomet did; it does not proscribe music as Plato did; it does not assume to contract science as Comte did; its aim is to realise the world, and life and death, things present and things to come. Let us give no place to infidelity, by narrowing the scope of evangelical education; let us constantly and confidently affirm that the truth as it is in Jesus is reviving and perfecting as the sunshine, and that nothing is hid from the heat thereof.

In concluding his admirable paper Mr. Watkinson dealt with the methods to be adopted. He commended the work of the Christian Evidence Society; urged that the pulpit and the school should be used in due proportion as educating agencies on this subject. As a practical word he said that the conflict with unbelief will be largely determined by the energy of the spiritual life of the churches, and by the growth of aggressive evangelical effort.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

As on the preceding evening, the audience at the public meeting held on Wednesday nearly filled the Music Hall, which accommodates at least 3000 persons. Mr. William Ferguson, of Kinmundy, occupied the chair, and on the platform were eminent ministers and laymen of the churches. "Christian Union Essential to the Evangelisation of the World" was the theme which had, to the honour of the missionary spirit of Aberdeen Christians, drawn together so large an assembly, and which kept them spellbound with the thrilling addresses of missioners and missionaries. The speakers were Rev. Dr. S. C. Morgan, Leamington; Rev. W. S. Swanson, late of China; Rev. W. Wyatt Gill, of the South Sea Mission; Dean Vahl, from Denmark; and Mr. J. van Millingen, Constantinople, These brethren extolled the virtues and emphasised the need of Christian union in Gospel work at home and abroad. It is high time, they urged, that evangelical Christians of different name should sink minor differences of view, and stand shoulder to shoulder in the presence of the common foe. Mr. Swanson told of the benefits accruing in China from closer union between different bodies of Christians, and urged that the home directors of missions should not throw obstacles in the way of united work in the foreign field. Mr. Gill believed that the work of evangelising the islands of the South Pacific is being better done to-day by the six Protestant missions working harmoniously side by side, than by any single society or organisation. Dean Vahl protested against the Romish view that unity is synonymous with uniformity. Mr. van Millingen said that they would have to solve the Eastern question in the way that Constantine the Great did, by making the Cross the standard of the Empire. They were trying to carry out the principles of the Alliance in Constantinople by forming an Evangelistic Association in which all sections of the Christian Church were leagued together.

HEATHEN CALCUTTA.

In The Missionary Link for September there is a letter from Miss Gardner, late of Cawnpore, who last year commenced a new educational work in Calcutta among girls. She says:—

The life here is new to me and I find it difficult to adapt myself to the noise and confusion, and most of all, the many interruptions to one's work, that one meets in a big city like this; and then spiritually it is so dead. Coming, as I did, from a month spent at Northfield, Mass., I found the contrast almost painful. It is necessarily so in any big centre like this, and must be especially true of a heathen city. Seen from one point of view, Calcutta could hardly be called a heathen city. Driving along its beautiful roads, lined on both sides with palatial residences, or through the thoroughfare of English shops, or on the promenade at night, when the drive is crowded with every shape, size, and description of conveyance, carrying all sorts and conditions of Europeans, there is not much to remind one of anything, except the refinement and luxury of civilisation.

It doesn't take one long, however, to get to the other side of the picture, as I found out a night or two ago, when fifteen minute's drive took me away from it all, into the very heart of heathendom. We went to Kalighat, the most hideous and vilest of all idol temples that I have known in India. The place was crowded, and it was with some little difficulty that we found our way through a labyrinth of lesser temples to this, the great temple of all, with the horrible image of Kali grinning at the crowd who were prostrate before her. They had finished the daily sacrifice when we arrived, so we were spared that much. Two hundred animals had been offered that day to propitiate the bloody goddess. The saddest part of it all was the number of young children, some of them little girls, who stood about, taking it all into their young minds. Not knowing what else to do to relieve my own mind, I turned to the priest who was conducting us and said to him, "You know this is all wrong; these people may be deceived, but you know better." To my surprise he did not try to defend himself, and I found, after some further conversation, that he had at one time been taught in a mission school in Calcutta, and knew all about the better way. He is evidently doing this as a way of making a livlihood, not having any conscience in the matter. I did not spare him after that discovery.

So heathenism and civilisation lie very close together in this big city. If it were heathenism and Christianity, I should feel more hopeful. We are apt to consider civilisation and Christianity as going hand in hand; they certainly ought. One has only to live awhile in India to find how far apart they are. If all with "one mind and one spirit" would "strive together for the faith of the Gospel," there would not be much question of the downfall of heathendom. Pray for us that we may be "strengthened with all might according to his glorious power, unto all patience and long suffering with joyfulness."

PORT SAID.—Mr. Eoll, who labours here, devotes much of his time to visiting the ships in the harbour. He has been able to stop many men from going to the places of evil which abound. His knowledge of several languages enables him to speak to those on board ships of different nationalities. House-to house visitation is extensively carried on, copies of the New Testament being in many cases gladly received. Suitable premises for carrying on the work are much needed.

A BOYS' HOME IN SOUTH LONDON.

By Miss HESBA STRETTON.

In the High-street, Clapham, there stands in a row of houses an old-fashioned dwelling, not a large one, which bears across its front the name "The Carter Home for Destitute Boys." Looking at its small frontage it seems impossible that under its roof over sixty friendless boys find a shelter; but upon entering it we discover a block of building running back upon the small space of ground, which was originally a garden. Here are the dining-room, school-room, and lavatory; whilst above them are two large dormitories, which, with the addition of two good-sized bedrooms in the house, hold the beds for the boys. There is no space lost; the beds stand close to one another; but they are all clean, tidy, and comfortable. The dining-room, which is also the play-room, is crowded, and there is no quiet place for learning home-lessons in. The boys were at tea when we saw them, sitting closely together, but showing bright and lively faces. Our opinion, however, was that both in dining-room and dormitories a little more elbow-room was certainly desirable, especially for the restlessness of boyhood.

Somewhat lower down the street there is a substantially-built, detached dwelling, which is now in the market. It is called "St. Joseph's College," and was built for a Roman Catholic school some years ago; a freehold property, with every arrangement suitable for the sanitary and convenient occupation of it by at least one hundred boys. There are large rooms for meals and school, and healthy dormitories. At the back there was a long range of buildings, which could easily be converted into workshops, where a variety of trades can be taught. The boys already learn shoemaking, chair-caning, and basket work; but in these larger premises carpentering, baking, and printing, all or some of them, might be undertaken. Last year the boys earned the goodly sum of £669 11s. 1d. by their own labour, and with greater facilities we may fairly look for larger results.

The advantages of possessing these larger premises would be that a hundred destitute boys could be admitted in place of sixty; that all sanitary arrangements would be radically better; that more trades could be taught; and that the training shops would be all in one block, instead of being, as they are now, on the other side of the street, and not so immediately under the eye of the master.

The specialty of the Carter Home is the free intercourse maintained between the boys and the life outside. Those boys who have not passed the required standard are not taught in the Home, but attend the different Board Schools in the neighbourhood; and they go to Sunday-schools like other boys. Those who have left school go out to work by the hour, day, or week as house boys; whilst others find employment in delivering circulars. They have a flourishing trade in firewood, and go out with their own van and pony attending to orders. These occupations bring them into wholesome contact with ordinary life, and lay a foundation for good habits as workmen in the future. Boys thus engaged during the day have school in the winter evenings, under an efficient Board School master; and last year earned not only a good Government grant, but also a very favourable report from the Government Inspector as to the tone and discipline of the school.

The Master and Matron of the Home appear exceedingly well suited for their work, and take a deep interest in the welfare of the boys. Letters come from emigrated boys which show how really they regard the place as their home, and the Master and Matron as their friends. Not long ago a young man in good circumstances came with the young lady he was going to marry, and told her there how destitute and miserable he had once been. Another rescued boy, whose mother is a vagrant gipsy, is now entering Mr. Spurgeon's College to be trained as a minister. Such as these are the great successes; but there are many smaller ones, smaller in our eyes, but not so in the sight of God, when boys who would probably have grown up idlers, drunkards, or thieves, have been trained into honest, industrious, and God-fearing workmen.

The report of the Carter Home for the last year lies before us, containing interesting statements of a few of the cases helped during the year. Anyone wishing to see it for themselves should send a post-card with their name and address, to Mr. Gray, Carter Home, Clapham, S.W., and the report would be gladly forwarded. One point in it is worth marking—nearly all of the Committee live at Clapham, thus having the Home under their immediate notice. They are, moreover, of various denominations, though this does not appear on the title-page; and the Home is altogether unsectarian. No one asks to what church the little victim of its parents' sins or misfortunes belongs.

This modest little Home seems deserving of more notice, and more support, and the moment is come for it. St. Joseph's College is waiting to be bought, the committee of the Carter Home are waiting to buy it. All that is needed to bring them together is the money. It is a small cup we bring to the great fountain of charity always springing up so abundantly in our midst. But a small cup can be quickly filled, and the waters are for the healing of the sorrows, wrongs, and sufferings of children.

A VETERAN'S JUBILEE.

An interesting and enthusiastic meeting was held in the Shoreditch Tabernacle, Hackney-road, E., on Monday evening, to celebrate the Jubilee of Mr. John Wilson, who has been labouring as an evangelist in London and the country for fifty years. He came to London fifty years ago, and from that time, in season and out of season, he has served the Lord. He has preached the Gospel as an evangelist, and visited the people in their homes, caring for their souls. He has led many lost ones to Christ, and has been mainly instrumental in erecting over thirty chapels and mission halls.

Mr. Joseph Peters, who presided, said he knew few men who during their lifetime have been so active in Christ's cause as Mr. Wilson. Rev. W. Cuff, in giving similar testimony, said that what we want in the present day is more men of such earnest character and sterling worth.

Mr. Benjamin Scott, the City Chamberlain, who has known Mr. Wilson for over forty years, presented him with an elegant illuminated address, and gave an interesting sketch of his useful career. Other friends also spoke.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a little effort to win souls to Christ in one or two places in and adjoining the New Forest, on Sunday, Oct. 2, by an evangelist.——For much blessing on a three weeks' mission, commenced on Sunday last, in the Presbyterian Church, Bow-road, E., by Mr. Wm. Thomson, of Glasgow.——For an abundant blessing on a mission at Claypole, Lincolnshire, from Oct. 8 to 18.——For much blessing on a mission at the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, after the Convention, conducted by Mr. George Clarke.——For blessing on the work of the Gateshead branch of the United Christian mission.——For blessing on a Gospel mission to brickmakers, at Southall, to be held in October.——For much blessing on a mission at Bexhill, from Oct. 2 to 9, to be conducted by Mr. John B. Bain.——For blessing on special services by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Claremont Chapel, Bath, Oct. 1 to 4; Primitive Methodist Chapel, Lydney, 8 to 11; Bible Christian Chapel, Bream, 13 to 17.——For blessing in connection with opening of the new building of the Plymouth Y.M.C.A. on Oct. 5, and on a ten days' mission for young men to follow.——For an Undergraduate about to commence mission work in the N.W. Provinces, India.——For a blessing on evangelistic services now being held in the Borough Hall, Newport, Isle of Wight, by Mr. S. Hilary Le Cheminant.

The Book World.

THE TESTIMONY OF FULFILLED PROPHECY.

"Mamma, how do we know that the Bible is true?" The mother was a thoughtful, highly cultured lady, and the questioner her little daughter. Yet the question was exceedingly puzzling. How many, indeed, of us could answer it shortly and simply, even after hours of thought. Our friend, the mother, after a few moments of earnest and, doubtless prayerful, thought, said: "We know the Bible is true, Ella, because of the Jews." She then explained how exactly the prophecies respecting the Jews had been, and were still being, fulfilled. It was the most direct and satisfactory answer possible.

Not long after hearing of this incident from the lady herself, we read that Frederick the Great once asked his chaplain to give him there and then a short, direct proof of the truth of Scripture. "The Jews, sire," was the quick reply. It is said that the monarch recognized the weight and power of this answer. He knew that the history of the Jews, from the time of Christ down to the present hour, answered to the story of their future which their own prophets foretold, as a key answers to a lock. Here, therefore, was the certain handiwork of God. The book that could speak thus must be inspired.

We have often compared these two incidents, and reflected on the complete satisfactoriness of the argument from revealed prophecy. It could be comprehended by the little child, and yet it filled the mind of the great king with respect and wonder. We have often observed how God, in his wisdom, has made the great fundamental truths of our faith—such as the Being of God, or the Divinity of Jesus Christ—capable of proof so simple and certain that it is within the reach and the comprehension of all true and earnest souls. The proof of the inspiration of the Bible afforded by the testimony of fulfilled prophecy is an apt illustration of our meaning.

We are led to make these remarks by the appearance of a half-crown book, entitled, "What are we to believe? or, The Testimony of Fulfilled Prophecy;" by the Rev. John Urquhart, of Weston-super-Mare (W. Mack). We often say that the Bible is its own witness, though we may have a most unworthy conception of the wonder and majesty of its testimony to the Divinity of its message. This book, so small in bulk but so large in thought, sets forth a great mass of such testimony in lines so clear and powerful that we pity the man who could read it without amazement and awe. It is a book to make one worship and to exclaim:—"Verily, the Lord reigneth, He knoweth that which shall come upon the earth, He sitteth King for ever." It is the very book to put into the hand of an intelligent Agnostic, so clear and fair and satisfactory is the statement of the argument from its careful commencement, through its well-defined progress, to its magnificent conclusion. The cream of many great books is to be found in these 230 pages. Nevertheless, all is simple and compact. Prophecies regarding Tyre and Sidon, Egypt, Idumea and Philistia, Judea and Babylon, the coming of Christ, his history and worth, and the history of the Jews, are compared with the undoubted facts of history. This comparison is made with great fulness of knowledge, and masterly ability, and the result is gloriously conclusive. We say "gloriously;" for Mr. Urquhart does far more than prove the Divine inspiration of the Bible. He does so by revealing its own inherent glory. The reader is more than convinced: he is instructed, humbled, and brought near to the mighty works of God. He sees anew how

Glory gilds the sacred page
Majestic, like the sun.

He is also made to see God in history, as well as God in the Bible. We commend it to every intelligent reader. Many are given to the study of unfulfilled prophecy. To them, especially, would we recommend such a book as this; for the study of fulfilled is the almost necessary prelude to the study of unfulfilled prophecy.

A new edition of Dogs and their Doings, by Rev. F. O. Morris, B.A. (2s.), has been published by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. It is a most interesting little volume, full of lively anecdotes; it cannot fail to influence the young in teaching them to practise kindness towards this animal, which is, in many ways, one of the best friends of man. The life-like illustrations, by Harrison Weir, Sir Edwin Landseer, and others, greatly add to the attractiveness of the book.

Household Prayers. By Rev. J. E. Riddle, M.A. Longmans, Green & Co. 3s. 6d. Those who require helps of this kind will find Mr. Riddle's volume well suited to their purpose. The addition of a course of Scripture readings for every day in the year, with a selection of prayers for special occasions, gives completeness to the work.

The Herald of Mercy. Annual volume. 1s. Morgan & Scott. This volume cannot fail to prove one of the most interesting and attractive of the season. The illustrations are admirably executed and most effective, while there is an abundance of live narratives, the point of which cannot be missed, and which indeed make this monthly a herald of good things.

Rinalpho's Dream. By William Marshall. 3s. J. Kensit. In a poem of five cantos the author endeavours to expose the conspiracy which, he asserts, is in force to betray England into the hands of Papal Rome. The conception is bold, the language strong and vigorous, and there is, doubtless, much sober truth in the picture drawn; but the poetry is not of high order, and the expressions used not always in good taste.

A new weekly paper called The Vegetarian is about to be published in the interests of simple and rational diet.

Christine's Crook. By S. Hamer. 1s. 5d. Ward, Lock & Co. A thoroughly healthful story, and one that it will be quite safe to put into the hands of our young folk. While deeply interesting, the lessons inculcated are of a character to enoble and purify.

Messrs. Nisbet & Co. announce for publication in October the Autobiography and other Memorials of Miss Maria V. G. Havergal, the sister and biographer of Frances Ridley Havergal.—A new book by Dr. Macduff, entitled, St. Paul in Athens. The City and the Discourse, with illustrations.—Christianity and Evolution: or, Modern Problems of the Faith, by various Writers.—A new Volume of Verse, by Miss F. R. Havergal, &c.

Among their forthcoming new books, Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton announce the following:—"Life of Samuel Morley," by Edwin Hodder; "Modern Science in Bible Lands," by Sir J. William Dawson, F.R.S.; "Life of W. Morley Punshon, LL.D.," by Professor F. W. Macdonald; "The Ancient World and Christianity," by E. de Pressensé, D.D.; "The Sower and the Virgin," by Lord Robert Montagu; "The Key Words of the Bible," by Dr. A. T. Pierson; "The Books of the Bible," by the late Dr. W. P. Mackay.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. announce, among many other new publications, "The Holy Land and the Bible," by Rev. Cunningham Geikie, D.D., 2 vols.—the completion of the illustrated edition, and a cheap edition of Dr. Geikie's "Life of Christ;" a popular edition of "The Life and Work of the Seventh Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.," by Edwin Hodder; some new volumes of the "World's Workers" series, including, "The Earl of Shaftesbury," by Henry Frith; "Sarah Robinson, Agnes Weston, and Mrs. Meredith," by E. M. Tomkinson.

SOME OCTOBER MAGAZINES.

SUNDAY MAGAZINE.

There is much admirable reading in this number. Miss Linskill's extremely clever story, "In Exchange for a Soul," loses none of its tragic interest as it nears the close. For philosophic insight and vigorous delineation of character it stands high in the fiction of the year. Many readers will follow with deep interest Mr. Hastings' excellent sketch of St. Petersburg; this little incident, given as authentic, is very touching:—Dr. Karrell, the Court Physician, being congratulated by the Czar on his jubilee of service, hoped his Majesty would attain the same age. "No chance of that," said the Czar. "Why not?" "I am too closely watched and threatened by the Nihilists." "Ah, your Majesty," said the physician, "there will be no Nihilism when every Russian has a Bible, and reads it." "I know it, I know it," said the Czar energetically; "and I can tell you that I value the Book, and read it daily." Says Mr. Hastings in closing, "When Russia gains constitutional liberty and comes into line with the rest of Europe, she will have a mighty influence in making history."

Among the other attractions of the number is a charming talk (finely illustrated of course) about birds and bees, by that master-student of nature, Rev. J. G. Wood. But the most valuable paper is a brief one by Dr. Oswald Dykes on

MAKING AND SPENDING MONEY.

It ought to be printed as a leaflet and scattered by thousands in the marts of commerce and counting-rooms of all our great centres of trade. Speaking of the mass of the working community he says:—

"We have to live. In order to live, even, we have to succeed where many fail. In order to succeed we have to excel, to surpass, or outstrip our fellows. How to do this as a Christian? How to mingle in such a fray on Christ's own lines, keeping the heart pure and the eye single? How to avoid the false and wrong way of seeking after work and pay, and success and wealth—the way which kills everything within a man, deadening his soul to brotherhood and piety? How to find and love a better way, the right and safe one, that will bring us as much as we need or can wisely use of this world's goods, but keep us to the end pitiful lovers of our kind and humble sons of God? If that be possible, how to do it?"

For the wise answers to these questions we must refer the interested reader to the article itself, contenting ourselves with quoting further two or three closing sentences:—

"I do not know that a wise man will risk superfluous wealth, even in order to do good with it. There is nothing more difficult in this world, Christ says, than to possess much without suffering in one's soul, or imperilling one's chances of heaven. . . . Let him who has, pray for wisdom that he may spend it well. Let him who wants, pray that he may get in lawful ways from God's hand, with God's blessing. Let him who has enough, thank Heaven and rest content."

GOOD WORDS.

Here, again, Mr. Wood is in his element in describing some "phases of animal life." Mr. Underwood continues his appreciative sketches of American notabilities. This time it is Nathaniel Hawthorne. Mr. Langbridge's poetic agility and sympathy are seen to advantage in the little poem "A Regular Bad Un." A warm word of praise must be given to Mr. Vincent Tymms' Sunday readings on the "Heart's Immortality," which contain much thoughtful and practical writing. Here is a word of counsel and warning:—"It is possible to be a diligent student of the Christian Scriptures, an eloquent exponent of the Great Teacher's words, and a sincere admirer of the beauty which shines in Him, as the chiefest among the sons of men, and yet to become petrified by familiarity with all that is holiest in spirit, and mightiest in moral motive, while disobedient to the maxims, and ungoverned by the principles of the Gospel. A life of thought unaccompanied by healthy social action, must bring death to the heart, and the more directly the thinking is concerned about religion, the speedier will be the process."

Next month The Lady's World (Cassell & Co.) is to be enlarged, under the title of The Woman's World, so as "to include the more elevated regions of woman's thought and effort." Special attention will be given to the question of the employment of gentlewomen of education.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 2.—ISAIAH XXXVIII.

"THIS and the next chapter are the historical starting-point of chaps. xl.—lxvi."—Kay. Hezekiah's failure "in the business of the ambassadors of the princes of Babylon" (2 Chron. xxxii. 31) hastened the long-threatened punishment of Judah; but this very punishment—the Babylonish captivity—is made typical of the doom of sin, and thus made the means of exhibiting the mercy and grace of God in the message of the Gospel.

1.—In those days was Hezekiah sick unto death.—"The days of the Assyrian invasion. That it was Hezekiah's fourteenth year is evident, for we are told that fifteen years were added to his life, while the whole length of his reign was twenty-nine years."—S.C. Thou shalt die, and not live.—See Jer. xviii. 7—9, as to how such warnings are conditional.

6.—I will deliver thee...out of the hand of the king of Assyria.—"No proof that the sickness was before the Assyrian calamity, for Hezekiah would need this assurance against the risk of renewed invasion, when rage and vexation had succeeded panic."—Birks.

17.—Behold, for peace I had great bitterness.—R.V. makes the meaning clearer, "Behold, it was for my peace that I had great bitterness." As though he saw in the sickness God's gracious design to lead his soul into peace. So Birks and Kay. Thou hast in love to my soul, &c.—Hezekiah seems now to have found peace with God through faith in the coming propitiation for sin. It may be that his self-righteousness (ver. 3) needed to be overthrown like that of Job (xlii. 6).

MONDAY, OCTOBER 3.—ISAIAH XXXIX.

2.—Hezekiah was glad of them, &c.—"The interval between the deliverance of Jerusalem and the visit of the Babylonian envoys was long enough to have enabled Hezekiah to replenish his treasury, partly, no doubt, by the gifts brought him from surrounding nations (2 Chron. xxxii. 23)."—S.C. The avowed motive of the mission was to congratulate Hezekiah on his recovery. In 2 Chron. xxxii. 31, it is said, "to inquire of the wonder that was done in the land" (either the destruction of the Assyrian host, or the solar phenomenon (xxxviii. 8), or perhaps both), but in all probability an alliance was sought by Babylon, which was beginning to throw off the the yoke of Assyria. It was apparently Hezekiah's favourable reception of these advances, combined with pride of heart (2 Chron. xxxii. 25, 26) in displaying his treasures, that brought upon Judah the punishment of the Babylonish captivity. "God left him, to try him, that he might know all that was in his heart" (2 Chron. xxxii. 31).

7.—Of thy sons...which thou shalt beget.—"One of the minute coincidences of real history. Hezekiah had at present no sons, since Manasseh, fifteen years later, succeeded him at the age of only twelve years."—Birks.

8.—Good is the word of the Lord which thou hast spoken, &c.—"It is a strange blindness in some modern critics to see in this reply only a selfish egotism. Two feelings are plainly expressed: humble submission to the justice of God's sentence, and thankfulness for the merciful limitation."—Birks.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 4.—ISAIAH XL.

The concluding portion of Isaiah (xl.—lxvi.) consists of three parts, of nine chapters each: xl.—xlviii., xlix —lvii., lviii.—lxvi. "This arrangement has hardly been disputed by any one since Rückert first pointed it out."—Delitzsch. Each part closes with a solemn denunciation of the doom of the wicked. "There is no peace, saith the Lord, unto the wicked" (xlviii. 22), "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked" (lvii. 21); and at the close of the third part the doom of the wicked is described by the undying worm and unquenchable fire" (lxvi. 24). God, as the deliverer, is the chief figure of the first part. The Servant of God and his great work is the chief figure of the second part. The third commences with the work of the Spirit of God—conviction of sin. "Show my people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins" (lviii. 1); and after deep confession of sin (lix. 9—14) the Spirit of God is expressly mentioned as secured to God's people by covenant (lix. 21). Thus this three-fold division of the subject agrees with the New Testament teaching as to the doctrine of the Trinity.

2.—For she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sin.—R.V. is better "That she hath received," &c. "There are three messages of comfort, which correspond to the three divisions just pointed out (xl.—xlviii.), "Her warfare is accomplished" for God is her deliverer; (xlix.—lvii.), "Her iniquity is pardoned" for the servant of God is her sin-bearer; (lviii.—lxvi.), "She hath received (or 'receives,' the same tense as the other verbs) of the Lord's hand double." It is disputed whether this means double punishment or double blessing, but lxi. 7 favours the sense of double blessing. The last section lviii.—lxvi. unfolds this double blessing when first the Spirit of God has convinced the people of sin (lviii.) and brought them to repentance (lix). "For all her sins" will thus mean (as in the expression "for all that"), "Notwithstanding all her sins." The New Testament parallel is, "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound" (Rom. v. 20). Gesenius, Ewald, Stier, Birks, and others take "double" to mean "double blessing."

9.—Behold your God.—The first and second Advent viewed together.

10.—His reward is with Him, and his work before Him.—These words occur again (lxii. 11), and seem there to refer to "the holy people, the redeemed of the Lord," who at Christ's coming will constitute his reward and display his work. See 2 Thess. i. 10. "The Chief Shepherd" will come with his flock. See next verse.

31.—They that wait upon the Lord shall renew (change) their strength.—After a glorious description of God's power (12—29), the chapter closes with the putting forth of this power in his people, both now in sanctification and hereafter in redemption of the body (Rom. viii. 23).

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 5.—ISAIAH XLI.

2.—Who raised up the righteous man from the East.—Literally, "righteousness." "This is referred by most modern critics to Cyrus and his victories, but by the Jewish expositors, and by many Christians also, to Abraham. The reasons for this older view are really decisive."—Birks.

3.—He pursued them, &c.—"Refers to that signal victory, the earliest recorded in the world's history (Gen. xiv. 15)."—Ibid. By the way that he had not gone with his feet.—This has a striking spiritual meaning if Abraham's faith be understood, which was "reckoned to him for righteousness" (Rom. iv. 9). Viewed in this light, the victory spoken of would be the far greater one over spiritual enemies.

5.—The isles saw it, and feared.—"The call of Abraham and his later triumph were a voice of God to those early generations of mankind recalling them from their ungodliness and growing idolatry. But instead of hearkening to this voice, the nations plunged still deeper into idolatry and superstition."—Birks.

8.—The seed of Abraham, my friend, whom I have taken from the ends of the earth.—It is to this that Heb. ii. 16 refers, "He taketh hold of the seed of Abraham" (R.V.). The spiritual seed are evidently meant. The "righteous man," or abstract "righteousness," of ver. 2 would therefore seem to be not Abraham only, but all who like him believe, as described Rom. iv. 11, 12.

10.—The right hand of my righteousness.—The righteousness of God (as explained Rom. iii. 21, &c.), which is "unto all them that believe."

14.—Fear not, thou worm Jacob.—In the light of this glorious revelation of God as the righteousness of his people, it is meet that their wretchedness and misery in themselves should be clearly set forth.

25.—I have raised up one from the north.—This is generally admitted to be Cyrus.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 6.—ISAIAH XLII.

1.—Behold my servant, whom I uphold.—The quotation of these opening words in Matt. xii. 18 leaves no room for controversy as to the person intended being the Lord Jesus Christ.

3.—A bruised reed shall He not break, and the smoking flax shall He not quench.—A "bruised reed" is in xxxvi. 6 the figure of a nation not to be trusted as a support to lean upon. The "smoking flax" is the wick of the lamp, which instead of burning so as to give light, emits smoke which might well provoke one to quench it. Both are apt emblems of the Jewish Church, which in our Lord's time was not to be trusted, and which, instead of giving light for which it had been set (Ps. cxxxii. 17), gave forth the noxious fumes of false doctrine. But, corrupt as it was, the Lord neither broke the reed nor quenched the flax until He had by his finished work set judgment in the earth, and then "in his name did the Gentiles trust." In Matt. xii. 14, &c., the passage is said to be fulfilled by our Lord's withdrawing Himself to avoid collision with the leaders of the Jewish Church.

19.—Who is blind, but my servant?—"The blind and deaf in spirit are to fix their eyes on Him, that sight and hearing may be restored. Theirs was the blindness and deafness of idolatry and self-righteous pride. He, too, is blind and deaf, but in a sense wholly opposite, by unspeakable forbearance and grace (see Ps. xxxviii. 13; Num. xxiii. 21)."—Birks.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 7.—ISAIAH XLIII.

3.—I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee.—"Egypt, Ethiopia, and Seba were not parts of the Babylonian Empire; but they should be added to the Persian Empire as the reward of Israel's emancipation. They were actually annexed by Cambyses, the son of Cyrus."—Kay. They are reckoned in the Persian Empire in Esther i. 1.

5.—I will bring thy seed from the east.—"This promise, which had an initial fulfilment in the return from Babylon, and a larger one in the gathering in of Gentile converts (Matt. viii. 11), looks on yet further to the final recovery of Israel."—S.C.

16.—Thus saith the Lord, which maketh a way in the sea.—"The fall of Babylon has been foretold with the preface, 'Thus saith the Lord' (ver. 14). With the same preface the Jews are now reminded of the mighty power of God at the Exodus."—Birks.

19.—Behold, I will do a new thing.—"The 'new thing' most moderns apply to the return from Babylon, but the Christian Fathers, and Jewish Talmudists, to the times of the Messiah. The event predicted is some greater antitype of the desert journey in the days of Moses. But the return from Babylon fell very greatly short of the wonders of the Exodus. This seems a strong proof of the Messianic reference."—Ibid.

27.—Thy first father hath sinned.—The root of the evil is thus traced to its source in Adam (Rom. v. 12).

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 8.—ISAIAH XLIV.

3.—I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, &c.—The two evils of a corrupt nature in consequence of Adam's sin, and of false teaching of a church apostatising from God, can only be successfully overcome by that new nature, the result of spiritual birth, and by the teaching of the Spirit who leads into all truth.

5.—One shall say, I am the Lord's, &c.—A beautiful picture of new-born souls dedicating themselves to the Lord's service, but not all in the same way. With some, the constraining influence of "ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price," is paramount. To others, the experiences of the "worm Jacob" present a picture of their own, on which, perhaps, they are apt sometimes too exclusively to dwell. While a third class (corresponding to the "young men" of 1 John ii. 13, 14) show forth in action (of which the "hand" is the type) that they are the Lord's, and seek to attain the higher experiences of Israel—the prince who had power with God, and prevailed.

22.—I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy trangressions.—After a striking description (9—20) of the folly of idolatry, the true ground of knowledge of God by his people is here set forth: "They shall all know Me...for I will forgive their iniquity" (Jer. xxxi. 34). Compare Ps. cxxx. 4, "There is forgiveness with Thee, that Thou mayest be feared."

THE CRY FOR SABBATH REST.

The cry of earth's unrest—
  Of ceaseless toil's dull pain,
From north to south, from east to west,
  Like murmur of the sleepless main,
In growing volume seems to say,
"Oh, for a restful Sabbath day!"

The steamboat's surging throb.
  Where mammon chafes the tide—
As if the very waves to rob
  Of rest which Heaven had ratified—
Resounds, as though it would inveigh
'Gainst outrage on the hallowed day.

The railway whistle shrill,
  Piercing the peaceful air,
Where else the loudest sounds had still
  Been chime of bells, and praise, and prayer,
Screams down the thundering iron way,
Demanding back the Sabbath day.

The clattering tramway cars,
  Bearing their goodly freight
Of comfortable worshippers,
  To many a sanctuary gate,
Cry out, "Must Christians, too betray
The sanctity of God's own day?"

The weary toil-worn horse,
  Through seven days doomed to plod,
Would fain the mute appeal endorse,
  Uprising to a righteous God,
From hearts that have no hour to pray
Through all the toiling Sabbath day.

Attend, ye sons of toil,
  To history's lesson plain,
That seven-day labour's cruel coil
  Follows in "Sunday pleasure's" train.
Then prize your rest; God's law obey,
And sanctify the Sabbath day.

THANKSGIVING at BLACKGANG, I.W.

This harvest festival was held on Sept. 22. There were about two hundred and forty to tea and about three hundred and fifty at the meeting; many could not get inside the hall. Rev. H. J. Tressidder, of Newport, presided. It was indeed a thanksgiving; for, after Mrs. Reade's few words of welcome to the visitors, twenty or more brethren and sisters spoke of the goodness of God—some of individual mercies that they had received of Him during the year.

One of the visitors told of his riding in a railway carriage, when a farmer asked him as to the means of securing a good harvest. He told the farmer he had the best book on the subject, and would read a few words to him from it. He read from Ps. lxvii., "Let the people praise Thee, O God, let all the people praise Thee. Then shall the earth yield her increase." The farmer immediately left his seat and went to another part of the carriage. One of the sisters said a few appropriate words on "His paths drop fatness," and that He makes the seeming barren heart of the poor, the meek, and the lowly to flourish because He dwells there. The meeting was profitable throughout, and God was glorified.

This Mission has been going on now for thirteen years. The ladies are as zealous as ever. Miss Hamilton and Miss Edith Reade still go about conducting missions in the villages and towns of the island. G. K.

HYDE PARK.—Mr. C. Cook writes:—We closed the season on Sunday last. This has been one of the most difficult years we have ever had. Fifteen years ago there were only two meetings held in the Park on Sunday afternoon, both of them for Gospel preaching; now all sorts of things are preached. Yet we have gone on, and have rejoiced over many souls who have found and confessed Christ. God willing, we are hoping to re-open the Metropolitan Music Hall in October, but hardly feel justified in doing so until we meet a claim of £35 we owe for the past season. The hall holds over 2000, and it is filled during the winter months by the artisan class.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. John Wooldridge's tent meetings in Harlesden continue to be successful. It does one's heart good, says a correspondent, to see the number who stand up and boldly confess Christ.

Mr. Scroggie in Glasgow.—Great blessing has attended Mr. Scroggie's work in Trinity Free Church during the past fortnight. Next Sabbath he moves to East Campbell-street Free Church.

Bayswater.—Services have been held for the past month in a tent in Moscow-road, Bayswater, by Mr. Charles Cook and Mr. John Short. Many cases of blessing have been seen. The meetings are being continued.

Raphoe, Co. Donegal.—Evangelistic services have been conducted here by Messrs. Simpson and Ballantine, Assembly's College, Belfast. Their earnest Gospel addresses were listened to by large and attentive audiences.

Belfast.—A special revival mission, in conducting which Rev. John E. Green will be assisted by several ministers of the town, has been commenced in Donegall-square Methodist Church. There will be a meeting for prayer every day at noon, and an evangelistic meeting at 8 p.m.

Galashiels.—Mr. G. R. Cairns has concluded ten days' meetings in connection with the Baptist Church here. All the evangelist's addresses were wonderfully impressive. The Christians have been greatly stirred up. One of the greatest attractions was the solo singing. Mr. Cairns leaves many here who will follow him with their prayers; and thank God for sending him into our midst. A. T.

A six days' mission among the soldiers at Canterbury was brought to a close last Saturday. The results awaken praise and thanksgiving to God. The power of his Spirit has been felt at all the meetings, many men having stood up to confess Christ. Addresses were delivered by the Dean of Canterbury, Canons Fremantle and Foxell, the Army Scripture Readers, and Miss Herdman of Melrose. Prayer is asked for the converts that they may stand firm.

Upper Clapton.—We have recently opened a mission in a very needy district of Upper Clapton, and at present use two rooms in a dwelling-house. The success that has attended our efforts is such that already we are crowded out, and greater accommodation is required. If any of the Lord's stewards would like to meet the expense of a mission room, will they please communicate with me? Thomas Jackson.

Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse.—Mr. Henry Varley conducted the morning and evening Sunday services during September. A growing interest was shown by steadily increasing congregations, and the Holy Spirit made use of this faithful preacher to bless very many. His addresses on the High Priesthood of Christ, and the Righteousness of God, will be long remembered by those who heard them. During October, when Dr. Barnardo will still be absent in Canada, the Sunday services will be conducted by Ned Wright.

American Evangelists.—We gather from the Chicago Record that Mr. Moody will probably labour in the South-west this autumn.—Major Whittle is busy in Iowa.—Dr. Pentecost is at work in various parts of New England.—Dr. Munhall, with Mr. and Mrs. Towner, are now in the middle of a mission at Toronto.—Major Cole has resumed work in Missouri, where he saw such a remarkable revival of religion last winter and spring.—Messrs. Jones and Small have arranged a whole year's campaign, to extend across the American continent.

South Norwood.—During the past fifteen weeks a tent, capable of holding about 400 people, has been erected for the purpose of carrying on evangelistic meetings, conducted by agents of the London City Mission and the Evangelisation Society. A closing tea and thanksgiving meeting was held on Tuesday week, when it was stated that over 10,000 attendances had been registered at the various Gospel, temperance and prayer-meetings, and much thankfulness was expressed for the blessing which had been vouchsafed in the salvation of souls, the restoring of backsliders, and the arousing and comforting of God's own children. A strong desire has been manifested by the people and also by members of the local branch of the London City Mission, that a mission hall should be erected for the continuation of this work. A site has been selected, and the building of an iron hall, to accommodate about 250 persons, could be erected and fitted up for about £300; one half of this has been collected or promised.

Gateshead.—Very successful open-air services have been held here for the last four months by Miss Haigh, in connection with the Gateshead branch of the United Christian Mission. Hundreds have listened to the Gospel message, and earnest entreaties of the evangelist, eternity alone will reveal the good done.

Rev. W. Haslam's forthcoming engagements are as follows:—Oct. 1, Smith-hills, Bolton-le-Moors; Oct. 23, St. John's Church, Chelsea; Nov. 5, All Saints', Liverpool; Nov. 20, St. George's, Holloway, London.

Rev. R. Balgarne's mission engagements till Christmas:—Oct. 1—9, Craven Chapel, London; Oct. 11—13, Leeds (Congregational Union); Oct. 15—21, Camberwell Green Church; Oct. 22—28, Camberwell New Park Church; Oct. 29 to Nov. 6, Tollington-park Church; Nov. 7—15, Nottingham; Nov. 16—23, Yarmouth; Nov. 27 to Dec. 2, Cardiff; Dec. 4—11, Liverpool.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

JAEN.—Messrs. Armstrong have visited this province and find the work of grace growing.

AT IZNATORAF a note of praise ascends for the joy, humility, and love which prevail amongst the workers. The elders watch over the flock, one of them devoting himself to the work without any remuneration.

GREECE.—This Government permits the free distribution of the Scriptures, and protects the colporteurs. The Gospels in original (old) Greek are used as a reading-book in the higher classes of the primary schools.

INDIA.—The Indian Messenger says that of the 42,000,000 children in India who ought to be at school only, 3,500.000 are receiving any education, and less than 200,000 of these are learning the truths of Christianity.

BERLIN.—The Evan. Anzeiger calls attention to the backwardness of the evangelical section in providing church accommodation for the existing and increasing population, as compared with the readiness of other religious bodies.

BRESLAU.—A meeting of German Rabbis has been held here to appoint a commision which shall undertake a translation into German of the Talmud. All that is doubtful is to be removed from the text, and an accurate harmonious view of the Jewish law is to be given.—Evan.-Kirch. Anzeiger.

THE LEGISLATURE of the State of New York have raised the age below which girls cannot legally consent to their moral ruin, from ten to sixteen years. The age of "legal protection for unmarried women of previous chaste character" against enticement into houses of ill-fame is twenty-five years.

MISS STURROCK, of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East, reporting on the work of the Shaftesbury Home, Peelton, S. Africa, mentions the existence of a Blue Ribbon Army of one hundred and twenty day-school girls, as well as a Young Women's Christian Association of forty-nine members.

MADAGASCAR.—Rev. Thomas Brockway, of the London Missionary Society, writing from Ambositra, in the Betsileo country, Madagascar, says:—"The work of God prospers amongst us. In no one year have I before admitted so many to Church fellowship, and the good influence is spreading through Central Madagascar."

FATHER GAVAZZI, now in his 79th year, is still pleading the cause of his Divine Master and of his country. In the last number of the Piccolo Messaggere, there is a stirring article from his pen on "Suicide." He calls on newspaper editors to cease from chronicling these events, the very notoriety thus given to them being, he thinks, one reason why they are so common.

PARIS.—A correspondent, who sends us an account of a recent visit to one of the conference halls of the McAll Mission, adds that he left Paris with the conviction that this Mission is the most living form of Christianity at work in the gay city. The secret of its power and its success has lain, he believes, in the prayerful spirit of faith and sympathy in which it is carried on.

MORMONS IN SWITZERLAND.—After an inquiry which established the fact that the Mormons are recruited from Switzerland, and that therefore the complaints of the United States Government are justified, the Swiss Federal Council has received from the Berne Cantonal Government a demand that any Mormon propaganda in Switzerland shall be prohibited.

MORMONISM.—There are 400 Mormon bishops in Utah, 2,423 priests, 2,947 teachers, and 6,854 deacons. Salt Lake City is divided into wards of eight or nine blocks each, and a bishop is put in charge of each ward. Under him there are two teachers, whose business it is to learn the employment and income of every resident of the ward, and report the same to the bishop. Then the bishop collects the tenth of each man's income and turns it in to the church authorities. The same complete system exists all over the territory. As the bishops get a good commission on their collections they make very zealous and persistent collectors.

RUSSIA.—Three Protestant missionaries at Tiflis (two Baptists and a Lutheran) were recently arrested for propagating their doctrines, and thrown into prison with the common criminals, and clothed in the prison dress. After ten days' imprisonment, the authorities allowed them four days to arrange their affairs, and they were obliged to sell all they possessed within that time. Then they left Tiflis with their families for Orenburg, in the Ural Mountains, where they were to remain for four years. An immense crowd assembled to bid them adieu. They started on their journey in deep snow, at a time when travelling was both painful and dangerous.—L'Evangéliste.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Canon Body has trained a number of ladies, who are willing to reside among the miners in order to teach, nurse, and otherwise help to humanise the pitmen and their families.

BAPTIST.

Messrs. Fullerton & Smith have been conducting a series of special services at Stowmarket, assisted by Rev. Luther Caws and members of his church.

Rev. Dr. S. Cowdy, formerly minister of Arthur-street Chapel, Camberwell, recently completed his jubilee as a preacher, on the same day on which he reached his seventieth year.

The completion of Rev. Thomas Fisk's ministry in Kidderminster was the occasion of much congratulation. Upwards of £750 was contributed by the congregation towards the debt still remaining on the new church. Mr. Fisk mentioned that whereas at the commencement of his ministry only fourteen joined in Communion, since then five hundred have joined in Christian fellowship with them, and for some years there have been four hundred children in the Sunday-schools.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

A Y.M.C.A. is being formed at Painswick, Gloucestershire. As a result of the United Gospel Mission just concluded there, the clergyman and minister unite in the work.

A Mexican Missionary Society was started by Friends in Mexico on July 3. Its object is firstly to educate its own members, and secondly to extend the Gospel of Christ, especially in Mexico.

The Friends in Ulster number about one thousand one hundred members, besides about half as many adherents, meeting in fourteen places, in five counties. They carry on educational and missionary work, and during the last thirty years have considerably increased.

At Western quarterly meeting, held in Leominster, on September 21, Dr. Tregelles Fox, a returned medical missionary, gave a very interesting address on Madagascar. Besides touching on the history, races, and language of the island, he described the formation, last year, of the "Medical Missionary Academy," which has since licensed several native doctors to practice the healing art, and has at present fifty students under care.

METHODIST.

At Belle Vue, Leeds, an adult Bible-class, held on Sunday afternoons, has over a hundred members, an increase of thirty in three months.

The Wesleyan Mission is doing grand work at the East-end. At Spitalfields the congregations have been nearly doubled, and several persons have come out altogether on the Lord's side.

Instead of disbanding during the winter months, when work in the open air is impracticable, the Nantwich Wesleyan Mission Band have during the last three years conducted cottage and other meetings with the best results.

The closing meeting of Mr. E. Telford's very successful mission in Bethesda Chapel, Hanley, was attended by about two thousand people. A large number of inquirers' names were taken, and great public interest has characterised the services.

The Joyful News caravan has been in the Western Midlands lately, and its progress has been marked with much blessing. At Rochdale and other large towns the masses have been reached, hundreds listening with great attention to the Word of Life.

A large Soldiers' Home, containing above twenty rooms, is being erected by the Primitive Methodist Society at Aldershot, where Rev. G. Litton and his assistants are carrying on a successful work among the soldiers. The Home will soon be ready for opening.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Mr. Frank Pursell Joseland, son of Mr. Alfred Joseland, was ordained on the 14th inst., in Angel-street Chapel, Worcester, to mission work in Amoy, China.

Additional property has just been secured by the Church at Lewisham High-road, adjoining its mission hall in Napier-road, Deptford. Class-rooms, reading-room for working-men and boys, &c. will now be added to the existing premises.

Rev. R. H. Lovell, preaching at Bromley in aid of home missions in the villages, said they had in Kent, including seventy-six churches, 123 places for preaching the Gospel. Of all these only fifty-one are even able to help the common fund, leaving seventy-two needing support.

Those acquainted with Rev. G. S. Reaney's work at Stepney, largely aided, as it is, by the labours of his gifted wife, will be sorry to learn that on account of the ill-health of his children, and to some extent of his own, requiring change of climate, he will probably be obliged to leave this country.

The Chicago Advance says:—Rev. Charles D. Tenney, son of Rev. Daniel Tenney, of Englewood, New Jersey, and until recently a missionary of the American Board in China, has been appointed private tutor to the sons of Viceroy Li Hung Chang, who is, without doubt, the most influential man in the Chinese Empire.

At the annual meeting of Mansfield College, Oxford, held in the lecture-room of Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham, Rev. Dr. Fairbairn said the departure had resulted in unanticipated good. The increase in the number of students meant an increase of men already educated and prepared to enter into the work of ministerial training. A further sum of £10,000 is required to complete the building fund, which now amounts to £28,000.

SALVATION ARMY.

There are now six hundred cadets in training for officers.

At Lutterworth, a town of 3000 inhabitants, where the Army has been at work about five months, one hundred and fifty persons have professed conversion.

The Army has opened a Home for gentlemen inebriates, of which particulars can be obtained on application to Captain Gysin, at 101, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.

Mr. G. Railton, after a general review of the work in various parts of the world, says, "We are going forward all round the world faster than we know ourselves, and with glorious hopes for the extension of the Army everywhere."

PRESBYTERIAN.

Mr. George Williams commenced a series of evangelistic services on Sunday last in Dr. Millar Nicolson's church, Bristol.

An eight days' mission was recently held at the Presbyterian Hall, Lewes, conducted by Mr. J. Barnabas Bain.

The Maharani Dhuleep Singh, whose death took place recently in London, was educated at the American Presbyterian Mission, under the personal care of Dr. Lansing.

A new hall has been added to the church at Canonbury (minister, Rev. George Wilson). A week of special services in connection with the opening was commenced on Monday last.

Rev. R. M. Thornton delivered on Sunday evening, at Camden-road Church, the first of a course of Monthly Sermons to Young Men, to be continued during the winter on the fourth Sabbath of the month. A "Young Men's Guild" is to be formed next Sunday morning at 9.45. Subject, "Amusements: where should a Christian draw the line?" introduced by the pastor.

At Brunswick-street Church, Manchester, Rev. W. Rigby Murray has established a special service for young women on the third Sunday evening of each month, in addition to one for young men on the first Sunday evening. These are very largely attended. A series of special musical services on Sunday afternoons, for the benefit of non-churchgoers, is also about to be organised.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The early and unexpected death of Rev. R. J. Jones, of Ballycastle, co. Antrim, an earnest and devoted Methodist minister, has taken place.

The annual meetings of the southern branches of the Irish Temperance League have been held in Cork, Waterford, Limerick, Tralee, Mallow, &c., and have been well attended.

Rev. Chas. Inwood has closed a successful series of evangelistic services in the Methodist Church at Bray. The word came with power to many hearts, and the addresses on Holiness were especially impressive.

Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, of London, preached on Sunday week, in connection with the opening services, in the handsome new Presbyterian Church at the Crescent, Belfast. He lectured the following evening on "The Second Advent."

A Convention for the Promotion of Holiness was held on Monday and Tuesday last week, in East-wall Methodist Church, Londonderry. There was a good attendance, and appropriate addresses were delivered by Revs. Jas. Donnelly, R. C. Johnson, and Chas. Inwood.

The annual Conference of the Church of Ireland Young Men's Association has been held in Belfast; addresses bearing on the spiritual improvement of the members were delivered by Revs. W. E. Burroughs, James Gallie, Mr. R. L. Hamilton, J.P., and others.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Mr. John Allaway, a valued member of the Baptist Church at Thames, New Zealand.—Mrs. James Pugh, wife of the Baptist minister at Stratford-on-Avon.—Mr. Henry Bobby, an ardent member of the Baptist Church at Diss.—Mrs. Payne, an active worker in the Methodist Society at Market Rasen.—Rev. James Ormerod Hill, for twenty-seven years pastor of Eignbrook Congregational Church, Hereford, and formerly of Merthyr Tydvil.—Mr. W. J. Lewis, for many years deacon of the Poultry Chapel.—Mr. Thomas Jameson, a devoted member of the Vicarage Walks Baptist Church, Walsall.—Rev. Hugh Rose, first minister of St. George's Presbyterian Church, Stockton-on-Tees; afterwards of Grosvenor-square Church, Manchester.—Mr. Thomson (killed in the explosion on board the Elbe), a Presbyterian elder, and father of a probationer of the London Presbytery.—Rev. Canon Swainson, Master of Christ's College, Cambridge.—Mr. J. S. Parkman, of Finchley, for many years one of the most distinguished laymen in the Primitive Methodist Connexion.—Rev. Robert Grant, the oldest Fellow of Winchester College.

MOROCCO.—There are at least 250,000 Jews in Morocco, besides tribes in the Sahara, who are not mentioned in the statistics of the Synagogue. The Jew of Morocco (as everywhere else) bears the distinct mark of nationality. The climate of the country, and their employment and habits have had their effect upon their appearance; their women are beautiful, and generally modest and industrious. Intellectually their condition is at a low standard, but they show much force of character, and on an emergency evince a courage that amounts to heroism. It is the Jews who have given a stimulus to commerce in Morocco, who have introduced civilisation and intercourse with European nations. The Jews of the interior have just been visited by a Christian missionary, Mr. T. E. Zerbib, of Mogador. These people are less instructed and poorer than the Jews of the coast; but the fanaticism of former days has given place to complete indifference. Still Mr. Zerbib has induced them to buy the Scriptures, and a large number of religious tracts has been distributed. —L'Ami d'Israël.

HOME.

The enormous advance in the use of opium in one form or another is exciting attention.

The fourth National Coffee Tavern Conference was held lately at Saltaire. Forty-three towns sent delegates.

There are now fourteen mission smacks with the North Sea Fleet, and their temperance work has been greatly blessed.

Alderlee, a favourite resort of Manchester people is, one of the justices says, made intolerable on Sundays by hordes of roughs from Manchester, who freely use the public-houses.

The Reformer fears an attempt is being made in Glasgow to revive the "dark box" arrangement in public-houses; one strongly condemned as encouraging drunkenness and immorality.

The English Anti-Tobacco Society and Anti-Narcotic League, during the nineteen years since its formation, has issued 213,234 pamphlets and 1,308,064 leaflets. Its operations extend to the Continents of Europe and America.

FOREIGN.

A writer in Scribner's Monthly says "a wine-drinking clergyman is a soldier disarmed."

Four hundred convicts in the State prison of Nashville, Tennessee, have signed an appeal to the State in favour of Prohibition.

The new Belgian liquor law is now in operation; owing to its severity, not only against drunkards, but also against those who supply the liquor, its operation will be noted with great interest.

The International Temperance Congress was held September 8 to 10 at Zurich. Important papers were read and discussed. An agent of the United States Brewers' Association tried to pass as a friend to the objects of the Congress, but was exposed by Mr. J. Malins.

The owner of a manufactory in Rhode Island one Saturday paid his workmen 3500 francs in new bank notes, which he took the precaution to mark. The following Monday when the publicans of the place gave in the receipts of the Saturday night, 2000 francs worth of these very notes were found amongst them.

In the annual address before the Chautauqua Missionary Institute, Dr. Alexander Sutherland, Missionary Secretary of the Methodist Church of Canada, declared that if it had not been for the whisky of the white man, the Canadian Government would never have had an Indian trouble to settle, nor have needed to shed one drop of the red man's blood.

In Sweden and Norway no intoxicants can be sold except at a place where good food, coffee, and other non-alcoholic drinks are also kept constantly on hand. The dealer is allowed to make a profit on the latter, but he is stringently prohibited from selling any intoxicating liquor except at cost. The idea is that dealers will thus endeavour to promote the sale of non-intoxicating drinks, upon which he does make a profit, and discourage buyers from drinking liquors upon which he makes none.

LA CANADA.—Some poor peasants who were offered work by a rich landowner told him they "were Protestants, and they could not work on the Lord's day." He replied, "Very well, as long as you work well I shall say nothing about that." During their work he often told them to come to his house to sing and recite their hymns, and to explain the Gospel to his family, and when they had finished the work he promised not to forget them when he next wanted men.

NEW GUINEA: A TEACHER MASSACRED.—Intelligence has been received at the office of the London Missionary Society that a native teacher has been killed. The man who has fallen was one that could ill be spared. He was a Rarotongan, Tauraki by name, who had done yeoman service at Motumotu, a station not far from Port Moresby, and he fell a victim to a murderous attack made by an inland tribe with whom the Motumotuans were at enmity. His adopted child and five Motumotuans were killed at the same sime, and his wife was so severely wounded that, although she eventually recovered, she had been left for dead by the murderers, being pierced by no less than six arrows.

JEWS IN PARIS.—A blessed work is being carried on among the thousands of Jews in this city. Rev. L. C. Mamlock, missionary of the London Jews' Society, gives Gospel addresses in various parts of the city during the week, and these are well attended by Jews who listen attentively to the word spoken. A French hymn is first sung, which is heartily joined in, and then the Scriptures are read in Hebrew, French, and German, the lecture following. Thus week by week large numbers of Jews in Paris have the everlasting Gospel preached to them, and at their request Bibles, Testaments, &c., are distributed amongst them by the colporteur and other Christian friends who aid in this work. A mission-room is greatly needed.

ROMANISM IN SCANDINAVIA.—The Weekly Register a Roman Catholic organ, says:—"The Church [of Rome] continues to make great strides in Scandinavia. Many Lutherans have been converted at Stockholm, and there is so much good will towards Catholics that at a recent Fancy Fair held for a Catholic hospital the sum of 38,000 francs was obtained, mostly from non-Catholics. Though Catholic emancipation in Denmark dates from only 1848, there are now 4000 Catholics in the country, served by some 30 priests, with schools taught by sisters of religious communities. The Jesuit fathers have a college in Copenhagen, with over forty students. In Norway, before 1845, Catholic priests were forbidden the country under pain of death. Twenty years ago there were only 130 Catholics; now there are over 800, with 20 priests; while sisters of charity have the management of two hospitals and eight schools."

Appeals.

MRS. CAMBIE, 40, Lucerne-road, Highbury, London, N., appeals fo Gospel books and tracts for distribution amongst railway-men in connection with the work of the Leeds Railway Mission.

A NORWEGIAN LADY has it laid upon her heart to carry the Gospel to her own country. She hopes to go soon, and asks any who are interested to communicate with her, and she will gladly give particulars. Address—NORWEGIAN, care of MRS. DEAN, 83, Cheesehill-street, Winchester.

THE FINSBURY-PARK VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION is in great need of help for the furtherance of its work in connection with the Rescue Home, of which MRS. BAILHACHE, 43, Hanley-road, N., is superintendent. Any who are interested in this truly noble effort to rescue our tempted and perishing sisters are requested to communicate with Mrs. Bailhache.

UNION HALL MISSION.—Mr. R. BILKE, Abergeldie, Greenhill-park, Harlesden, N.W., writes that there is a great need for better accommodation at the Queen's Park Hall, Kilburn-lane (one of the branches of this Mission). There is land at the back of the hall on which a capital room could be erected at a small cost. He earnestly desires help towards this object.

TUMKUR ORPHANAGE, INDIA.—Rev. G. W. SAWDAY, 7, Hobart-street, Leicester, earnestly appeals for help to enable him to carry on his Indian Orphanage, where 130 boys (now Christian, but formerly heathen) are being trained, and sent out into the world as evangelists, teachers, blacksmiths, carpenters, &c. His funds are exhausted, and £2000 are urgently needed for this important and successful work.

HYDE PARK HALL MISSION.—Metropolitan Music-hall.—Opening night, Sunday, October 2, 6.30 p.m.

BURGESS HILL, NEAR BRIGHTON.—For some time services have been held regularly in a schoolroom here, and in consequence of notice having been received that the schoolroom can no longer be used for this purpose, a small house and shop have been taken in which to hold the meetings in future. The shop is to be fitted up as a coffee-bar, and a reading-room is to be opened. The people in the village are mostly very poor, and help is asked for this effort. Communications may be addressed to Mr. T. JONES, Secretary of the local Y.M.C.A., 2, Church Villas, Burgess-hill, Sussex.

Subscriptions Received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Monday, September 26, 1887.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

SPECIAL MISSION IN INDIA.—The funds available for the Special Mission to the Native Church of India and Ceylon now amounts to nearly £1400. We hear, however, with much regret, that Rev. F. W. Dodd has broken down, and that he may not be able to go out. It is, however, hoped that Colonel Oldham, who is so well known as an evangelist at Bombay, will in any case go out as a ninth missioner. Before the mission starts a meeting will be held, at which the missioners will be commended in prayer to God.—Record.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION

(INSTITUTED 1844).

People visited are bargemen, watermen, sailors and firemen (English and Foreign), soldiers, emigrants, cabin passengers, and all "who go down to the sea in ships."

There are some 35,000 emigrants leaving the Thames every year, and it is no exaggeration to say that the bulk of them know not God and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Chaplain reports:—"Visited the Arabic, screw steamer, with 800 emigrants for Canada; most were foreigners. Supplied each individual with a portion of Scripture in his own language. Gave to each English man and woman a copy of the New Testament, and in conversation with some of them, I endeavoured to set before them the person and work of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

Evangelical Hospital for Spezia, Italy

REFEREES:—

Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Leicester.
PERCY C. WEBB, Esq., Worcester House, 35, Eastcheap, London, E.C.
Rev. JOHN S. ANDERSON, Missionary, Spezia.
GEORGE HENFREY, Esq., Silver Foundry, Pertusola, Spezia.
Messrs. ALEX. MACBEAN & Co., Bankers, Rome and Leghorn.

AN urgent appeal is made to Christians in Britain to help in the foundation of a Protestant Hospital for Spezia, of which this increasing city and its neighbourhood have been for some years greatly in need.

Spezia, whose famous gulf and arsenal are Italy's greatest Naval centre, is rapidly becoming a rich field for evangelisation. The Gospel has now been preached here for more than 20 years, converting many souls from Romanism, and we have to-day several growing churches of various denominations. There is also being carried on a most important and hopeful educational work in the Evangelical Schools, which are daily attended by an average of 600 children.

About 80 English vessels called at this port during the past year with coals, machinery, mineral ore, and corn, and the day is not far when that number will be more than doubled. This greatly increases the need of a Protestant Hospital also for the poor sailors who may meet there with an English pastor and friends, that will understand and cheer them up, especially when their ship happens to sail and they are left behind sickly and lonely.

The annual expenses for the proposed Hospital will amount to about £400, of which already £100 have been partly given, partly promised, and £32 subscribed. Suitable premises have lately been secured, but they want fitting up. If 400 readers of THE CHRISTIAN were to subscribe just £1 each, this useful Institution could be opened with the beginning of next year.

The following gentlemen will gladly receive and acknowledge any donations sent to them for the Hospital:—

Messrs. COUTTS & Co., Bankers, 59, Strand, London, W.C.
JOHN ANDERSON, ESQ., Park-gardens, Glasgow.
Messrs. ALEX. MACBEAN & Co., Bankers, 12, Vià della Madonna, Leghorn.

THE LATE MISS MARY ANN COLE,

Of the Mount Hermon Orphan Homes.

THERE lies before us an unpretentious little pamphlet of sixteen pages, dated January 1, 1866. At the head of the cover are these words, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake." This pamphlet constitutes the first report of the Orphan Homes, founded and conducted by our late much-esteemed friend, Miss MARY ANN COLE; the text upon its forefront correctly expresses the beautiful spirit of self-abnegation which from first to last marked her devoted life. The story of her experiences is eminently calculated to reflect glory on the Lord whom she so faithfully served, and also to encourage the faith and efforts of other servants of Christ.

Miss Cole was born in 1837, at Portsmouth, and was for some years engaged in the service of a large firm in the West-end of London. From the time of her conversion, in 1860, she was possessed with a strong desire to know the Lord's will as to her future service. While seeking this knowledge by prayer, she did not sit down and wait for a special revelation before doing anything, but rather looked for the answer in the common course of Providence. Whatsoever her hand found to do, she did; without delay she engaged herself in Sunday-school work. About this time she was asked by Mr. C. Marshall, afterwards minister of Grafton-street Chapel, to attend a meeting for prayer. Amongst other petitions offered there was one that the Lord would incline some person to begin a day-school in the rooms which were then occupied, without receiving a salary; but in faith that God would send many children who should pay two or three pence weekly, according to their age. The chief object was to bring the little ones to Jesus. Miss Cole tells in her first report how a desire to respond was laid upon her heart. It was an important step, as she would have to give up her situation, and had no other means of support. However, every obstacle seemed to yield before her trusting faith; she resigned her situation and commenced the work forthwith.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Boning & Small, Baker-street, W.)

The children came by tens; each succeeding week more were added, until they numbered fifty.

Thus the work went on for about five years, during which time the school increased to more than one hundred children, who were instructed in the Scriptures, and in the elements of a plain education. In February, 1864, a strong desire arose in Miss Cole's mind to add to the school a Home for Orphans. After earnest prayer, a removal was made from 51, Great Marlborough street, to Castle-street, where, with her helpers, she began to occupy the rooms above the school; they were originally workshops, and very old, requiring many repairs to make them habitable.

That which mainly influenced her in seeking to establish a Home was the fact that, although many of the scholars in the day-school were brought to the knowledge of Christ, yet there was much discouragement, chiefly from their ungodly parents, who neglected them all day, and at night let them go on the stage. The school was near to one of the largest theatres in London, where they could earn 6s. per week at certain seasons of the year. This led her to pray for a Home where they could receive Christian training.

The first year three orphans were received; at the end of three years there were twenty, but the place was too small for the requirements, so that a removal was made to 55, Cambridge-road, Kilburn; a kind friend becoming security for her. The work continued to grow, and in 1869 a further enlargement took place, by the addition of the house, No. 49, in the same road. In November, 1870, a legacy of £500 was received, and she was enabled to purchase the house 49, Cambridge-road. By and by she was enabled to take a third house for the growing wants of the Institution.

From remarks in the twelfth report it appears that Miss Cole contemplated the erection of a separate building as an Orphanage. This idea was never carried into effect, but an approach to it was made in the erection some years after of a cottage in Mill-lane, West Hampstead. A gift of £500 had been received for the purpose of building a cottage to accommodate twenty of the most delicate of the orphans. This branch of the Home, named "Praise Cottage," was opened in 1883, and is now filled with a bright, happy family. The latest addition to the Institution is that of a Convalescent Home at Margate. The need of such a place had long been felt, and made the subject of much prayer. At length the way was opened, and the fulfilment of the desire is recorded by Miss Cole in her last report.

As to the means of supporting her in her chosen work, the principle upon which Miss Cole acted from the first was that of simple trust in God; the annual reports record many encouraging and edifying examples of needs graciously supplied in answer to prayer. She resolved not to incur any debt, not even to the extent of running weekly accounts with the tradespeople. Her faith was many a time severely tested, but she was able to record that at every moment of trial deliverance came, sometimes in very marvellous ways. The children were taken into her counsel in laying these burdens before God, and were thus nurtured in a practical acquaintance with the principle of trusting God for the supply of daily wants.

The number of orphans at present in the five Homes is 120. Since the commencement of the work 500 orphans have been received and trained. Communication is kept up with old scholars and former inmates as much as possible. Many of the children have given satisfactory evidence of true conversion, and their subsequent life in the Home and in various situations has confirmed the testimony of their lips.

Miss Cole's physical strength was never great, and for a long time previous to her lamented departure she had been in a very delicate state of health. At the close of 1885 the bursting of a blood-vessel laid her aside for a considerable time; though after a while she returned to her work, yet it was painfully evident to all her friends that her illness had seriously undermined her health. A few weeks ago she went to reside at the newly opened branch at Margate, with the hope of recruiting her strength, but the second rupture of a blood-vessel again laid her low. As weeks passed by it became evident that the end was drawing nigh. When it became clear to herself that no hope of recovery remained, she proceeded with great calmness and cheerfulness to make final arrangements for the future of the work, especially committing it to the care of her beloved cousin Mrs. Parry, who, for ten years had aided her in it, and on whom the work of superintendence now devolves.

Thus, after a life of quiet, lowly service for Christ, characterised by child-like simplicity of faith, and an unwearying devotion, our friend fell asleep in Jesus, on September 10, in the fiftieth year of her age. The funeral took place on September 15 at West Hampstead Cemetery, the remains being followed to the grave by the orphans, and a large number of friends.

The responsibility which now rests upon Miss Cole's successor is no light one, and we fervently hope she will be encouraged and sustained by the practical sympathy of many friends.

MR. WILLIAM CATLIN writes:—The requisite amount not being forthcoming in September, the idea of building in Ventnor has been abandoned by us, though a friend of ours in the neighbourhood is in treaty for the site. The moneys I received have all been returned to the donors except one small sum sent anonymously. Through the Lord's mercy I am again at my post in Clerkenwell with a renewal of health, and, as it would appear, just in time to secure more commodious premises for our mission work in the very centre of this great metropolis.

WORLDLINESS AND ITS REMEDY—2.

AN ADDRESS TO THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE, ABERDEEN.

By Rev. CLEMENT CLEMANCE, D.D.

THREE METHODS OF STUDY.

In precise accordance with the triple aspect of the Holy Volume, are there three methods of studying it.

(1) It may be studied, from a linguistic and historic point of view, as indicating in its own line the evolution of the race, of thought, of language, and of literature. For this kind of study, scholars alone are competent.

(2) It may also be studied with the aims and ends of a reverent historic student, as he notes therein the forward movement of God in providence and redemption; his revealed righteousness and salvation in Christ; the authority of the risen Saviour as Adminstrator of the affairs of earth, and as sending down the Holy Ghost to complete and consummate redemption's mighty plan.

(3) Or, it may be studied likewise for devotional and practical ends, as a book inspired by the Holy Ghost, in which his inbreathing is distinctly perceived, and through which He inbreathes new life to those who thus study it. In such cases, there will be at least four purposes for which the study thereof will be pursued. (1) That we may thereby come to a better knowledge of God and of his ways. (2) That we may know and follow it as the adequate and only rule of faith and practice; (3) that we may learn therefrom what our Lord would have us be and do; and (4) that we may absorb into our own being the spirit of truth and love which pervades the Book.

Of these three orders of study, none need be barren in blessing to the reverent inquirer; the first, however, will be limited to a few; the second, though open to more, yet requires for its thorough pursuit more leisure than most have at their command; the third is open to us all, and incumbent on all.

Each order of study, again, will probably lead the student to adopt a distinctive formula as expressive of the issue thereof. We should not wonder if the result of the first should be summed up thus:—Early authorship; late editorship. This seems, practically, to meet the claims of ancient traditions and the demands of modern (believing) criticism. If the second course of study be adopted, the results of it might be put thus:—The later the date, the brighter the light; while the pith of the Book's contents may be summed up in the words, He cometh; He came; He is coming again.

But the third kind of study will yield results that are richer, grander far. There is diffused through the Book a Divine aroma, the fragrance of which will exhale as we bend over its leaves: there breathes through all the Divine Spirit, and in the in-breathed word will be heard the whispers of the Father speaking to us as children, "When thou goest, it shall lead thee; when thou sleepest, it shall keep thee; when thou awakest, it shall talk with thee"; so that we shall come to feel and to say, in the words of one of the most distinguished critical scholars of this age:—

> If I am asked why I receive Scripture as the Word of God, and as the only perfect rule of faith and life, I answer, with all the fathers of the Protestant Church, "Because the Bible is the only record of the redeeming love of God; because in the Bible alone I find God drawing near to man in Christ Jesus, and declaring to us in Him his will for our salvation. And this record I know to be true by the witness of his Spirit in my heart, whereby I am assured that none other than God Himself is able to speak such words to my soul."

Even so. "Speaking to my soul." Here the devout scholar and the unlettered Christian meet. They do not conflict with each other: they strengthen and confirm each other's faith. Such conclusions as these do not conflict with any genuine scholarship whatever, though they far transcend any results to which scholarship alone can attain. These, the highest results of all, may be indicated in words like these:—

"I will never forget thy precepts; for with them Thou hast quickened me." "The law of thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver." "We have known and believed the love that God hath to us." "As many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and on the Israel of God!"

This, this is the study of the Word, for which we claim that it will be the corrective of worldliness and of erroneous teaching.

Shall we now, instead of thinking either of the Book which is studied, or of the study of it, turn our attention to the man who so studies the Book?

THE STUDENT.

Let us set him before us. Look at him. He comes day by day to the heart of the Book. He feels the heart-throb thereof. He inbreathes its spirit. The inspired volume inspires him. A power is in it, and goes along with it, that attends no other book in the world, and its formative action will be shown in the growth and transformation of the man. The truth in the page will be transmuted to life in the soul; and it is on account of the positive results thereof on his thinking and action that it will become so powerful an antidote against worldliness and error.

The loving words of the Father, as in the Book He speaks to his children, will sweetly subdue and control him. They will be as gentle whispers to him by day and by night; kind monitions to guard from ill, tender comforts to soothe in sorrow, and faithful guides to direct in perplexity. They will gird him for service, shield him in temptation, nerve him for conflict, check him in peril, and sustain him in care. The redemption in Christ Jesus, there set forth on historic lines, will be a reality within him, its own witness and seal that the Word is truth. He will be brought thereby into close contact with the unseen and eternal, and the reality of the invisible kingdom of our Lord will be to him placed beyond a doubt, because of its actual existence within him. He will himself manifest that very knowledge which some deem hopelessly beyond his reach, and will be the living proof of a supernatural potency to which the world can never attain. Yea, more! His whole caste of thinking and life will be moulded by, and will be a proof of, the reality of God's saving power. The same mind will be in him that was also in Christ Jesus, for in his view the very noblest order of character will be that which can sacrifice and suffer for another's weal. While Christ crucified for him will be the centre-point of his hope, Christ formed within him will be the main feature of his life. In a word, he will grow like the truth on which he feeds, absorbing the spirit of the Book so that, in his own spirit, temper, acts, and conversation, he will hold forth the Word of life as a lamp on the pathway to the "Father's house!"

The positive effects of the study of the Word being such as these, it cannot but also be that such forms of worldliness and error as those to which we have already referred will be impossible to him. Since his thinking, feeling, action, tastes, sympathies, are moulded by God's Word, apart from "the commandments and doctrines of men," he will care less and less for human tradition, his inquiry will ever be, What hath the Lord spoken?

To him the religious divisions of Christendom will be—must be—a cause of sorrow; nor will he be slow to perceive the carnality out of which many of them arise. His religious convictions being formed under the teaching of the Word of God only, the artificial boundaries which man has set up will be deemed of little worth. High-sounding names will be nothing to him. The pompous titles of ecclesiastics will be shorn of their value. The true unity of believers in Christ will be seen. The fact that the true Church is the creation of the Holy Ghost alone being once recognised, the figment of Apostolic succession will be disallowed. He will not believe in the magic words of an official priesthood imparting to the water, bread, or wine, any spiritual efficacy, nor in their ensuring that any such efficacy shall attend their use. Those who are good enough for Christ to receive, he will deem good enough for him. The points on which believers are one he will dwell on with delight, and he will care less for those which part them as yet off from each other.

Nor will the earthly worldliness be in a less degree shorn of its pretentious attractions and deceptive glare. Every sphere of life will be sanctified by the Word of God and prayer. He will increasingly deprecate party spirit in politics, and will care more and more for righteousness alone. In commerce nothing but integrity will be allowed. In social life he will court not the great so much as the good. He will delight to consecrate his gains to Christ, because he has yielded himself to Him, and will set conventional maxims and customs at nought when they conflict with the word of Christ. He will care less to stand well in society than to be approved of his Lord. With the Word that reveals Christ to him there will come a power that transforms him into the same image from glory to glory, and that proves him to be in no unintelligible sense a temple of the living God. The world will cease to charm. His whole nature will be reset in the reverse direction. "For me to live is Christ" will express his sole conception of a life worthy

The convictions of such a one will be as remarkable for their strength as for their governing power. As those convictions were not formed by man, so by man they cannot be disturbed. The Positivist may come and urge on him the service of humanity. He will reply that the world has never yet seen such glorious service for man as that which has been inspired by the Spirit and the Word!

The Agnostic may come, saying, You can never know God. He will reply, Friend, it is too late in the day for you to tell me that. I have found Him here. For "hereby do we know that we know Him, if we keep his commandments."

Let the Anti-Supernaturalist come and say, The supernatural is impossible. Again, he will reply, It is useless to tell me that, for through the Spirit which breathes in the Book I have risen with Christ and am seeking the things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God.

Let the Materialist come, and say, You are but matter and force. He will reply, That all depends on what kind of force you mean. I know that in and through the Book there is a Divine force creating anew my whole nature, and thrilling through every fibre of my soul.

Let the Secularist come, and say, Ah! one world at a time is enough for me! Then he will reply, You are mistaken. You suppose that we are thinking only of a present world and a future one; if that were all, you might possibly be right. But it is not so; there is a lower world and an upper one. They are both present. In both I live. Already I am in the higher world, and actually sit in the heavenly places in Christ, and once in this realm they cannot die any more!

FINAL WORD OF APPEAL.

Christian Brethren,—We must get men back to their Bibles. No serious ill nor serious error will have root-hold or foot-hold where the spirit of the Book is absorbed into the soul. If the Bible is universally studied thus, our churches will thrive; if its study be neglected, they will assuredly decline. If professing Christians cease to be able to wield aright the Spirit's keen and piercing sword, the hierarchies of error will soon ride over them in triumph. We must have men who, through the Book, have convictions which the world cannot impart, if we would have men whose convictions the world cannot destroy. Yea, and we must have men who study the Book in order to translate it into holy living. Thank God we have many such, but we want of such thousands more. To form such men was the Book given. This result it will have, when read with faith and prayer and made the food of the soul; a result which, as described by an Apostle, is one which we may well crave for ourselves and others, "That the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works." We may not aim at less. We cannot wish for more.

FACTORY GIRLS, BARKING.—Rev. Thomas Davies, Congregational minister, Barking, writes with respect to this work:—In addition to the many clothed and placed in situations in and around London, about twenty-six have, during the last few months, been sent to Canada, under the valuable auspices of the Self-Help Emigration Society. Several others are willing to emigrate. The season for Canada, however, is now nearly closed, and my resources are almost exhausted. I hope still to send a few more out there in the early spring. THE LORD IS COMING!

Jesus, Lord, the days are fleeting,
  Swift, the index moves of time,
Pointing to the blissful meeting,
  In the glory-cloud sublime;
When, at last, from heaven descending,
  Thou wilt come to claim thy bride,
And, her woes for ever ending,
  Seat her, glorious, at thy side.

Ah! how long her heart hath waited,
  On her pilgrim path of woe!
Persecuted, scorned, and hated,
  By the World—her ruthless foe.
Oh, with what abiding sorrow,
  In the world's ensnaring coil,
Hath she waited for the morrow
  Of her lengthened day of toil.

But the end, the end is nearing,
  And her watchful eyes discern
Symptoms of her Lord's appearing,
  Tokens of his glad return.
So she waiteth, fondly waiteth,
  Patient in expectant love,
Strong in hope that ne'er abateth,
  And a faith that nought can move.

THE SPEZIA MISSION.

In the year 1866, the Spezia Mission took form and shape, and demonstrated life by the sailing away from Liverpool, in the good ship Morocco, of its first three pioneers, resolved on giving to the Italians the bread of life. Now it gives evidence of having been planted by the wisdom, love, and power of God Himself in Italian soil, for the benefit of that long oppressed land. It embraces upwards of twenty stations, with twenty sub-stations, eight Bible day-schools, attended by more than four hundred scholars, and thirteen Sunday-schools; the whole work superintended by five British missionaries, assisted by twenty-four native helpers, conducting thirty-five public weekly evangelical Italian services, with over 160 communicants; in addition, meetings are held for the edification of the church, and a special mission to Italian women and young men, averaging 130 meetings in the year. The Bible day-schools furnish one of the most helpful agencies for benefiting multitudes of Italian youths, the present happy results of which are manifest to all who look for them; while at the same time they are closely allied with blessings as far-reaching as eternity.

Is there not a fitness in asking the friends of the Mission, now that it has attained to its majority, to give it a position that will help it to be a vessel of mercy to the now languishing millions of Italy? An earnest and united effort on the part of all the friends of the Mission might, with ease, put it in possession of an income of £5000. This sum would give a new impulse to many agencies now in operation, besides aiding largely to enter numerous fields awaiting the earnest teacher and evangelist; and, at the same time, would bring in ample funds for sustaining, in efficiency, the Orphanage which is now, through the great liberality of earnest Christians, rapidly being prepared to receive inmates.

Casa Alberto, Spezia, Italy.

THE MISSIONARY TRAINING COLLEGE at Puerto Santa Maria, in Spain, is about to be re-opened after the summer vacation, and Mr. Moore is most anxious to find one or more friends who would be willing to support a student at the College for a year. The cost is £30. He has now seven young men whose maintenance is provided for, but he would like to take three others. The training of native evangelists is at present the great need of Spain, as efficient and trustworthy men are few, and their training in Switzerland,

AMERICAN NOTES.

FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

Bible-carriages have not as yet come into vogue with us. We hear of only one, superintended by Mr. C. Montgomery in San Francisco, but Gospel-carriages will likely become an American "institution." Mr. Henry Pearson, of Boston, has had one on the road for two summers, which has proved an excellent evangelising agency.

The carriage is a large covered waggon with seats for twenty persons and room for an organ. It is drawn by two stout horses, and awakens curiosity on its onward march. A large platform is attached by irons and chains to the rear, so that the preacher has behind him the organ and occupants of the carriage, who are generally singers and fellow-helpers. It was the writer's privilege to preach from this moving pulpit in the city of Lynn to a very large congregation on the high rock overlooking the ocean. The scenery was magnificent, the day charming, the congregation attentive, and the occasion one of unusual solemnity. Large numbers of Irish Catholics listened with interest, and with becoming respect. Mr. and Mrs. Pearson carry on their mission through the Gospel-carriage from town to town as a work of faith and labour of love.

How frequently one meets with illustrations of Mr. Spurgeon's world-wide influence. When Rev. Sam P. Jones (better known as the evangelist, Sam Jones) entered upon his first circuit a dozen years ago, as a Methodist preacher in Georgia, he had only three books—the Bible, the fifth volume of Mr. Spurgeon's "Sermons," and an old volume of "Sermon Skeletons." He writes:—

> Of course my Bible was the book of all books to me, but I read and re-read the volume of Spurgeon's sermons until my soul was stirred with the spirit of the man. I remember how I have frequently read the text of one of his sermons, and then read the sermon. Then I would read my text and say, "If Spurgeon treated his text that way, how shall I treat mine"? And much of the directness of my style I owe to Spurgeon, the grandest preacher of the nineteenth century, if what a man does is a test of what a man is.

We wish Brother Sam had imbibed the London preacher's doctrine as well as style; we doubt not that his power would thereby be multiplied.

A propos of Sam Jones, here is an astonishing fact, that when in Chicago he preached to a million and a half of people daily. Such a phenomenon illustrates the tremendous energy and aggressiveness of American journalism. Not only did the Chicago papers publish his sermons in full, but those of St. Louis and Cincinnati did the same. Nine thousand words of two, three, or four daily sermons, were flashed out from Chicago on eighteen different telegraph wires every night. These different leading journals have an aggregate circulation of 300,000. The common allowance is that of five readers to a paper, which figures up to the astonishing number of 1,500,000. When will English journalists see that in order to conserve the best interests of their constituents, they should utilise their columns more for religious reports? Let the old "Thunderer" but lead in flashing out the light of God's word, and in thundering forth the precepts of his law, and others will soon follow.

Another item of American enterprise had illustration in Chicago last November, during the session of the great Prophetic Conference. There were generally six addresses delivered daily throughout all the sessions, and every word appeared next morning in an eight page special of The Inter-Ocean. The newspaper plates were duplicated for Mr. F. H. Revell, the publisher, from which he issued in less than two weeks the book called "Prophetic Studies," containing twenty-five lengthy addresses, besides special letters, &c. Within four weeks from the close of the Conference nearly 10,000 copies of the book were sold. In addition, thousands of Inter-Ocean copies carried the teaching of this Conference far and near. We heartily wish that Mildmay and other noble Conferences had such aid from the secular Press of London. Our journalism is not more religious, but simply more enterprising, than that of Great Britain.

Two highly important Conventions are to be held later on; one on "The Plenary Inspiration of the whole Bible," arranged to take place in Philadelphia, November 15—20; the other under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance, to consider the present lapsed condition of religious life in the States. Great interest is already shown towards the discussion on inspiration. Leading theologians will present its many phases, but entirely from the old orthodox standpoint of verbal inspiration.

There is still great public interest shown in the case of Edward McGlynn, D.D., the excommunicated priest of New York City. The ecclesiastic, as you will know, was "cut off from the communion of the Church, from its sacraments and participation in its prayers, and deprived of Christian burial after death." This severest penalty has previously been visited only upon four priests during Rome's foothold in these United States. It has now lost its terrors after the rough handling McGlynn has given the Pope, the Propaganda, and the whole priestcraft. Many priests are in sympathy with the deposed pastor of St. Stephen's, but we wait to see who will dare to ally themselves with him in his independent attitude towards Rome.

McGlynn's influence, unlike that of every other excommunicated priest, holds sway over the Catholic people. He was always deservedly popular; now he is the idol of thousands whose allegiance to holy mother Church is strained almost to the breaking point. Before five thousand people (five thousand more vainly sought entrance to the spacious building), nearly all of whom were Roman Catholics, of every grade in the social scale, the doughty priest, in a thrilling speech, of purely Protestant sentiment, among other bold utterances remarked:—

> It has become necessary to teach you to distinguish between the blunders, the stupidity, the cupidity, and the actual crimes of a mere ecclesiastical machine, and that ideal Church of Christ without spot, without wrinkle, the spouse of our Lord and Master, purchased with the terrible price of his blood, whose garments are washed exceeding white, whose teachings have fired the hearts and inspired the minds of saints, and seers, and sages, and have taken barbarous nations from the woods and from their rude huts to civilise them and [illegible] them the greatest nations of the world! It is necessary that we should learn to distinguish between men and Christ, between the allegiance that we owe to the Christian Church and the very limited obedience that we owe to an authority whose only reason for being is that it may build up and not tear down; that it may, in the language of Christian piety, edify and not disedify; that it may convert men to Christ and not drive whole nations from Him; that it may exemplify in every land and age the humility, patience, charity, and self-sacrifice of the Master; that it may teach men in a selfish age to forget themselves; that it may fire them as did the Master with the divine enthusiasm of humanity; and that it may, in spite of the cupidity of perverted hearts, teach men to be unselfish, and in spite of the passions that disintegrate human society and separate man from man to-day, cause to prevail the magnificent Gospel of the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God. As long as the Catholic people of Ireland, of America, of Poland, or of Germany consent to let the Roman machine, of which the Pope himself is but a mere puppet, do what it pleases with them, so long will this Roman machine, with the Pope at its head, continue to use poor Paddy, and the poor American Catholic, and the poor Polish fool, and the poor German fool, as so many pawns on the political chessboard, to be sacrificed at any time for whatever can be got in return. The whole of this policy is largely prompted, instigated, and animated by the frenzied desire for the restoration of the Pope's rotten old temporal throne, that everybody but a fool or a member of the Roman machine sees clearly is as dead as Julius Cæsar.
> They have excommunicated me because I refused to go to Rome to be censured and punished for my opinions as an American citizen. Well, no man can excommunicate me. There are only two beings in all the vast universe that can separate me from God. One is that infinite wise, good, and merciful Being, our Heavenly Father. He could do it; but He never will until I consent first to separate myself from Him. Then there is only one other being in all the universe, and that is Edward McGlynn. He can separate me from Him. I am conscious that I am frail, that I am very weak, but I am intensely conscious that I am only desirous of doing in all things the will of God. I will trust in his infinite love, in his infinite power, in his infinite goodness to all men, all women and children. I would also suffer perpetual banishment, permit myself to be burned at the stake, rather than permit anything to separate me from the holy will of God, my Maker, my Master, and my Saviour. In such cases as mine their excommunications lose their terrors. An unjust excommunication is not worth the paper it is written on. It is with his own conscience one has to deal.

Such words coming from an excommunicated priest, cheered to the echo by thousands of Romanists, indicate the removal of prejudice, and the forsaking of traditions on the part of a priest-ridden people. For eight years Father O'Connor, a converted priest, has been preaching Christ to large congregations of Irish Catholics in New York City. Surely his faithful work has been preparatory to a greater.

Father Chiniquy has lived to see his eldest daughter married to the pastor of the French Protestant Church at Lowell, Mass., Rev. Joseph Morin. This is the first time in this Republic that a former Romish priest has been spared to witness such a ceremony. A large procession of Protestants and Catholics followed the venerable pastor and his happy company from his house to the church, on September 3, carrying openly a copy of the Bible crowned with flowers. In his address Father Chiniquy vehemently arraigned the priestly vow of celibacy.

Rev. W. F. Davis is hoping to excite opposition against Boston's city law which forbids public preaching on the Common without the Mayor's permit. Several arrests were made, but Dr. Gordon, the Salvation Army officers, and others paid the fine imposed, and immediately procured legal permission for the future preaching. Under this arrangement they receive police

Davis thinks the law should be revoked, and preferred the prison cell to freedom on payment of fees. We are sorry our brother is behind the bars, but we cannot see how the revocation of such a law can do good. Infidels, spiritualists, and others would then engage in their unholy war upon the ignorant masses. The present law guards the preacher, and we know of none who are properly recommended to the Mayor who have been refused the permit. The same law is extant in New York, Chicago, and other American cities.

[There is, however, not a little to be said on the side of Mr. Davis. We had a long talk with him at Boston; and we shall be glad to see a book which is in preparation on this subject, and of which we have received a prospectus.—Ed.]

LETTERS FROM IRELAND.—1.

THE DUBLIN CONVENTION.

"Whatsoever things are lovely and of good report, if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things." Truly there is more profit in thinking of the good than the evil; and while it is needful to warn and to protest against inroads of error and lapses into evil practice, it is far more joyous and more strengthening to take note of the wonderful works of God, and to speak often one to another of the operation of the Holy Spirit in taking the things of Christ and showing them to men.

These remarks have been suggested by the proceedings at the Convention held last week in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin. It is quite true that although Conferences and Congresses multiply they present a very partial exhibition of Christian union, and that the burning questions of the time are very much avoided, lest the apparent harmony should be broken. It is also to be regretted that a good deal of the union annually manifested on the platform, evaporates during the year, when each has returned to his own sphere. Yet when all this has been said, and the advantages of these gatherings have been still further discounted by friendly and hostile criticism, a residuum of good remains which more than justifies their existence, their continuance, and their multiplication.

At the opening of one of the sessions at Trinity College some months ago the Bishop of Cork animadverted on these Conventions and expressed his disapproval of "Churchmen" attending them. He has been followed by other critics. The speech of the Archbishop of Dublin, which is reported fully on another page, may be regarded as in some sort an answer to such narrow-minded criticisms, the nature of which may be gathered from the Archbishop's address. It does seem that here and everywhere Christians are beginning to find out that it is better to seek out and to emphasise those things wherein we agree than wherein we differ. The Archbishop's address was a noble manifesto on behalf of Christian unity.

The impetus given by these Conferences to the new missionary interest and zeal arising on every hand, is of itself of unspeakable value. For probably, now that missions are accorded so prominent a place, and "the thoughts of men are widened" not merely "by the process of the suns," but by the information and exhortation pressed upon them, enterprises are seen to be possible which a few years ago were

God is working as though these were the ways of which He has specially said, "a short work will the Lord make in the earth." The addresses of Dr. Lansdell, Revs. Ebenezer Jenkins, E. Collison, and Grattan Guinness, concerning Eastern Europe, India, British Columbia, and the world at large, were but an example of the urgent pressure on the Christians of this generation to "look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest," and to "launch out into the deep."

It was very gratifying to listen to the words of Dr. Macfadyen, who represented the Congregational body at this Convention. They were entirely on the lines of evangelical orthodoxy—as devout and spiritual in conception as they were eloquent and beautiful in expression. I thought, indeed, that the exegesis of the "earthly things" and the "heavenly things" in John iii. 12 was open to question, but all the doctrines taught were according to the truth of the Gospel, as maintained by the fathers of the body of which he is a prominent and a deservedly valued minister; and all hearts were moved as he dwelt upon the love unto death, of Jesus the Son of God. If the same truth were universally preached in Nonconformist pulpits, with like fervour and directness, there would be no room for "down-grade" papers.

A very profitable afternoon was spent in considering the evangelisation of "the masses," including "the classes"; for verily East-end and West-end sinners prove themselves to be made of one blood; and it is the blood of Jesus which makes atonement for the soul of each alike. The remark of our American brother, H. L. Hastings, should not be forgotten in connection with this discussion:—"We now are puzzled how to reach the masses; in the days of Jesus the question was how the masses could reach Him."

The expositions of Rev. Henry E. Brooke were most helpful, and the attention paid showed how highly such instruction is appreciated and accepted. Nothing could have been more harmoniously or fittingly arranged than his address on "The Ministry of Reconciliation" as preliminary and preparatory to the stirring appeal in which Rev. John Smith imitated the Apostle Paul in "opening and alleging" the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ—the gift of power, sought and used for the glory of God. One of the speakers made a remark well worth preserving, "The secret of failure in Christian life and work is a qualified consecration."

The Convention is being followed in the same building by a mission conducted by Mr. George Clarke, who is now on the staff of the Church of England Parochial Mission. His recent visits to Inverness and other towns of Scotland, with very remarkable results in the confession of Christ by hundreds of his hearers, was spoken of with enthusiasm by Rev. W. Ross, of Glasgow, who was himself a prominent and powerful speaker at the Convention, and whose evangelistic work during the last four years in the most degraded part of Glasgow has brought sheaves into the kingdom of God, with which the harvesting of the majority of reapers can by no means compare.

Dublin. R. C. Morgan.

ITALY.—The tribunal of Lucera has just sentenced two priests to thirty days' imprisonment and a fine for having threatened a Bible colporteur; also for using violence and tearing up the copies of the Scriptures which he was selling. They were also to pay the law costs and for the damage done to the stock-in-trade of the colporteur. We may now hope that the Word of

SALVATION WORK IN CEYLON.

A very interesting letter has been recently received from Jai Bhai, a faithful soldier and witness for the Lord Jesus in Ceylon in connection with the Salvation Army. He writes:—

God is wonderfully blessing us. It is about six months since I got back from England. We have now fourteen stations and fifty officers in Ceylon, and about half of these are natives. This is very encouraging, especially when I remember that when I got here but a few months back we had only six or seven, and now we have nearly thirty. Among the native officers I rejoice to say are some of the holiest and most devoted men and women I have ever met. If these heathen countries are to be saved, most of the work will have to be done by the natives themselves. We Europeans can, I suppose, but just start the work. The climate and the trying nature of the work are against us, and at the most, I am afraid, we cannot expect to be in the war more than a few years; but if we can raise up a large body of men and women who can stand the climate and know the language, to carry on the work on our lines, our lives will be well spent.

Thank God, we have some wonderful victories already! Only a few weeks ago we opened three new stations, and in these alone about fifty souls have professed salvation, forty of whom were heathens. The work seems most solid, and the converts have every appearance of being most spiritual. As in other countries, so in Ceylon—God has helped us to rescue some of the deepest-dyed sinners. In the little town of Gampola (about fifteen miles from Kandy, the ancient capital of Ceylon), where we have recently opened work, we have had about twenty-five converts, amongst whom were some of the worst characters of the town, including Buddhist gamblers, thieves, drunkards, a money forger, &c. The whole town wonders at the change in their lives.

Another victory has been in a small village, named Nodugamawa, where, but a few weeks ago, we sent two godly Singhalese lads from the Training Home. The village was a purely heathen one—all were Buddhists. For three weeks our lads held meetings in the village, and spent the day in visiting the people in their houses. The lads lived in the "Amblain" (public rest house) and begged their food from the villagers. The Buddhist priests and leaders abused them, came to argue with them, and spoke against them, but it was all in vain. God was working in the hearts of the people, and, during the fourth week, no less than thirty Buddhists sought salvation. Now we have about sixty soldiers in the district.

Our European officers are doing wonderfully well. God has helped them with the language, and they have made great progress. They have already been used to the salvation of scores of the heathens. The European lass officers, I am glad to say, enjoy good health; in fact, we have not a single one on the sick list. God has wonderfully preserved them. I am sorry to say that some three or four of our European men officers here have had a lot of bad health, principally through working in a district so well known for its fever, that it is feared alike by native and European. In this district God has given us over one hundred souls, nearly all Buddhists, and, sickness or health, we cannot and will not neglect these poor souls. It has cost us heavily though, and I am very anxious to do something in the way of providing a Home of Rest for our sick officers.

A LADY WORKER WANTED.—Dear Sir,—Will you allow me through your journal to entreat some Christian lady, in the Lord's name, to come over and manage a second mother's meeting in this poor and populous parish? The day and hour would be fixed to meet her wish, and the mission-woman would be at her service as assistant. It is intended for factory women, and for the mothers of factory girls. The need is great, and the welcome will be hearty in the Lord.—Yours truly,

Wm. Adamson.

Evangelical Alliance Conference at Aberdeen.

THURSDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 22.

Dr. A. J. Campbell, M.P., had been announced to preside, but he was unhappily prevented by bereavement. Col. Malcolm, of Burnfort, in taking his place, gave expression to the sympathy of all present with him in his great sorrow.

On the subject of the morning two addresses were given. The first selected speaker was Rev. H. C. G. Moule (Cambridge), whose paper, in his absence, was read by Rev. Hubert Brooke, who concurred in the views conveyed in the address.

Qualifications for Christian Service.

By Rev. H. C. G. MOULE.

Christian service, in its full idea, is a phrase practically co-extensive with Christian life; and Christian life is, in the intention of the Gospel, nothing less, nothing narrower, than the whole life of the Christian, morning, noon, and night; alone, in private, in society, in public; at all times and in all places. As he always exists, as a Christian, in and by his Master, so he always exists for his Master. He has, in the reality of the matter, no dissociated and independent interest. But, if I understand to-day's theme aright, Christian service means the service of direct and special work and effort. It means such things as preaching and teaching, evangelisation at home, missionary enterprise abroad, testimony for our Lord Jesus Christ in more or less definite ways, in private or in public; or again, such philanthropic undertakings as have regard indeed to the material and bodily and social benefit of men, but are yet carried on avowedly and distinctively on Gospel principles, and in which the workers confess themselves to be also believers.

As to true qualifications for this service, I must limit myself by the simple method of reading in the word some. A few words, first, on qualifications of a kind which seems to me extremely important, though, perhaps, not directly contemplated in the setting of the subject. I mean qualifications in respect of the message which the worker carries, and the Gospel principles on which he works. I mean the urgent need for the Christian worker of our day to take care of his personal hold upon articulate, fundamental truth, as well as care over his spirit of zeal and love. My own experience lies a great deal among young Christian men of devoted earnestness, and their energy for the Lord is often both a rebuke and a cordial to my own soul. But I find very often amongst them not only, what is inevitable, very incomplete information as to important details of great truths, but a certain indifference to care and thoroughness in such matters. And I have seen, in some cases, the saddest possible warnings, in a practical way, against the danger of such indifference on the part of men who were all the while glowing with zeal. I have seen the crudest heresy as to our Lord's person welcomed (to use the words used to me) "with enthusiasm" by men who were full at the time of devoted word and work. I have seen young men of intense religious fervour, but who had come to treat the old beliefs of Christians, and even the warning of the Word itself, with impatience and neglect, in favour of supposed and independent spiritual lights, fall down the worst precipices of Mount Error, and learn with sad distinctness to call darkness light, and light darkness. So I cannot but take every occasion that offers to utter, in humility, but with all the force I can, my warning in this direction. Zeal is not enough; courage is not enough; the victory over the fear of man is not enough; willingness to endure hardness is not enough. There must be humble and laborious pains about the solidity and rightness of the message, as well as about the energy of the messenger.

One qualification for service, in the way of doctrinal truth and principle of life, often lacking at the present day, is a deeper reverence, a more adoring awe, in view of the claims of God. To me this side of Divine truth seems to be minimised, in a degree quite remarkable, in much earnest message-bearing of our day in the Evangelical Church. The just assertion of what I may call the humanitarian side of the Gospel seems to me to tend now seriously, in quarters otherwise loyal to the Word of God, to run to a dangerous extreme. One would sometimes think, as one reads and listens, that God was under exterior obligations in the matter of man's salvation; that the words guilt and law were landmarks of past thought, not of eternal fact; that there was little or nothing in God to fear. I am convinced that it is a matter for earnest thought, prayer, and watching, on the Christian worker's part, for his soul's faith, and for his life's service. Let his message, if he would be true to his Master's word, be leavened with profound convictions of the guilt of sin, the depth of the fall, the awful sanctity and fixity of the law of God (I do not mean laws of nature, but the perceptive edict of the holy will of our King and Judge), and the wonder of pardon, and the miracle of grace, and the unutterable necessity, as well as beauty of the Cross, of the Propitiation. Again, in balance and in harmony with this great mass and range of truth, let the working servant of the Lord carry always with him the principle and the message expressed in the words, "Christ in you." Let him not substitute those words for "Christ for you"; let him not hide the truth of our deliverance and sanctification. Let neither truth check the other.

But I turn to the more obvious side of my subject which has to do with what I call the personal rather than the doctrinal qualifications of the servant of the Lord. Here I would recur to what we observed in setting out upon the subject: the full idea of the phrase, Christian service, as taking in the Christian's whole life. I recur to it because there is surely a deep and organic connection between the recognition of that full idea and a true and happy exercise of service in its more special sense. Would the worker be what the Master would have him be as a worker? Then let him be a consistent man all round. Would he serve in testimony? Then let him serve in everything.

To turn to another point, of special brightness in the bright circle of consistency. I refer to that great qualification for Christian service, an honest and unaffected self-forgetfulness—let me call it selflessness—in the worker's soul, with the work, the enterprise, the organisation, the connection, is mine is to be kept in jealous check. The first symptoms of religious envy are to be by the Lord's servant as promptly and thoroughly dealt with as would be those of a formidable bodily disease; or rather what is far better, the servant is to remember beforehand the danger of infection, and to live therefore in that germ-killing air, the presence and the peace of God. It is a sorrowful sight, but not a very rare one, to see some otherwise admirable Christian ill of this disease already, and not taking the least action against it; to see a man manifestly equipped with powers and tact in many ways, but with whom one fellow-worker after another "finds it very hard to work."

This leads me to say a little of the all-importance to the servant of Jesus Christ of the maintenance of his own personal joy and glory in his Master. The sad secret of the spirit I have just sought to deprecate lies in the subtle substitution, somewhere and somehow, of self for Christ Jesus. It is calling the work "mine" instead of "his." It is working for my credit rather than for his glory. It is attracting, or trying to attract, to me, not altogether to Him And where shall we go for the remedy? It must be to Him. It must be found in the renewal, without one cloud between, without even the cloud of our own restless activities between, of our sight of Him, of the views of the fair beauty of the Lord, and of the blessedness and pleasantness of our lot and part in Him.

I have read somewhere of a servant of Christ, of other days, a man singularly rich in the gift of spiritual influence with individuals. He was asked to disclose something of his secret. His reply, in essence, was that it lay, as far as he knew, in a sense of profound contentment with his blessed Master, in which his soul was kept through grace. Jesus Christ irradiated him within and for Himself. He was, at the very centre of his soul's consciousness, deeply happy to belong to "His King who had saved him," and to be used by that great and wonderful Possessor as should seem best to Him. And this took fiction and anxiety out of his life in a very wonderful way, while it kept that life, so to speak, always directed, peacefully and unwearily, towards the thought of service, towards the idea of being used, And the service was all the happier because it was not the source and sine quâ non of the man's happiness. The source and secret was Jesus Christ; and that secret acted equally, whether marked success attended action and speech, or apparently no success at all; whether the servant was put by the Master into the front rank of action, reaping in the harvest field, or told to sit down in a corner and sharpen the sickles of others; whether he was called to speak to a multitude in spiritual power, or to lie still on a sick bed. That Divine Spirit, in its blessed paradox, was the source at once of workfulness and of repose. And in a very marked degree it preserved the worker from the infection of the sins of envy, of jealousy, of selfishness. Ah! in the air of a life so hid with Christ in God, do we not feel instinctively that such sin could not breathe? "The fruit of righteousness is sown in peace"; in the peace of God, in the most sacred laws of the life of the children of God that their activity has its root in passivity; heir strength has profoundly much to do with weakness; their rising up and going on with giving way and sinking down; with that opposite of positive effort which is yet so fruitful of work —"Yield yourselves to God."

In a succeeding address Dr. Herdman, of Melrose, expatiated on such qualifications as aith, humility, self-denial, and an earnest study of the Word of God.

Dr. Murray Mitchell followed, with a engthy address on "Modern Examples of Chrisian Heroism in Missionary Enterprise at Home and Abroad." Men are accustomed to speak with admiration, he said, of mediæval missions, but he contended that many workers for God of modern times have shown as great courage, self-denial, and true heroism, as in any preceding age. The first example adduced was Hans Egede, Norwegian clergyman, whose heart was greatly tirred with reference to the spiritual state of Greenland. It was not till thirteen years of agonising effort had passed that he was able to nter on the actual work of the mission. Egede worked in Greenland for fifteen years. His lot was one of sore toil, much trial, often of bitter disappointment. But there were converts; and, aint yet pursuing, he held on his way, until he ost his noble wife. Then, in shattered health, he returned to Denmark, to take charge of a ollege for training missionaries, his eldest son emaining as a missionary in Greenland.

Moravian Mission history Robert Murray McCheyne regarded as "the most striking xample of self-devotedness in the cause of Christ" which had occurred in what he called "these days of deadness." Sixty-eight years go the Moravian Church had its attention urned to the frightful disease of leprosy as xisting among the Hottentots of South Africa. The Colonial Government had erected an asylum or lepers in a sequestered spot, and the Moravian Mission was asked to take the management of he institution. Rev. Mr. Leitner and his wife, an Englishwoman, cheerfully accepted the ppointment. To every natural sensibility the ffice was most repulsive; and it was then believed that the disease was infectious, and that he missionary to the lepers would soon become imself a leper. In 1846, Government removed he Leper Hospital to Robben Island, seven miles from Cape Town. In 1867, the Colonial Government appointed a chaplain of the English hurch to visit the island, and dispensed with he services of the Moravian missionaries; but, efore this occurred, the missionaries had carried n the work with loving assiduity for forty years. There was never any lack either of men or omen to take it up; nor did anyone who had ccepted it afterwards recoil from the agonising ministry. They chiefly lived and died among —or at least, mingling with—the miserable ufferers, from the mere sight of whom all others hrank.

Other like instances of heroic endurance and evotion were referred to in connection with issions to the American Indians, to Madagascar, Polynesia, Fiji, Africa, and elsewhere. Men id down their lives that they might bear ithful witness to the truth of the Gospel of hrist. Only recently we have heard of some of he African converts at Uganda who have had to al their testimony with their blood. The case Bishop Hannington is fresh in the memories all. Time failed to speak of heroism in home issions. There are no higher names in human Fry, Florence Nightingale, and such like. Let us rejoice to think that there are many now working in the slums of our great cities and elsewhere who are doing as arduous and noble service as if they had proceeded to the high places of the field, in the wilds of Mongolia or of Central Africa. Most of them may be unknown on earth, but their record is on high.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

Mr. Donald Matheson presided at the afternoon gathering in place of Sir W. McArthur, detained at home through indisposition. A discussion on "Christianity in relation to our Non-churchgoing Population," was preceded by an address from Dr. J. H. Wilson (London). The most recent census returns of church attendance, he said, show an appalling amount of spiritual destitution throughout the country. Dealing with the question as to how it is to be met, Dr. Wilson recounted in some detail the efforts made by Dr. Chalmers in Edinburgh, through his plan of territorial missions; and the movement of a similar kind, inaugurated by himself and other friends in Aberdeen a good many years ago. In this later effort the Gospel of Jesus Christ was the central force employed in the uplifting of the people, while many auxiliary agencies of a more "secular" kind were set in operation, and found to be most helpful in the work. That endeavour, begun in a humble way among the lapsed masses of Aberdeen, has now developed into a well-sustained and permanent work, including two self-supporting churches, and has been the means of raising many from degradation to honest, honourable Christian life. Dr. Wilson further described something of the splendid work of the home evangelisation accomplished in London by the City Mission and kindred efforts.

The Chairman said there was something wrong in the fact that the poor formed a great proportion of those who did not go to church; yet God, in his grace and love, and our Saviour in his Word, had said that the Gospel was to be preached specially to the poor. The Gospel ought to be presented in a more attractive form. In London the difficulty now is, that in almost every district there is overlapping. On the other hand, he was sorry to hear that in the country districts all over the north of Scotland, farm labourers, men and women, were comparatively neglected in regard to Christian missions.

Rev. Alex. Campbell (Montrose), from thirty years' experience among the classes referred to by the Chairman, spoke of a successful work that had been accomplished without eleemosynary aid, largely by getting into personal contact with the people. If all the ministers of Scotland (not to speak of England) were to adopt cottage meetings for the poor, parlour meetings for those who were a little higher in the social scale, and drawing-room meetings for the rich, there might be 3000 evangelists added to the number of workers in Scotland within the next month. He believed there was no other scheme by which they could ever make an impression upon the masses of the people than that of going down amongst them. It is not enough to send a missionary and a Bible-woman, valuable as those workers are, but the minister himself must go and personally invite the people to come to the meetings. The Chairman having asked how the ministers could find time for this with their many other duties, Rev. Alex. Campbell replied that he combined the visiting of the people with the which all in it are invited. Instead of having a service in every house, which would be very laborious, if not impracticable, he took a district of six or eight families, and invited these to the meeting. If there were any cases of sickness, he prayed, read, and spoke to them; but as many were out at work in the daytime, he gave them an invitation to the evening meeting. In that way he combined, as a minister, pastoral visitation with missionary operations. Unless a similar plan were adopted throughout Great Britain and Ireland, they would never evangelise the masses of the people.

Principal Brown thought that in the evangelisation of the masses they required to go by system as much as possible. Hap-hazard, even in the way of preaching the Gospel to high or low, might be blessed, but that kind of work could not be depended upon. They must address themselves to the condition of the class they dealt with. They must try and know the evils, and whence they spring, in order to get rid of them.

Dr. Cairns (Edinburgh) agreed that the spiritual state of the poor was better now than formerly, and that they ought not to lose heart about the "lapsed masses." They ought rather to be encouraged. If the population is increasing, and if the difficulty referred to is to be met, the number of Christians also is increasing in all the churches. They could not attend a Conference in any large town in Scotland or England without hearing of the immense amount of work going on in such centres as London, Edinburgh, and Glasgow. What they wanted was a more living state of the Christian Church. They could bring men to Christ only by themselves holding to the truth, and not by zeal alone. They must hold fast to Christian doctrine, while he would welcome any number of evangelists. He had, as a professor of theology, endeavoured to inculcate upon all students for the ministry that, however intellectual they might be, and how large their congregation, when they entered upon their duties as pastors, they must be evangelists, and so give full proof of their ministry. Every summer he visited congregations in the country, and, calling upon the people, held district meetings. Much valuable work could be done in that way. He thought that every minister should "do the work of an evangelist" during the summer in the rural districts, holding open-air meetings and utilising every means by which it was possible to reach all classes of people.

Rev. J. Mitford Mitchell (Aberdeen) said that in his last two parishes the causes he found most hard to overcome were intemperance and the very unsuitable houses in which the poor were obliged to live. He wished he could invoke the aid of the civil magistrate to have a sort of effective censorship over the houses of the people in such districts. Humanly speaking, it was impossible to train up a pure-minded family in some of the houses. The necessity which existed for seeing that no family was permitted to live in an uninhabitable house should be impressed upon all who were proprietors of houses, as well as upon those who had the guardianship of our civic affairs. There was a further cause. He had always found it difficult to follow up the work which he took in hand owing to the migratory habits of the people. They got hold of a family, they saw them for a few weeks, and then they would go away to another place where no organisation existed that worked in the same way. After assuming, of course, that the great factor in regenerating man was the Gospel of Jesus Christ, he suggested as practical which he had been speaking of; (2) to flood non-churchgoing districts with earnest and kind visitors—men and women who would go to their fellow-creatures and strive to influence them in a kindly human way; and (3) congregations might spend a certain portion of the Lord's Day most profitably in visiting their poorer brethren. He thought that one of the great evils of the present time was the system of seat rents in churches. If a poor man came in it was often very difficult for him to be at once shown to a seat. All sittings ought to be free; that was his strong opinion. Different kinds of people required different kinds of services. The religious gatherings in the poorer districts ought to be less constrained, and less formal.

THURSDAY EVENING.

The last meeting was perhaps the best, and certainly the largest, of all. There was scarcely a seat vacant in the vast hall, the only space being at the very back of the gallery. The platform was almost packed with Christian ministers and laymen from nearly every important centre of England and Scotland. Representatives were there from the mission field—from the South Sea Islands, Denmark, and Constantinople. A quiet, solemn peacefulness pervaded this final gathering. Christian brethren had met, and were soon to part, some for ever; but they had met as one in Christ, and they felt the consolation that the same presence which had brought them together would keep them still united in spirit. Lord POLWARTH, as President of the Alliance, struck the right key-note, especially for such an occasion. He exhorted all present to be prayerful and expectant, and implored the aid of the Divine Spirit. The prayer was answered. The choice of speakers was a happy one, and their order too. Dr. Cairns, whose thunderous eloquence reached every ear and every heart, came first; Dr. Clemance, quiet and calm, but fervent withal, next. The parting speeches intervened, then, finally, the noble chairman's spiritual counsel. The whole plan of the meeting was evidently the result of judicious forethought on the part of the Secretaries of the Alliance, and its purpose was fully accomplished.

Testimony in Doctrine, Life and Work.

BY PRINCIPAL CAIRNS.

I would not make light of the express defence of Christianity for its own sake by what is called Christian apologetics. These have their place and use. Still I am prepared to assert that there is in the testimony of doctrine, life, and work, without any express apologetic teaching, the best defence of Christianity. I consider testimony in doctrine to mean the faithful setting forth of the truth as it is in Jesus; testimony in life we understand to be the beauty and attraction of the Christian character, as under the influence of the Spirit of God produced by doctrine; testimony in work embraces those wider results and fruits of Christian doctrine, character, and life, which take, as it were, collective shape; which make up the religious enterprise of the Christian Church as a Divine institution, and the regenerator of human society.

In regard to testimony in doctrine, the most central is testimony by the voice of the Christian pulpit. There is in Christianity that which, when set forth faithfully, earnestly, and fully, will commend itself to the hearts and consciences of men as supplying a felt necessity of their ministry which deals with apologetic themes in an apologetic way, which takes up the objections, say, of writers like Renan and Herbert Spencer, and deals with other so-called attacks on Christianity, we shall find that such a preacher must also deal very much in distinct and full statements of Christianity which have in them nothing at all of an apologetic character. No doubt, to combine both is best. All preachers, for the confirmation of their own faith, and for express apologetic teaching where that is needful and might be edifying, ought to know objections and difficulties; but the testimony of the pulpit that constitutes the best defence of Christianity is that which is occupied in setting forth the truth of Christianity in itself, as the Divinely appointed remedy for the sin and misery of our fallen and yet redeemed race. The best answer to unbelief is God's own voice uttered in his own Word. The best way of urging home the truth is simply to state the truth, and to urge the hearer to yield to what he himself feels of the reality that is in it; in this way, by accepting Christ as his own Saviour, and putting the matter to the test, he may receive the crowning testimony and evidence of personal experience. On this point all ministers have something to learn. There is a danger of being drawn aside into too much even of a good thing in apologetic discussion and argument; we must keep in the main to the great work of the pulpit—the statement of Christian truth, and the inculcation of Christian duty, largely in the words of Scripture, though any additional wisdom and learning that we can bring to bear upon these will be welcome in their own place.

Then there is testimony in connection with Christian life, through the beauty and attraction of the Christian character. No doubt the graces and virtues of the Christian character are there for their own sake, and because they are in harmony with the very nature of things. Yet we know that the testimony and influence of these are made much of in Holy Scripture. The question is, How are these Christian graces and virtues to tell? There are two sides on which we may regard testimony in life. There is our testimony as Christians to that part of Christian morality which the world can appreciate, which so far coincides with the world's own code and counsels, while it transcends the world's own practice. There is also that most important part of Christian morality, or of Christian life, which is distinctive, which the world cannot so appreciate, and which the world, unhappily, does not so recognise.

As to the first of those great branches of what might be called Christian morality, or the practical illustration of Christian life. It is worth noting that the world itself has had its moral standard elevated to a large extent by the moral standard of Christianity. Does not the world expect from Christians a higher standard of moral example than from other men? Is not the world shocked with the inconsistencies of Christians? Would it be shocked with such inconsistencies if it did not admit that the Christian's standard is after all right and true? What a purchase we have as Christians through this admitted progress of Christian ideas in regard to morality, even in the heart of the world! Take the great Christian virtue of truth. What a rise would there be, so to speak, in the shares of the Christian Church as a great joint stock company, if every professing Christian's word were as good as his bond. In regard to temperance, what progress there would be were drinking truly sparing and abstemious. Should we not find it easier in the end to agree, although I may be permitted to hold that after all total abstinence is the more excellent way? Further, if there were, as a rule, to be expected from Christians an avoidance of all transgressions of the great law of Christian purity and righteousness would there not be an immense impression made, more than has yet been made, on the world?

Then there is the second department of Christian virtue, where the world is slow to recognise the virtues of Christians, where it is impatient almost of the application of the Christian standard, and where it wonders that Christians should be so peculiar, so enthusiastic even, in holding certain moral principles and affections, and striving so earnestly to carry them out. There is Christian morality as contrasted with pride, Christian forgiveness as contrasted with self-assertion and revenge, meekness and gentleness as contrasted with the opposite tempers. The world has been made to confess, as it were, against its own will, that this patient, self-denying, humble, meek, and high type of virtue, going about doing good, clothed with the garb of gentleness, and crowned with thorns, is, after all, something greater, nobler, and more sublime than the magnanimous theory of the philosophy of the stoic, who is a kind of god to himself, who holds indeed to a brotherhood, but to a brotherhood of reason rather than of love. Has the world not been made to know, in connection with such instances and such marvels of Christian courage, as well as of Christian meekness and forgiveness, that there is in this virtue drawn from the cross of Christ something which it can feel, although it cannot fully comprehend it? Should we not strive to be clothed more with the humility, meekness, and gentleness of Christ, with the forgiveness that overcomes evil with good, with the patience that can endure wrong and injury? How are we ever to teach the world this kind of Christian virtue unless we ourselves so far exemplify it?

Lastly, there is testimony in Christian work, which is Christian faith translated into organised activity. There is this perfect equation in the Christian Church: faith equal to works, works equal to faith. If there is so much faith in the Church, there will be also so much work in the Church; and as in the Church, so in the world. Faith expresses itself in prayer, and must, by the grace that prayer draws down, also express itself in Christian activity. Here is the truth of that grand Protestant principle on which the Evangelical Alliance stands, and ever must stand, that justification and sanctification are not the same thing—though both are the outcome of the same divine principle, working by grace in the soul. In the world of nature we rejoice over such great discoveries as those of the conservation of energy, whereby it is proved that so many varied energies are really expressions and manifestations of the same great principle. But in the world of the new creation it is not enough that we have conservation of energy. We need creation of energy, the beginning of energy, a new fountain of energy opened up. It is by drawing from this fountain, constant and inexhaustible, that all the graces and virtues of the Christian character record and express themselves in works of faith and labours of love. There are as many workers in a congregation o in the Christian Church as there are livin Christians. No doubt there are special paths o work, but every Christian who deserves the na work which deal with the rescue of the fallen, with disease, insanity, and ignorance, and those more special works which deal with such fields as intemperance. Last of all, there are those who go forth to represent us and be our voice to the heathen. What grand success has already within human memory crowned the stupendous work of foreign missions, though it is the work of little more, comparatively, than two generations. Let us be encouraged by the testimonies of history. Here is something the world never could have produced.

In closing, Dr. Cairns appealed to all to go on in the path of personal influence and example, to struggle on the right hand and on the left against evil and sin; then these facts of world-wide import and impression would witness for Christianity more than all their apologetic addresses, and all their Chairs of Apologetic Theology, could achieve; whereas, if facts like these were blotted out, their whole apologetic theology would sink, and sink deservedly, in confusion. Let them go forth in the name of the Living God, and in his name, though weak in themselves, they would be strengthened to do glorious exploits.

On the same subject Dr. Clement Clemance, of Camberwell, delivered an address, which made a profound impression upon all who heard it: last week we gave the first, and to-day the concluding portion of it. Between these addresses short speeches were interposed, in the course of which Mr. Donald Matheson, on behalf of the Alliance and its friends visiting from a distance, expressed gratitude for the great kindness and hospitality received during the Conference. Confirming the belief of Mr. Matheson, the chief host, the Lord Provost, said that many had been quickened in their faith, many had received a blessing, and many induced to feel more united with their fellow-Christians in the work of extending the Kingdom of Christ. A similar testimony was borne by Rev. D. Beatt, who spoke for the Local Committee, whose efforts to promote the success of the Conference were beyond all praise. The Secretary (Mr. A. J. Arnold) rejoiced in these happy fruits of his repeated visits to Scotland, that had prepared so many Christians beyond the Tweed for this great gathering, pronounced to be the most satisfactory of any Conference held within several years past.

In the concluding address, Lord Polwarth emphasised what had been repeatedly urged during the deliberations of the Conference—viz., the immense responsibility which lay upon every member of the Church of Christ, to live together as brethren, to work for Him, to show forth his glory, to serve Him continually.

Two or three features incident to, if not immediately connected with, this visit of the Alliance to Aberdeen, call for particular mention. Prior to the Conference, prayer-meetings were held, and the blessing of God invoked upon its proceedings; when the Conference assembled the spirit of devotion, as well as brotherly love, entered largely into its deliberations. A full hour was set apart for prayer and praise on one of the mornings. On another, the harmonious feeling thus manifested in the Conference itself became more declaratory and solemn, when a considerable number of clergymen and Nonconformist ministers assembled for a united communion service in the West Parish Church. The officiating clergymen were Rev. J. Mitford Mitchell, West Parish, Rev. G. W. Thomson, Free West Church, and Rev. James Stark, Belmont Congregational Church. A few loving words fell from the lips of Mr. Stark, who said that as Christians they had met that morning to give expression and visible testimony to their essential unity in the way the Lord Himself had directed. Mr. Thomson followed, in the same spirit of brotherliness, with a comment on the words of Christ, "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." About four hundred were present to partake of the memorials of the Lord's Supper.

The second striking feature which deserves special notice has been the "entertainment of strangers." The Lord Provost and Mrs. Henderson, not satisfied with receiving guests to dinner day by day, culminated their hospitalities in a garden party at Devanha House, on the afternoon of Thursday. Between four hundred and five hundred friends, most of them from a distance, were received. Music, beautiful gardens and conservatories, made the visit exceedingly pleasant. Rev. J. De Kewer Williams, of London, was in the act of saying as much to the Lord Provost, when a crowd pressed round him, and perforce he became the spokesman for the rest. On their behalf, as well as on his own, he thanked the host and hostess for their exemplary hospitality. Brimful of humour, but sincere, Mr. Williams' speech made such an impression upon the Lord Provost, that for a time he could not compose himself to respond. As each guest arrived, a card printed in gold was presented, containing a plan of the grounds and a programme of the music.

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE.

Dear Sir,—Miss Proctor, one of our students, who continues to feel a deep interest in our work here, writes from the Mission School, Schurjat, Beyrout, Syria, under date August 11:—"This is a very large village, having over 7000 inhabitants; but for a great part of the year we have no resident doctor. Most of the people are very poor, and unable to call in medical assistance from Beyrout, so they are very glad to avail themselves of the advice and medicine I give them freely, and I may be very thankful for the results of the treatment the Lord has hitherto given me. Last year we had a bad epidemic of measles, which extended to great part of Lebanon, and was most fatal in some villages. Thank God, only two of the cases that came under my care were fatal, and those not from measles, but from sequelæ."

Miss Adie, another of our students, is doing a great work on the Lebanon, and kindly sends liberal contributions to aid us in the work. Two of our students (Miss Marsh and Miss Rainsford) have just completed their curriculum and passed most successful examinations, being highly commended by the examiners.

As we open our new session, we desire a large blessing upon the College and its inmates, and we would ask our kind friends to bear us in mind at the Throne of Grace with special reference to this important work,

G. de Gorrequer Griffith, Hon. Sec.

THE CARE OF GIRLS.—The Lewisham Association of Ladies, which has this as its beneficent object, has issued its first report. This is a very pleasing one, and shows how much may be done in the way of aiding the friendless by kindness and tact. The Home will accommodate six girls, and "all who come are received, provided there be a vacancy." Many have come and have been helped in a variety of ways. They have been of several classes—little girls brought by their struggling mothers, others rescued from unworthy parents, and young women who have fallen. As a result of the work to the present, eleven girls are now in service, five are in other homes or schools, and five have been restored to their parents. The Home is at 4, St. Germain's-villas, Lewisham, and Miss Bateman is the matron.

MESSRS. FULLERTON & SMITH.

Commencing Aug. 27, at Bury St. Edmund's, after their summer vacation, these evangelists have had a very successful campaign in the Eastern counties. The town of Bury is full of interesting relics of Catholic times, and is still fragrant with the memories of earnest evangelical preachers, amongst whom the most famous was Cornelius Elvin. It was as co-pastor of Mr. Elvin that Mr. Cuff developed those qualities which have brought him such a wide renown as the pastor of the Shoreditch Tabernacle. The Baptist Church at Bury may be said to have a live man as its pastor, and he it was who sought the co-operation of Messrs. Fullerton and Smith. From the outset the meetings were large and the people in downright earnest for the mission. A spirit of prayer was general, and every possible effort was made to bring the Gospel to bear upon all classes of the community. The outcome of the work is not to be estimated by the number of conversions; believers have been quickened, and the work thus begun in earnest will not be allowed to flag. Surrounding villages have been moved, and prayer will continue that the wave of blessing may compass a still wider range.

From Bury the evangelists went to Stowmarket, and here the Congregational Chapel became their headquarters. The minister, Rev. Luther Caws, threw himself heartily into the work, and the chapel was crowded at every service. Conversions were numerous, but the entire church was aroused to new consecration, which must tell upon hundreds for good in the town and district. One old man, reputed to be godly, but who could not be said to be cleanly, was so affected that he soon "set himself in order." It was a new experience to himself, and a matter of wonder to those who knew him, for tears to course down his cheeks "without making ruts." This would have pleased Rowland Hill, who once gave a poor member of his church a few pence, with the advice, to "get a little soap." Wisbech was the next town in the list, and here, too, the evangelists found the people "waiting to receive them."

For some time past, after a long period of comparative deadness, the churches have been on the move, and a yearning desire has been manifested for conversions. This is ever a sign of spiritual life, and when an effort corresponding to the desire is made, blessing is sure to follow. The public hall was full at each service, and the people were eager for the Gospel.

From reliable reports which have reached us we are rejoiced to learn that, in some instances, whole families have been converted, and the daughter of a former pastor of one of the churches was led to decision.

The mission has proved the wisdom of the evangelists in selecting a number of small towns as the centres of their work, and it indicates one of the most promising fields for evangelistic effort. "Towns and villages" were the appointed spheres of labour to the disciples who were "sent forth two and two," and the order cannot be improved. Such a ministry cannot be over-estimated, for our small towns and villages are the feeders of the great centres of population.

The evangelists proceed to Taunton, Weymouth, Jersey, and Cambridge, and in January they hope to conduct a series of meetings in Edinburgh and Glasgow. The readers of The Christian, we are sure, will follow them with their prayers, and, as opportunity offers, accord them their earnest co-operation. C.

PHYSIOLOGY AND TEMPERANCE.—The Committee of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union announce that Dr. Benjamin Ward Richardson, F.R.S., will deliver a course of eight popular physiological lectures, to be illustrated by beautifully prepared diagrams (which will be shown by the oxy-hydrogen lime light apparatus), at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on Friday evenings in October and November, beginning on 14th inst. Tickets for the course will be four shillings; single tickets, one shilling. Apply to Mr. Charles Wakeley, secretary of the Union, 4, Ludgate-hill, E.C.

NOMA.

Away out in the Cascade forests of Oregon, at the foot of one of the great mountains of the North-west, is a little settlement that, till two years ago, never had a sermon preached in it, and as to a Sunday-school, there was none. On Sunday the men and boys went hunting, or lounged around the houses; the women and girls visited, or fished, or took walks through the woods; and not a few of the people worked the same as on any other day. In riding through the place, I have found persons splitting rails, or doing other work by the roadside, and met others going hunting with dogs and guns.

Hearing how neglected the neighbourhood was, I went to preach to them. A boy carried the news to all the little cabins scattered through the timber, that there was to be preaching. Almost everybody came, and brought his dog with him. What a lot of dogs there were! Sometimes they would get under the floor and fight. Sometimes an owner would have to go out during service and thrash his dog soundly, to make him quit barking at other dogs. This did not occur at one service only but at several, and is one of the trials of missionary work. What frontier preacher has not been obliged to say, "Please put that dog out"?

And the people, how eagerly they listened! Refined people from the East, who had come to win a home here in the Western forest, who had heard eloquent and world-renowned preachers, sat by those who had grown up in the wilderness, and both listened intently, as people seldom do in cities. They thirsted for the Gospel in the fullest sense of the word.

Among others, there was one little girl whose name was "Wyoming," so called because she was born in that territory. They called her "Noma" for short. It was the first sermon she had ever heard, though she was a girl of thirteen or fourteen years. Her home was poor; her surroundings poor in the extreme. There was a large family to care for, and, she being the eldest, the burden fell heavily on her. Bitter poverty, scolding, complaint, and profaneness made up the atmosphere of her home. To her the love, the sweet peace, and the grand promises of the Gospel, came like a burst of sunlight. How her eyes glowed! She drank in the words of the sermon with an intensity that was like a burning thirst.

Again and again she came. God's Spirit began to stir her heart. Impulses to be better, aspirations to live a loving and patient life, asking God to help her, began to lift her out of the old ruts, and found expression in the one childlike wish, "I want to be good." I visited her home. Dirt and rags, crying children, a public road running by the very doorway, dogs and guns, a patient mother, whose life was one long, long toil and heartache—that was little Noma's home. The child was ragged and dirty, but with a frank, honest face.

After a while we had protracted meetings, and strong, rugged men were softened like children. The fountains of the great deep of sin were broken up. Hard, stained natures were opened to the cleansing, healing power of the Saviour's love. The children, too, many of them, consecrated their lives to the Master, Among these was Noma. Her childish face grew strangely sweet and beautiful, her eyes shone with light, when she rose in the meeting and told us that she was going to be a Christian, and follow the Saviour.

From that time onward Noma was a different girl. When I went to her home, I was almost startled at the change in her—she had become so gentle, so winning, so womanly. I remember once I passed by the doorway to visit a neighbour beyond, and saw Noma barefooted and ragged, spading in the garden. I told her I would visit there when I came back. When I returned she had put on a pair of old shoes, and brushed up her poor clothes to make them look as neat as possible. Before she was converted she would not have done that! Do you smile at this little incident? To me the putting on of those old shoes has an indescribable pathos and dignity. She did so want to be womanly, and there were so many things to crush her down!

Well, what became of her? Our little heroine is still living, and, amid unsympathetic and squalid surroundings, kind to her mother, patient with her brothers and sisters—living a gentle life of trust and goodness; loved more and more by all who know her, growing more womanly and spiritual day by day. Into that starved, hungry soul came the presence of the Lord, and lifted it out of the dust and transfigured it with spiritual beauty. Now I am writing of a child to children; and let me tell you this, there are many children like Noma, poor and hopeless, never, or seldom, hearing a sermon. How rich our lives are, how poor and barren theirs! Will you not try to help them? Out of your pocket money how much do you give to our Sabbath-school work, or our Home Missionary Society, to send the Gospel to little girls like Noma? They want to be good. They would like to hear of Christ, if someone would only come and tell them. Will you not try to help?—Congregationalist.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.

Dear Young Friends,—How much may be done by good example! Our companions are often watching us when we little think it, as you will see by something that happened only a very short time ago.

A young woman had been staying at the Ilkley Hospital, in Yorkshire, for a few weeks, and some short time after her return home she received this letter:—

"My Dear Friend,—You will think I have forgotten you in the time you have been absent, but you are mistaken if you do, for I can never forget you. I am so sorry that you are not better, but I know that you are content to be just what your Heavenly Father wishes you to be. You will be surprised to hear that from me, I expect. But, dear Mary, your Saviour is now mine. I often think of the time when you used to go to the communion on Sunday mornings at eight o'clock, how I used to laugh at you, and ask you why you rose so early, and I often think of the answer you gave me, when you said it was 'not too early to begin the day with Christ.' Those words clung to me, and I could not get rid of them, but I made my mind up that I would watch you, though you never knew it, and I went home thinking of the words you had spoken to me. I never used to go to Sunday-school in the mornings, though I went in the afternoons, but the first Sunday I could not lie in bed, so I got up and prepared to go to the school, when my companion came in and said that she hoped I was never going to school the first thing. She said she wanted me to go out with her, but those words again, 'not too early to begin the day with Christ,' settled it, and I went; and I am glad I did, for the lesson seemed to have been got ready for me. When I got home I prayed that God would forgive me, and He has done so, and I feel so happy. You can understand how I feel, and I want you to pray for me, that I may be kept steadfast. I know you have prayed for me already. I have written this to let you know, and in the hope it will encourage you in the midst of your trials and troubles, for I know it must be hard to suffer; and although you cannot get out to tell of his loving and saving power, He knows what you have to suffer, and if you bear it patiently He will say at last, 'Well done; she hath done what she could.' Ever your true Christian friend, A. H."

Does not this tell us all that we should earnestly ask God to help us so to live for Christ that others may be drawn to love Him?

W. F.

"DO IT WITH ALL YOUR MIGHT."

"Whatsoever thy hand find to do, do it with thy might."

Never put off till to-morrow
The thing you can do to-day.
Never let pleasure borrow
An hour that pain must pay.
Though a storm on your path seems brewing,
And clouds may obscure the light,
Whatever you deem worth doing
Is worth doing with all your might.

If ever you turn from the labour
Appointed for you to do,
Let it be to assist a neighbour
Less stalwart and strong than you.
Stand not as a cold beholder
Of woes that may meet your sight;
Relieve them, and work on bolder,
And do it with all your might.

Ah, this is life's lesson, and, learning
Its wisdom and truth, you will gain
Such treasures that even their earning
Will take all the sting out of pain.
When the dark shadows round you have vanished,
And Nature is smiling and bright,
Be sure they were scattered and banished
When you struck them with all your might.

Again let the maxim be spoken,
Once said by the wise and the true,
And lay it to heart as a token
Of what courage and patience can do.
When life's tumult is raging around you,
If you gird up your loins for the fight,
Battle on until conquest has crowned you,
And battle with all your might!

A CAUTION.—Rev. John Wilkinson wishes to caution the Christian public against a man begging with letters stamped with "Mildmay Mission to the Jews," and purporting to be from Mr. Wilkinson.

BY THE RIVERSIDE.—Many are the means adopted by the Thames Church Mission of taking the Gospel to seamen. Its boats are ever busy going to and fro, carrying missionaries to preach to emigrants and sailors on board large ships, or in other cases bringing seamen to little mission halls ashore. One such place of assembly is at East Greenwich, and is known as Bugsby's mission-room. It is an "upper room," over a shop, close to the river, and hither, week after week, come, brought by the Mission boats, seamen from coasting barges and ships that have just dropped anchor. The services are thoroughly hearty, and are joined in by the seamen in a way which shows that they love to hear the Gospel message, and to sing the praise of the Saviour, and that they are at home in this primitive little meeting-place. So eager are the men to attend these services, which last only an hour, that in many cases, when their ship has only just come in, and they have been hard at work the night previous, they have gladly availed themselves of the opportunity presented of assembling with others to worship God.

THE GOSPEL IN CHINA.

A SPECIAL PLEA.

SINCE the great recent developments of Mission work in China, and the free access of the Missionary to every part, there has been presented a far wider opportunity for the distribution of CHRISTIAN LITERATURE.

Thousands now receive and read the Tracts telling of SALVATION THROUGH CHRIST, where formerly only a few would accept them.

Miss Gordon Cumming, in her "Wanderings in China," tells the story taken from the North China Tract Society's Report of the "Chinese Cornelius," to whom the light came through reading a Chinese version of "The Peep of Day." This is a sample of what is going on in various parts of the world.

In many directions the people of this great country are first made familiar with Christian Truth through reading the publications issued from the Mission Presses.

A voice has often been raised in Missionary gatherings, crying, "CHINA FOR CHRIST!" Will the friends of the Religious Tract Society help to realise this grand result by additional contributions to enable the Missionaries at the different chief centres to spread much more widely the knowledge of the wonderful love of God in Christ, by means of specially adapted publications?

Thus CHINA'S MILLIONS will be familiarised with the truth concerning the One living and true God, who will have "all men to be saved, and to come to a knowledge of the truth."

Contributions should be addressed to the Secretaries, Religious Tract Society, 56, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

THE MAN WHO SPOILED THE MUSIC.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

Fifty Copies will be supplied direct from the Publishers at half-price.

A NEW SERVICE OF SONG.

By REV. MARK GUY PEARSE.

ARRANGED AS A

MUSICALLY ILLUSTRATED SERVICE by FREDERICK BRETT.

With both Old Notation and Tonic So'-Fa in One Book.

There are many persons who are acquainted with Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's quaint and striking tract of "THE MAN WHO SPOILED THE MUSIC." By the Author's kind permission, the story has now been produced as A SERVICE OF SONG; in which form it is expected to prove both acceptable and profitable. It is hoped that many who—like "Jack," of whom this story speaks—have been too long accustomed to spoil the music in their own hearts and their own homes, and to spoil the music also in the lives of others, may experience the same change of thought, feeling, and purpose through which "Jack" passed; and then, like him, having learned the NEW SONG, set themselves to work to bring back both music and sunshine into the hearts and lives of all around.

The WORDS of the Hymns of this SERVICE OF SONG may be had SEPARATELY on a Sheet. PRICE ONE PENNY.

Fifty Copies of either Music or Words will be supplied direct from the Publishers at half-price.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

BY HIS GRACE

THE ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN.

An Address at the Dublin Convention.

We are met together for the purpose of recording and celebrating the triumphs of the Gospel, which we have all, I trust, found so precious to our own souls. I would venture for a few moments to deal with a question which must be of interest to all present—the aim and object for which the Convention has been summoned. I think there are some misconceptions abroad with reference to it, and in the interests of truth and charity it is right that these misconceptions should be dispelled. The aim and tendency of this Convention are threefold. First, to quicken and deepen spiritual life; second, to promote Christian work; and third, and chiefly, to further the cause of Christian union. We meet together that by brotherly intercourse and mutual exhortation we may stir one another up to more personal holiness and more entire consecration to the service of our common Master. In so doing, this meeting does not claim in any way to be included in the same category with the constituted acts of public worship which are solemnised by each of our churches respectively. No doubt, we have here God's Word read, and hymns sung, and prayers offered up; but the same takes place at meetings of a Bible Society, and when we are told that those who attend these meetings deprive themselves of the ground upon which they would warn their congregations of leaving their own churches and gadding about to the churches of other denominations, it is just as irrelevant as if the charge were brought against the Archbishop of Canterbury or anyone else who might take part in a Bible Society meeting. The charge is based on a misconception, and is only justifiable on such a ground. After this explanation I trust that such a charge will never again be repeated.

Again, this Convention does not identify itself with any peculiar doctrine in theology, least of all with any pretended new discovery in the region of theology. It is our desire and privilege to tell the old, old story, which is ever fresh, ever new. Again, we do not ask those who speak at this Convention to deal with any subject that might form a battle-field for controversy, and, therefore, when it is made an objection to our meeting that we do not deal with the questions of the three orders of the ministry, or with the sacraments, it does not at all follow that we do not ourselves attach deep importance to those questions; nay, rather, the very reverence we feel for such holy things prevents our wishing them to be dragged in the mire of polemical strife. That is another misconception, and I trust, after this explanation, that charge will not be heard again.

The Convention aims at the furthering of all practical work in the field of Christian labour. I might tell of the free Sunday morning breakfasts given within this building, where waifs and strays are fed, and have the Gospel preached to them. I might speak of many other charitable works—all based on the same principle of united action—the Prison Gate Mission, the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, the Dublin by Lamplight Mission, and other institutions, in which those who take part in this Convention show an active interest. In the words here spoken and in the prayers here offered up, all the various Christian churches in this city, and throughout the land, have found an unspeakable blessing. Eternity only will reveal the stimulus which has been given to Christian work, and the blessings that have been brought down from above by means of the meetings of this annual Convention.

The object which specially recommends the Convention to me is the aim and tendency of Christian unity. Let us pause and remind ourselves of the fact that must be patent to every thoughtful mind, that during the last quarter of a century there has arisen in the hearts of Christians throughout the world a craving for unity such as has never before been manifested—a longing that they might be able to return to the spirit of those early days when Christians were of one mind and one soul, and therefore walked in gladness and singleness of heart. I seem to hear the echo of the words of that old man, the eloquent Dr. Dollinger, to which I listened many years ago, when I had the privilege of attending the Bonn Conference. In closing his wonderful address on that occasion he used these words—he was speaking of the importance of Christian unity with the view of meeting the needs of heathenism:—"Oh! that we were united among ourselves, that we might preach one Gospel to the heathen. How beautiful would it be if there were but one Christian Church and Christian doctrine, or, at least, a number of churches united together by agreement in the main elements of the Christian faith, that we might preach to the heathen in the name of that unity."

I find in Church Bells, articles every week by a godly layman of the Church of England, Lord Nelson, containing utterances on the part of Episcopalians and non-Episcopalians all tending in the same direction—a yearning for further unity. Anyone who studies these utterances must admit that, as regards this desire for unity, the present age is quite exceptional. In the annual report of the Home Reunion Society of the present year it is stated that Canon Medd, at the request of the society, has given notice of the following resolution, which the committee trust will be passed at the next session of the Convocation of the province of Canterbury:—

> That in view of the growing feeling of the serious and far-reaching evils of disunion among Christians, of the vast importance of the whole subject, especially Home Reunion, His Grace the President be respectfully requested to direct the appointment of a joint committee to confer, and from time to time to report on the relations existing between the Church and the separated communities, especially in this country, and generally to make any suggestions as to measures which might tend, by God's blessing, to the furtherance of the union among English-speaking Christians of all who hold the essentials of the Christian faith.

Only a few days ago I read that at the fifth General Synod in connection with the Church of England, held in Sydney, Bishop Barry alluded to the importance and desirability of unity amongst the various sections of the Church; and at a later stage the Bishop of Adelaide moved a resolution praying that the Conference at Lambeth in 1888 will consider what steps should be taken to promote greater visible unity amongst those who hold the same creed. When we find almost all parts of the world seething and burning with this desire for Christian unity, are the Christians in Ireland to remain still and hold their hands? Let us remember for one moment that there is, perhaps, no country in the world where unity is of more importance amongst Christians than in Ireland. I speak not now of the Roman Catholic religion as the reason for that unity, but of a greater enemy which is approaching—I speak of those foes in the shape of secularism and infidelity, lawlessness, and Christlessness, which are gradually making their way onwards. How is this union to be brought about; are we to attempt at once to realise something of an immediate fusion of all our churches and denominations? I think not. There will be such a fusion—when sorrow, and suffering, and party spirit and division fly away, and when all meet around the Throne and realise the oneness for which our dear Saviour prayed. But if there cannot be fusion, why should there not be federation? Why should we not retain our own standards, articles, and views, and yet find some way of meeting together from time to time and showing to the world that upon essentials we are all agreed. If we cannot have a solid bar of iron, we may have a chain of many links, each, it may be, of different substance and shape, but yet all bound together by a common bond of adhesion. I believe such a thing is possible; recommendations which I have read, and which are to be laid before the English Convocation in 1888, something will be done by the heads of the Established Church to invite reciprocal action on the part of the heads of the other denominations, and that something may be done in the direction of federation.

But still that may be some little time off, and what are we to do in the mean time? There is another step in the great flight that leads to the heavenly platform which we can mount at once, and that is the step of fraternisation. We can all acknowledge each other as brethren even now. It is time, I think, for us to resolve that we shall no longer be glaring, or snapping, or snarling at one another, and devouring one another. It is time that we should not be content merely to sit still and discourse on the blessings of union, should it ever come to us, and so on. We must be ready to rise up, meet our brethren half way and take each other by the hand, look one another in the face, and hear one another speak. That is what we are doing to-day in this Convention. When I am asked to come and take part in a convention which has this object in view, how could I at such a time and under such circumstances, in the sight of God dare to refuse, merely because I should meet on this platform my Presbyterian, Methodist, and Congregational brethren?

Well, I will not judge others; I will not even judge those who may sit in judgment on me. There are occasions when I feel greatly perplexed as to whether or not I am following the indications of a higher guidance. No such scruple troubles me now. If I look merely to the interests of my own Church, I feel that in coming here I am strengthened and raised up in the eyes of the people of this land. I believe that if I were to do otherwise—if I were to imply that those who take part in this Convention were acting inconsistently with loyalty to their own Church—if I were to describe the Irish Church as so narrow or exclusive or wanting in true catholicity as this, I believe there are some of the members of the Church, and some of its most earnest members, who might begin to ask themselves, Has this Church limits large enough to include me? If I look to the interests of unity, if I look to the interests of the Church of Christ throughout the world, I feel that by refusing such an invitation I should be inflicting a wound on the sacred cause; and therefore I feel it my duty, as well as my pleasure and privilege, to come and take the chair at this meeting. So long as this Convention keeps within those lines which it has so wisely marked out for itself, I trust I shall always be ready to comply with a similar invitation if it should reach me, and occupy, as I do to-day, the position which it is my honour to fill.

THE FIRST OF THE GREAT PUBLIC MEETINGS to be held in Scotland, under the auspices of special committees of various religious denominations, to protest against the licensing of sin in British possessions, will take place at Edinburgh, on Tuesday, Nov. 15. It is intended to have meetings also at Glasgow, Dundee, and Aberdeen. Mr. Henry J. Wilson, M.P., Mrs. Josephine E. Butler, and Mr. James B. Wookey are the invited speakers from the South who are expected to be present at all the meetings.—Sentinel.

SAILORS' REST AID SOCIETY.—Mr. Stephen Burrowes writes:—From the local committees and the seamen frequenting the Rests in the Bay of Naples very encouraging notices are received. Our agent in the Naples Rest is very helpful in caring for the men ashore, and making them comfortable in the only Home for seamen in that dangerous city. The visit to Jersey last June resulted in the establisment of a new Seamen's Evangelistic Mission, under the charge of a local committee. It is hoped to open a Rest at St. Helier's shortly. Tracts are needed for this Mission, and may be sent to Mr. E. Kent, missionary, 36, Aubin-place, Don-road, St. Helier's, Jersey. About November three evangelists will accompany me to the Mediterranean. One of the evangelists can preach in several languages, and between us we can manage English, Italian, and French, while former experience in work among soldiers and sailors will help to make this special mission highly interesting, and by God's blessing

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. Thain Davidson, D.D., of Islington Presbyterian Church.

Our readers are desired to bear in mind that a season of universal prayer on behalf of Sunday-schools and work among the young is fixed by the Committee of the Sunday-school Union for Sunday and Monday, October 16 and 17.

Seeing that the St. Stephen's Review calls the late shocking outrage upon decency, family life, and hospitality "a moral peccadillo"—exclaiming, concerning the House of Commons, "What absurd nonsense it is to demand the elimination of a man from such a house for a moral peccadillo"—it is worse than "absurd nonsense" for the same Review to issue the following circular:—

[To be signed and returned as soon as possible to A. E. Tarry, St. Stephen's Review, 21, John-street, Adelphi, London.]

A MEMORIAL TO MESSRS. W. H. SMITH AND SON.

We, the undersigned Newspaper Proprietors and Journalists, having observed with regret the scandalous and disgraceful character of the articles and news from time to time published in The Pall Mall Gazette, and believing that such publications demoralise the public taste, and thus injure the sale of respectable papers, respectfully request the firm of Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON to desist from selling The Pall Mall Gazette on their bookstalls, and to thus re-establish the character of the English Press.

We are far from endorsing many things which appear in The Pall Mall Gazette, but it has done such service in the cause of morality as to make this "memorial" ridiculous. There are, however, publications sold on the bookstalls which ought by all means to be banished from them.

Rev. Robert McAll, cousin of the founder of the Mission in France bearing that honoured name, has removed to London, as representative in England of that important work. He will be glad to communicate with any who are interested in the spread of the Gospel in France, and who desire to help forward the work by arranging for meetings, &c. His address is 17, Tressillian-crescent, St. John's, S.E.

We commend to the attention of our readers the recently issued report of the Howard Association, which has for its objects "the best methods of crime-prevention and penal treatment." It contains much interesting and instructive matter, both in the nature of information and suggestion. Inter alia, treating of "juvenile pauperism and crime," the Association advocates an extension of the boarding-out system for pauper children, to be followed up by organised emigration. Speaking of intemperance, the report alludes to the great increase of secret drinking-clubs, and attributes these mischievous institutions to the prohibitive measures now in force, instancing the case of Cardiff. But, it may be pertinently asked, if these unlicensed places are so numerous, why do not the united forces of the police and the magistrates suppress them? The machinery is ready to hand; let it be put in motion. And àpropos of clubs, the gentleman's luxurious haunts ought to be subject to the same restrictions, with regard to hours of closing and other matters, as the working-man's bar-parlour.

Our London Y.M.C.A. Associations have now entered upon their winter's work. The leading branches, at Exeter Hall, Aldersgate-street, &c., have sent out very comprehensive and attractive programmes—educational, social, and religious. We trust that many recruits will be enrolled in the ranks at this juncture. Those who can persuade a young man to join one of these Associations may be doing him a service the beneficial outcome of which will reach forward to eternity.

Mr. George Hatton, of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, has returned to London from a three months' stay in Switzerland, where he went hoping to recruit his health. He is better than he was before this season of rest, but we regret to say that he has not received so much benefit from the change as was expected. At Lucerne, on the homeward journey, he had to call in medical aid, and remain under treatment for ten days. Our readers are desired to remember Mr. Hatton in prayer that his health may be perfectly restored.

Pastor Thümmel, of whose recent imprisonment in Germany, for testifying on behalf of Protestant truth, our readers have been informed, is still being pursued by Romish emissaries. From a letter received from his wife by an English lady, it appears that the pastor is now involved in his third lawsuit with his Popish enemies. Twice before he has been sentenced to terms of imprisonment, but the first sentence was quashed on appeal, and the second time he was released after serving eight days, out of the three weeks awarded. An appeal against a third sentence of imprisonment—this time three months—is now pending, and is expected to come on this month. Meantime the cause of evangelical truth is progressing.

Next year at Kieff, in Russia, a large cathedral now in course of completion will be opened, and the nine hundredth anniversary of the introduction of Christianity into the Empire celebrated, with much pomp, upon the spot where tradition has it that the first baptisms took place. After nine hundred years, however, the teachings of Christ still have to permeate Russian society, and the Cross yet has its greatest triumphs in the future.

In answer to many inquiries concerning Mr. Denham Smith's state, we deeply regret to learn that for the past week he has been sinking hour by hour. On several occasions it was thought he had passed away, but the wonderful vigour which has always been one of his characteristics, still sustains him. His perfect calm and happiness in the presence of imminent death are continual; God has been good in easing him of pain.

A weekly critical paper, noticing four recent books, says that "three are decidedly nasty, and the remaining one is peculiar, rather than nice." Alluding to two of them the reviewer says, "In such there is nothing but what must oppress the heart, and very much that will soil the imagination of the reader;" and of the other it would be impossible to speak too sternly, the story being made up of impurity and blasphemy. "We do not hesitate to say," the critic concludes, "that these novels mark a new and sad feature of the age, and it will be an evil day for England when they attain here the same popularity as they have reached abroad."

We have frequently urged that the evil day has already been reached when such books can be issued by any English firm, and we can only appeal earnestly to fathers and mothers to keep a sharp watch upon the literature of the circulating library, and upon the volumes purchased by their children. Contamination must necessarily follow contact with publications of the kind, and it is deeply to be regretted that those who are responsible for their dissemination cannot be brought under the clauses of a recent Act for the protection of the young.

The wholesale slaughter of the birds is going on almost unheeded, and it is stated that the destruction now takes place on so large a scale as to threaten the existence of a number of our most useful species, and that it is carried on chiefly "by men who sell the skins and plumage to be used for ornamental purposes, principally for the trimming of women's hats, bonnets, and clothing. These men kill everything feathered." Quite recently Punch had a kind and timely plea for the birds, "an appeal to the ladies of England," and it says but little for those ladies that such an appeal should be necessary. We trust that all Christian women will refrain from following an unworthy fashion, of which our contemporary says:—

Many a fashion gives employment
  Unto thousands needing bread;
This, to add to your enjoyment,
  Means the dying and the dead.

The Romanist party in Italy have obtained a certain amount of success in the elections for the municipal councils, with the result that in many cases the method of conducting the communal schools will undergo a change, and the priests are busily engaged in collecting signatures to petition "for the restoration of the freedom of the Sovereign Pontiff." On the other hand, most of the Italian journals are writing strenuously, and almost ferociously, against anything like the restoration of the temporal power of the Pope; and it is evident that an arrangement of the kind could not possibly be brought about without much bloodshed, and probably not without Italy being engaged in a foreign war.

Figures recently taken by the War Department at Washington show that in the American Civil War the North lost 320,000 lives, and the Confederate losses would, it is estimated, bring the number up to 500,000. In one battle alone the killed and wounded amounted to no less than 54,000. Apart from these wasted lives, what an amount of human sorrow do these figures represent! Yet there are statesmen who talk glibly of rushing into war.

A correspondent of The British Weekly makes the excellent suggestion that "the thoughtful might be won for Christ as well as the thoughtless," and asks the question, "Why should the cottage get all the tracts and the mansion none?" We fear that there has been too great a tendency to circulate religious tracts and books only in the direction of the so-called lower classes. The tract should be as bread cast upon the waters, and the distribution should be in all quarters, likely and unlikely. An admirable plan is to make use of the leaflet, enclosing one in every letter written which is not of a purely business character. Many of these will be found again after many days, having been pondered over by those who

Professor de Launay is at present in London. Any friends who desire to make arrangements for his Lectures on the Catacombs of Rome are requested to address him to our care. The Professor is announced to lecture at Mildmay Conference Hall, on Tuesday, the 18th instant.

Next year will be the bicentenary of John Bunyan, who died August 31, 1688. Into how many homes has the Pilgrim's Progress taken the simple story of the Cross. Translated into over eighty languages, it must have been read by more people than any other volume in existence, the Bible alone excepted, and apparently it loses none of its interest, but continues to attract readers of all ages. There are few children who can resist the powerful simplicity of its Scriptural teaching, and in that very simplicity lies its influence over those who, later in life, travel with the Pilgrim.

MR. SPURGEON ON SOUL-WINNING.

A SINGULARLY interesting meeting was held in the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Monday evening. The ordinary attendants at the weekly prayer-meeting must have been surprised to find some three hundred open-air preachers, or more, assembled in front of the platform. These brethren had come by invitation of the Open-Air Mission to hear an address from the pastor on "Winning Souls for Christ."

Mr. Spurgeon began by showing what it is to win a soul. It is not to evolve out of man something good already in him, but it is to make him a new creature. This is nothing less than a miracle, though the preacher may be the instrument in the hand of God to accomplish it. Souls are not converted by oratory, nor by our way of putting the Gospel, but by the Gospel itself. So he urged the preachers to go in for thorough conversion. His next inquiry was, In what way can we be hopefully fitted to win souls? And this led to some remarks on the preacher's personal condition. Samson must be right himself, or he could not conquer his enemies. The vessel must be clean, or it would not be used by the Master.

Proceeding to the positive side, he said we win souls as witnesses, i.e., testifying of that which we ourselves know. A man ought to know what he is preaching about. But the preacher must be a pleader also. He must love those he preaches to. Fear must impel him—fear lest sinners should perish. But he must be moved by hope also. "Your enthusiastic confidence may kindle the spark in the soul with which you plead," exclaimed the preacher. But, further, souls were won by example. The holy life of the preacher had much to do with it. And if the preacher were wise he would surround himself by a band of praying helpers. In closing, Mr. Spurgeon said souls must be won by sheer hard work. This work, he indicated, might be public preaching, private conversation, giving tracts, paying visits or writing letters. The burden of his counsel was—by all means save some. It was a worthy deliverance of an honoured servant of the Lord, and will no doubt in due time be published by the Open-Air Mission, whose preachers must have gone away greatly stimulated and helped.

Prior to the address, Dr. Soltau Eccles referred to the Kabyle Mission. Some China Inland missionaries were also commended to God in prayer. Rev. W. Wyatt Gill spoke of missions in the South Seas, and prayed. Mr. Kirkham spoke of the Open-Air Mission, and prayer was offered by Mr. Hertslett, Mr. Joseph Weatherley, Rev. E. W. Moore, of Wimbledon, and Mr.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Steedman, railway evangelist, has concluded a fortnight's evangelistic meetings at Dreghorn, Ayrshire. Hundreds turned out every night to hear the Gospel preached. At the close of each service an inquiry-meeting was held, and many were spoken with about salvation.

Sydenham. — Since September, 1879, Mr. Thomas Fairbard has been engaged in mission work among the poor and the labouring classes in Sydenham and its vicinity. The meetings were at the first held in a small room, but last December a hall in Combe-road, Wells-road, was secured, and much good work has been done in it.

Somerset.—During the past few weeks meetings have been held nightly from the Bible carriage belonging to Captain West, of Bristol, in Burnham, Highbridge, Mark, Wedmore, East Brent, and Weston-super-Mare. Gospel addresses have been given by Mr. A. C. Trew, of the Country Towns Mission Society, and Mr. Parsons, colporteur, to large audiences.

Clerkenwell, E.C.—The weekly open-air services conducted on Mount-pleasant by the workers from the Field-lane Institution during the last six months were brought to a close on Wednesday week with an impressive address by Mr. Gawin Kirkham. The meetings have been well attended, and greatly blessed. Many cases of professed conversion and reclamation have resulted.

Lewes.—The evangelistic mission commenced by Mr. J. Barnabas Bain, Sunday, Sept. 18, and originally arranged for one week, was extended to the 30th, the meetings having increased in numbers and interest as the work went on. Mr. Bain's Bible-readings were much enjoyed, and his clear expositions of the Gospel have been blessed to the salvation of souls. He began a week's mission at Bexhill, near Hastings, on Sunday last.

Gray's Inn-road.—A series of special services have been conducted during the past week for the children and their parents in this poor district, under the superintendence of Mr. Fagg, hon. sec. of Fox-court Ragged School. Therehas been a good attendance, with much manifestation of the Spirit's presence, each evening. Rev. C. B. Sawday, Mr. Frank Seagrove, Mr. S. E. Haward, Mr. John Kirk, and others have taken part in the meetings.

Rye, Sussex.—On September 13 the Herald of Mercy mission ship came to Rye from Boulogne. Since then evangelistic services have been held on board every night with blessed results. Crowds have had to go away for want of room. Over three hundred persons, consisting of fishermen working men, and others attended a fellowship meeting last week, when many testified as to the joy it had afforded them through the visit of the vessel.

Mr. D. M. Drysdale commenced his autumn and winter campaign of Gospel services at Hengler's Circus, Liverpool, on Sunday evening. This will be the eleventh season of the services. There is no more earnest worker in the Lord's vineyard than Mr. Drysdale, says a contemporary; we do not suppose that he ever lets an opportunity slip which would enable him to deliver the Gospel message. By boat, rail, tram, or bus, here, there, and everywhere, he is ever on the alert.

Soho.—On Sunday, September 25, a special effort was made by Mr. Wm. Harrison and his friends to reach the "non-church-going" portions of the population of Soho. In the morning four open-air services were held with a view to attract the people attending the Sunday markets in the Seven Dials and other districts. Large congregations were gathered. In the afternoon a singing band was formed, and at ten prominent corners were declared words of exhortation and truth. In the evening four large open-air services were held at different parts of the locality, where hundreds of the people were earnestly pointed to Jesus. The last meeting for the day was held in Cambridge-circus, and assumed more the form of a praise service. The work of the day lasted exactly twelve hours. Mr. Harrison and his helpers will carry on a vigorous work during the coming winter in the Bloomsbury Hall, Meard-street, Soho.

Rev. W. H. Aitken commenced on Sunday last an eight-days' mission at Ampthill, Bedfordshire.

Plumstead.—Mr. Climie has recently conducted a most successful mission at Cage-lane Mission Hall, which has resulted in the conversion of many souls.

Mile End.—The work at the Great Assembly Hall during the last three weeks, conducted by Mr. Joseph Clarke, has been greatly owned of God. Large numbers, having nightly been impressed by the earnest words spoken, have decided for Christ. On Sundays this vast Mission Hall has been packed, while hundreds have had to go away unable to find even standing room. The attraction has been nothing more than the earnest preaching of the good news of salvation. E. J. PARKER.

Walworth.—A new mission hall was recently opened at 4, York-street, Walworth-road, by the Brothers Young, superintendents of the Working Men's Mission, Collingwood-street, New Cut. The premises afford sitting accommodation to nearly two hundred and fifty persons, and are situate in a very populous district, large numbers of the residents being members of the artisan and labouring classes. Messrs. William Whitterick and H. Young who have long been connected with mission work, will act as superintendents of the new mission.

Willesden.—Mr. Wooldridge is just closing his campaign here, where he has been holding Gospel tent services for about three months. The meetings have been well attended, the interest steadily increased, a number have openly sought and found the Saviour, and the by no means least gratifying outcome of the work is the opening of a mission-room in Tubbs-road for Christian work and worship. Mr. Wooldridge has endeared himself to those who have attended his services, and they will follow him with their best wishes and fervent prayers.

MRS. VALENCE (née Miss Naomi Waterman) is open to conduct several Gospel missions during the coming winter. Her address is 2, Cambridge-terrace, Asylum-road, Milton, Portsmouth.

OBITUARY.

MRS. JOHN WAKEFIELD.

WITH much regret many of our readers will learn that Mrs. Wakefield, of West Park, Clifton, was suddenly "taken home" on Tuesday, September 20. A few days previously she had returned home after her summer holiday, full of plans for a "busy winter" of Christian service. On Sunday, the 18th, she met her much-loved Bible-class as usual, and the next morning appeared especially bright and well, until about twelve o'clock, when she was seized with severe pain in her neck and head. Unconsciousness soon followed, and after a few hours she peacefully "fell asleep in Jesus." Her bright presence will long be missed, not only by a large circle of relatives and friends, but by many others who have felt the attractive power of her voice and manner, and who have shared her wise counsels and ever ready practical sympathy.

HOP-PICKERS.—Gratifying reports of evangelistic effort among hop-pickers in Kent reach us from Mr. G. Gillingham, of Plaxtol, and Mr. Burrows, of East Peckham, Tunbridge. There seems to be a growing spirit of readiness to hear the Gospel message, and we cannot doubt that much of the good seed so plentifully sown will bear fruit now and many days hence.

A MOVEMENT OF SOME INTEREST, says The British Weekly, has begun amongst Congregational ministers in Scotland. On Monday, Sept. 12, at Huntly, Aberdeenshire, twelve ministers gathered for joint study of theology. It was resolved to examine the introduction to Dorner's "System of Christian Theology," which he calls "The Doctrine of Faith." Each one was supposed to have read this. The discussion went on every day, from Tuesday morning to Friday at mid-day. The value of the discussion, which at times became very lively, can hardly be exaggerated. Not only was theological work done, not only intellectual interest aroused and powers of debate sharpened, but mutual understanding and confidence amongst the brethren were deepened, and, above all, time after time, matters were discussed of profoundest spiritual import. Every man came away feeling that he had received a true quickening of the inner life, and a true bracing of the spiritual nerves and muscles for his winter's work.

SEED-SOWING IN MOROCCO.

[The following is from the diary of Miss Baldwin, of the Kabyle Mission, while travelling from Tangier to Larache. It is of interest, as affording a sample of the work the members of the Mission are privileged to do.]

A beautiful morning finds us—a party of eight, including teacher and servants—encamped on the side of a hill covered with wild olive-trees. There is a "saint's tomb" just by, and on this account the villagers were opposed to our camping here.

We expect to travel for some weeks from soke (market) to soke, and village to village, telling the people of Christ. We travel in kadeshas, which are long carriages without wheels, swung between two mules, one in front and one behind, in which two persons and a small amount of luggage can be carried. Travelling in these is quite comfortable, as we are protected from the sun and rain, and are not obliged to stay in one position, as when riding all day in a saddle.

Last Thursday a shaft broke, and we had to encamp at a "duar," while we sent back to Tangier for a new one. As soon as our tents were pitched there our Christian servant sat down with the men who had gathered round, and explained to them the wordless Book. They listened attentively, and many times during our stay there Father talked to this group of men. They seemed to be the principal men of the "duar," and were continually about our tents. I talked and sang to the women.

One afternoon, as I was resting under the shade of a fig-tree, about a dozen girls gathered round to talk to me. I found, although they looked quite young, they were nearly all married. I have seldom seen such a number of strong, pretty girls in a native village, but they were so dirty. While trying to teach them lessons of cleanliness, one said, "We do not like water, it takes our breath away," and their poor, dirty babies looked as though they were never washed.

After mending the kadeshas we were glad to leave so hot a place. The thermometer was as high as 102° in the shade, and we were almost overcome by the heat. We next camped at Berean, and on Sunday morning Father began reading and explaining the Word to a group of men to whom we were giving coffee. The principal man would not listen or drink coffee, but went to a saint's tomb to pray. Some of our party went to work among the people in a market near, while others of us talked to those who gathered round us.

Thus constant opportunities are afforded of speaking for Christ. Leaving Berean, a few hours brought us in sight of a large number of people, and found it was Soke el Tsenine, or "the second day's market." Leaving our kadeshas, we sang one of our hymns, and soon had a large crowd about us, to whom Father preached the Word.

By night we reached Oulad ben Dawad (the sons of the son of David), a good-sized village, but the people were not so interesting as in many others.

We were detained next morning by heavy rain, but between the showers went to one of the huts. As I was going in, the inmates, to my astonishment, drove out a donkey, a dog, and a calf. When the way was cleared I went in, followed by a dozen girls to whom I talked for a long time, and then to a large crowd of women, who were standing outside. I found the Wordless Book of great use. Last Wednesday we rode through the prettiest part of Morocco I ever saw. The hills in some parts were quite thickly wooded, which is an unusual thing for here, and we passed many beautiful clusters of large olive-trees. At noon we rested and had lunch, and as we were starting on it began to rain; but our kadeshas protected us from this, until we got on the river, on which Larache is built, and which we had to cross—ourselves and animals—in boats.

Here we waited two hours for the rain to diminish, and then crossed, having the usual trouble with the poor animals, which are pulled by the natives over the sides of the boats in a most cruel manner. We found out Miss Herdman's and Miss Caley's house, where we spent that night, as it was too wet to pitch our tents.

Next day our tents were pitched outside the city gates, on a bluff overlooking the sea, but protected and sheltered by surrounding gardens, and near to a small village. I went with Miss Caley to see some of her patients, and then to the house, where one after another came to read the Word. One morning when we had finished prayers, we saw a number of fotsies (the educated men) passing on their way to the mosque. Father called them in, and they sat a long time reading, our servant teaching the people. I then read my lesson with him outside the tent, while a crowd gathered round to listen.

Afterwards I took photos of two native huts. So far from the towns where Europeans are, they do not know what a camera is, and so I often get good photographs while the people are wondering what it is. Being asked in to the last hut I had taken, we were much interested in what we saw and the people themselves. The man was sitting surrounded by piles of wool, which he was preparing for market. The mother was grinding wheat at one of the native mills, and there were many odd things they had made hanging from the roof and on the wall. These people, or rather the women who had come in, were disposed to listen, and I improved the opportunity. One woman said: "Our religion (meaning the Mohammedan) is false—we lie, steal, &c.; but yours is true." She was most attentive, and, after we had left, she met us on the road bringing a friend and saying, "Tell her the beautiful words you told me." I gladly told her the good news, and left them talking of it. Oh, that they might indeed receive them into their hearts.

FROZEN TOGETHER.

On a recent hot, sultry night a small company were vainly trying to be comfortable, sitting on the front stoop of a dwelling in a certain city. Suddenly one of the party proposed that they all go to the prayer-meeting "at the First Church." "What on earth put that notion into your head?" queried one of the party. "Oh, it is so hot here, I can't stand it any longer. I thought if we went down there we would get cooled off; it is the coldest place I know of."

This reminds us of what was once said by way of a report made at an Association by a delegate from a certain church: "We are all united in our church," said the delegate, and sat down. As he took his seat he remarked in an undertone to a neighbour "Frozen together."—Words and Weapons.

"THE BRIGHTON DELUSION."—With reference to the recent statement in our columns that the hall in Edward-street, Brighton, is closed, a correspondent writes that this is only temporary; the "Sanctuary" is closed for a few days, he states, while some alterations are effected.

THE LATE MISS JESSIE VEITCH, EDINBURGH.—A memoir of this earnest worker for God is being prepared (by request) by one of the oldest of her soldier friends, Mr. N. R. Hughman (late "Scots Greys"), now Y.M.C.A. secretary in London. He will be glad to receive the assistance of any friends who knew of her labours for Christ as a servant, a missionary, and as a soldiers' friend. Address, Mr. Hughman, 2, Whittington-avenue, London, E.C.; or care of Mr. James Darling, Regent Hotel, Waterloo-place, Edinburgh.

MR. WOOKEY IN GIBRALTAR.—The Mission by Mr. J. B. Wookey opened here on Sept. 21 with every prospect of blessing. The Mission Hall in the New Institute was crowded in every part, the meeting being composed entirely of soldiers. Mr. Wookey riveted the attention of all while he described a visit he had that day paid to the grave of an English orphan girl, who died here two years before, when but thirteen years and six months old. A goodly number remained to the prayer-meeting, and some professed to yield themselves to Christ. Christians here are expecting a great revival of religion as an outcome of this Mission, and earnestly ask the prayers of your readers.

G. Holmes.

"QUIT YOU LIKE MEN."

Tune—"Hark! hark! my soul!" (original tune).

"Quit you like men!" Life's battle lies before you;
Will ye prove traitors to your Prince above?
Will ye desert his standard floating o'er you—
The bannered Cross of Jesu's dying love?

Refrain.

Faithful and loyal, Lord, may we be,
Living or dying, still faithful unto Thee,
Serving the Christ, and in serving Him made free

"Quit you like men!" Heaven's victor-voices call you
Oh, be ashamed of all your coward shame;
Let not the fear of man or fiend appal you;
They always win who fight in Jesu's name.
Faithful and loyal, &c.

'Quit you like men!" No longer slaves of passion,
Led by your lusts or Mammon's selfish greed!
No more enthralled by some unholy fashion,
Freed by God's Son, then are ye free indeed.
Faithful and loyal, &c.

"Quit you like men!" Be true to your true nature;
Are not our bodies temples of our God?
Grow up in Christ to manhood's fullest stature,
Tread in the steps the Perfect Man hath trod.
Faithful and loyal, &c.

'Quit you like men!" "Behold the Man!" that liveth,
And once was slain, that ye may live to God;
Take to your hearts th' eternal life He giveth—
Peace, pardon, power, purchased with his blood.
Faithful and loyal, &c.

CHOLERA IN MESSINA.

In a letter from Sr. Varnier, dated Mandanici, Sicily, September 22, he says:—

You have learned from the newspapers the terrible calamity that has overtaken poor Messina in the shape of a violent outbreak of cholera, which has swept, and is still sweeping away the inhabitants by hundreds daily, hourly! Up to this moment we have been spared, though we may be attacked by this dire scourge at any moment, for all the province of Messina is infected. I write from Mandanici, where I have been since last Sunday, doing the Master's work, with brother Scuderi, comforting and encouraging these panic-stricken people with the word of God. I need not say with what earnestness and even tears, our addresses are listened to; in the time of trouble God speaks to the heart more forcibly, and the stricken conscience of man cannot but acknowledge the just judgments of God!

Words fail me to describe the panic of the inhabitants of Messina at the outbreak of the scourge. The disease was so rapid that one who was perfectly well in the morning would be among the dead by noon. All who could flee to the country, to the neighbouring villages, to the Continent, did so by thousands, escaping for their lives. The streets were deserted, all doors and windows closed. Messina might be called the City of Death—no bread to be had, no shops opened, no marketing. The authorities had to provide a few shops of their own to prevent people dying of starvation in addition to cholera. The distress of people of every class is indescribable.

Last Saturday was a fearful day. I had gone out in the morning, called to assist a dying woman; when I came home I found that my daughter was attacked by the scourge. I entreated the Lord to spare my child, and in mercy He heard me. I was enabled to send my wife and daughter to Taormina, and I, with my boy, came to join Brother Scuderi here, at Mandanici, where the work is prospering. Even here there is cholera, and all the neighbouring villages are crammed with emigrants from Messina, having brought with them the germs of the disease; but we trust in the Lord in whose name we go forth to preach the Gospel of his grace. I hope that our Christian friends will not forget us. May the Lord put it into the hearts of his people to come to our help with their prayers and their means

"I was a stranger, and ye took me in."

The Committee of the Field Lane Refuges and Ragged Schools are compelled to make a very urgent appeal for Funds for the continuance of their work. The work is carried on amongst the most destitute of the poor, both old and young. The Institution possesses no reserve fund to fall back upon.

About £1,500 is required for the support of the Institution to the close of the present year. Upwards of 200 persons are maintained weekly. The average weekly attendances at the Mission Meetings is about 3,000.

The Committee trust the Lord's people will help them in this time of difficulty and pressure. On behalf of the Committee,

ASYLUM for FATHERLESS CHILDREN, Reedham, near Caterham Junction, Surrey. This unsectarian Institution is entirely dependent upon public benevolence. It is open to fatherless children of either sex from all parts of the kingdom. They are received as early as three months old, and are retained and cared for in every way until they are 15 years of age.

Since the foundation of the Charity in 1844, 1,500 children have been admitted to its benefits and 310 are now in the Asylum. Their maintenance entails an expenditure of at least £8,000 per annum, but of that sum only £2,500 is provided by annual subscriptions.

The large balance is dependent upon donations and legacies. FUNDS are urgently NEEDED.

The Secretary will be pleased to give any further information.

BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS AND TEACHERS.

CHOICE SAYINGS.

A Collection of over 800 Striking and Profitable Comments on Great Truths. By Robert C. Chapman. Tinted covers, 9d.; Cloth limp, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, gilt edges, 2s.; Morocco, gilt edges, 3s.

"Here we have gold-dust: 'and the gold of that land is good.' We hardly know a man more noteworthy for abounding grace and deep piety than Robert C. Chapman. His name has never been sounded abroad; but those who know him value him beyond expression. Some of these brief 'sayings' contain whole sermons. Personally, we expect to gather many discourses while studying this little book. A dew from heaven rests upon Mr. Chapman's expositions."

WORKS ON THE TABERNACLE.

THE TABERNACLE, THE PRIESTHOOD, AND THE OFFERINGS:

With the Spiritual Lessons Derived from the Ritual and Ceremonies of the Old Dispensation. By Henry W. Soltau, Author of "The Holy Vessels of the Tabernacle," &c. With Four Beautiful Coloured Illustrations and numerous smaller Engravings: and Memoir of the Author. Cloth, 5s.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 6s. Cheap Edition, tinted covers (without Coloured Plates), 3s.

"Mr. Soltau looks lovingly and reverently at the Sacred Text; and his delight is to show how full it is of Christ, and how precious Christ is to the believer."
The Christian Treasury.

"We heartily commend this work to all students of the Bible; and especially to young Christians. Its teaching is calculated to root and ground them in the faith."—Footsteps of Truth.

"The Illustrations in colour and gold are exceedingly beautiful."—The Christian Age.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MOSES:

As Seen in the Tabernacle and its various Offerings. By Rev. G. Rodgers. With Frontispiece, and numerous smaller Illustrations. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"A very spiritual as well as instructive little book."
The Churchman's Monthly Penny Magazine.

"No young Christian, and especially no preacher, should be ignorant of the truth which this small volume very simply but very forcibly enunciates."
The Christian.

"We cordially recommend this short and very suggestive treatise."—The Bulwark.

THE TABERNACLE AND THE TEMPLE:

Their Symbolic Teaching and Spiritual Import. By Arabella E. Webb. Tinted covers, 6d.; Cloth, 1s.

"Bible-class teachers and students will find this little catechism helpful and suggestive."—Word and Work.

"Intelligently and lucidly written; and manifests much careful study of the Scriptures."
The Irish Baptist Magazine.

THE GOSPEL IN LEVITICUS:

Types and Foreshadowings of the Great Redemption. By Rev. James Fleming, D.D. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"The typical import of the Levitical economy is very forcibly pointed out. Every lover of sound Scriptural theology, especially in regard to the momentous doctrine of the Atonement, will find in the book a rich treat."—The Baptist.

"This is not a book for scholarly critics, dealing with exegetical distinction; but one intended for the common people, dealing with practical questions; and the spirit breathing through the book is that of one earnestly desiring the salvation of his readers."
The Primitive Methodist.

CHRIST AND THE SCRIPTURES.

The Living Word and the Written Word. By Rev. Adolph Saphir, D.D., B.A. Cloth extra, 3s.; with gilt edges, 3s. 6d. Cheap Edition, tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth, neat, 1s. 6d.

"We know of no volume that we more earnestly desire to see in the hands of persons of every age who are pondering the religious question of momentous importance, so much agitating men's minds at the present time. It is admirably adapted for the mature and thoughtful; and also peculiarly fitted to give a right direction to the lives and thoughts of the young, and to mould them into Christians of a high type of character."—The Newcastle Daily Journal.

PEARLS OF WISDOM FROM THE PARABLES.

By A.L.O.E., Author of "Rescued from Egypt," "Exiles of Babylon," "The Young Pilgrim," &c., &c. Illustrated with Twenty-four full-page Original Drawings. Handsomely bound in cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.; with gilt edges, 4s.

"These are 'Pearls' indeed. The gifted authoress has added a rare volume to her already large stock of books, and the reading public will thank her for this delightful work."—The Christian Treasury.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED.

A Sketch of the Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple. With two Chromo-lithographic Views. By Rev. J. Culross, D.D., M.A., Principal of Bristol Baptist College. Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. Special Cheap Edition, tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon says: "Preachers abound; but divines are few. The printing press pours forth a mass of matter; but a real book is a phenomenon. We count ourselves happy, for we have met with a divine in Dr. James Culross; and in his work entitled 'John, whom Jesus Loved, we have found a book.' Many writers are mere echoes of other men's voices . . . they imitate the good steward in bringing forth things old, but things new are quite out of their way. . . . One of the excellences of Dr. Culross is the freshness of his thought. The dew is on his branch; he is no withered bough of the autumn frost. His mind allows young flowers to break through its soil after their own fashion, and to blossom in their own sweet way. . . . It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."—The Sword and Trowel.

"Dr. Culross has handled his subject in such a way as to have produced the most complete as well as the most interesting biography of the Apostle John it has ever been our privilege to peruse. To his task, or rather, we should say, labour of love, he has brought a well-furnished and evenly-balanced mind, great literary skill and taste, and an unusually profound spiritual insight."—Stirling Observer.

"BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR, AND KNOCK."

Christ's Message to the Church at Laodicea. By Rev. J. Culross. D.D., M.A. With Chromo-lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Cheap Edition, tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth, limp, 1s. 6d.

"Another 'gem of purest ray serene' from the deep waters of our brother's teeming mind. He possesses a ripeness of thought and a beauty of expression which, in our judgment, are scarcely equalled, and in not one instance surpassed by those of any other living teacher known to us."
The Sword and Trowel.

"THY FIRST LOVE."

Christ's Message to the Church at Ephesus. By Rev. J. Culross, D D., M.A. With Chromo-lithographic Frontispiece. Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"The glow, as from a golden sunset, which the imagination sheds over his style, gives it a great charm."—The British Messenger.

"We do not know higher-toned or healthier devotional literature, of the evangelical type, than is represented by this and Dr. Culross' previous works. This work is instructive, suggestive, full of spiritual force, and at the same time strong and manly; these latter adjectives we find it impossible to use concerning many of the devotional books produced in our day. Because we may honestly use them in this case, we heartily commend this book for the refreshment of our busy teachers."—The Sunday School Chronicle.

ISRAEL: A PRINCE WITH GOD.

The Story of Jacob Retold. By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., of Leicester. With full-page Illustration of the River Jordan and Jacob's Well. Cloth, 2s 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Bright and attractive in style, while conveying the weightiest and most important teaching."
The Record.

"We have had considerable pleasure in reading this book on the Life of Jacob. Mr. Meyer has great descriptive power. He can tell a narrative well. The subject in his hand glows with life, and the scenes and events in the history of his hero pass vividly before you, and are ever being used to force home on the reader some great and important principle. The volume is prettily got up, well bound, and embellished with frontispiece and illustrations."

Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen.

"AS WELL FOR THE BODY AS THE SOUL."

Until five years ago upwards of 12,000 smacksmen toiled in the North Sea at all seasons, in all weathers, in constant danger, and not only cut off from the joys and comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid. To-day seven Mission vessels cruise with the fleets (running the same risks, exposed to the same furious gales as the trawlers themselves) in order—

1. That injuries and illness may receive prompt help and healing.
2. That true friends may supplant and banish from the fleets that enemy of the English smacksmen, that pest of the North Sea—the foreign coper, or floating grog shop.
3. That dull and monotonous lives may be cheered and brightened by their presence and ministry.

☞ During the year 1886, more than 3,000 cases of sickness and accidents have been successfully treated in the Dispensary on board the various Mission vessels.

THE "DAILY TELEGRAPH" says:—

"The Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen has been instrumental in making the fishing-grounds too hot for those abominable purveyors of fiery spirit and bad tobacco—the Dutch copers. It cares for the men, and has its reward in their love and gratitude."

CONSUMPTION.—CASE OF MR. JOHN NEWCOMBE, of TIVERTON.

Two years ago this spring this patient (then of Stantonbury, Wolverton, Bucks), applied to me. He had lost a sister by this fell disease, and now had been twelve months ill himself. Cold upon cold was followed by languor, gradual loss of flesh, severe cough, blood mixed with expectoration, great pains in the chest and side, profuse perspirations. "I could not get about without help," were his words. Two doctors had reported "both lungs diseased."

In the first letter, after commencing treatment, the patient reports: "Night sweats entirely gone; pains less severe; expectoration less; cough better."

In three months he writes: "I am satisfied that your medicine and advice has done me much good. I should like to see you personally."

Accordingly, he paid me a visit in June. The result of examination showed "phthisis of some time standing, in left lung chiefly."—To continue all, with acid tonic mixture in addition.

The correspondence continued twelve months after this. Gradual improvement took place, until the patient was able to leave off the treatment.

May 14, 1887, he writes: "Make use of my case, if you will, for the good of others."—J. Newcombe, Leat-street, Tiverton.

The Dublin Christian Convention.

The fourteenth annual Convention, held last week, was opened as usual on Monday evening by a well-attended conversazione and a preliminary meeting in the Metropolitan Hall, Christian Union Buildings. Mr. J. R. Fowler presided, and Rev. James Irvine, of Kingstown, in the name of the Committee, bade all visitors a hearty, earnest Irish welcome. There is a hope, he said in proceeding, that God in these times is preparing for us a new Christian era—more wonderful than the Church has ever seen, and we should be preparing ourselves by the putting away of all strange gods that may be among us, that we may be filled with the spirit and love of the Lord Jesus Christ. We want to catch the enthusiasm which animated the first disciples of our Lord when they went forth without purse or scrip to teach all nations. Someone has said that Euclid was the only teacher who ever presided over a united school. After all, it is only great questions that really divide men, and the world owes much of its education to the principle of opposition. There is no denomination that can set forth a full-orbed Christianity, and I would far rather have sects than that any great truth should be lost. Rev. J. S. Fletcher followed with an address upon the words "To you is the word of this salvation sent."

On Tuesday morning there was an earnest prayer-meeting on behalf of Ireland, and these meetings were continued daily. At one of them Mr. J. R. Fowler stated as an encouragement, a fact which had come under his notice. A visitor from Co. Longford had informed them that five years ago he had brought his nephew to attend the Convention. He was a careless young man, but during the meeting his heart had been impressed, and he returned home changed in his views of life, and of what he ought to make of it. On going down to his own part of the country he made no secret of the change which had passed over him. He was the means of bringing about thirty persons to the Saviour. He started cottage meetings in his neighbourhood, which excited deep interest, attracted many to attend them, and those meetings are still going on. Such a fact was well fitted to encourage them to go home to their respective localities to proclaim the good news which had become precious to their own souls.

TWO ASPECTS OF THE GOSPEL.

The first address of the morning meeting was by Rev. Henry E. Brooke, on "Two aspects of the Gospel." We meet, he said, on the ground of Christian union. It is well to remember that this union rests on Christian unity—that unity for which our Lord prayed in John xvii., and which was granted on the day of Pentecost, when by one Spirit all his people were baptized into one body. This unity is not simple unity; it is unity in God. "One as we are" (John xvii. 11), "that they all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us" (John xvii. 21). This unity is not one for which we wait to be brought about by human effort; it is a fact which has been accomplished, and we are to observe or keep it. "Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" (Eph. iv. 3). It is not the unity of denomination; that of itself would do but little good. All Christendom before the Reformation was forced into one denomination, but what good came of it?

There are, however, other hindrances to Christian union than mere differences of denomination. There are heartburnings even amongst the holiest and best Christians from differences of doctrine. My subject this morning bears on this point, as it will, I trust, show that there may be two aspects of the Gospel which have at times been set against one another in controversy, but which represent a side of truth to be combined, not to be opposed to one another.

These two aspects of the Gospel may be seen in the two parables of "the wedding feast" (Matt. xxii.), and "the great supper" (Luke xiv.). They have the same general scope and refer to the same general subject—the Gospel presented as a feast of good things to which men are invited, and to which the Jews, who had the first invitation, refused to come. Then both give the call of the Gentiles, but in Matthew the Gospel is viewed in its human aspect; the message is committed to servants with this commission, "As many as ye shall find bid to the marriage;" and the result of their work is the gathering together of all, as many as they found, both bad and good, so that the wedding was furnished with guests. Here is Christian profession as the result of the servants' work. But this needs to be sifted by the King Himself, hence the expulsion of mere profession, shown in the case of the man who had not on a wedding garment; representing, alas, the great majority of those who profess and call themselves Christians, but who are not found in Christ.

In contrast to this view of the Gospel as ministered by the servants, we have, in Luke xiv., the parable of the great supper, in which only one servant is mentioned, and he is a confidential servant, for he is able to go in and report to his master all that takes place. He is also possessed of power, for the master does not commission him with the words, "As many as thou shalt find bid to the marriage;" but "bring in hither the poor," &c. And so little failure is there in this one servant's work that he is able to say, "Lord, it is done as Thou hast commanded, and yet there is room." This "Servant is evidently the Holy Spirit, who now graciously carries on the work of the Lord, now that Christ, "the Servant of the Lord," has done his work. He is spoken of in Mark xvi. 20 as the great Worker, and He it is who "brings in" souls whom man can only "bid." The word to Him is, "Compel them to come in, that my house may be filled."

How much have these words been abused! They have been quoted to justify persecution and the employment of physical force in compelling a profession where the heart refused compliance. But how different is this to their true meaning. They set forth, as applied to the Spirit, that sweet constraint which He exercises upon the heart, working in souls both to will and to do of God's good pleasure, so that God's people are willing in the day of his power, and his house is filled.

Thus, if we view Matt. xxii. as giving us the human aspect of the Gospel, and Luke xiv. as giving us the Divine, we get two aspects of truth, both needed, and not to be set against one another in controversy, as we are so apt to do. To us, as workers, as servants, the message is, "As many as ye shall find bid to the marriage" —publish the Gospel broadcast in all its freeness and fulness. But there is another side to encourage those whose work would be a failing if it stood alone. This is the truth that God the Holy Ghost is working, too; nay, is Himself the only effective worker. He brings in. He constrains. He works with us, and confirms the word with signs accompanying. Nor is his so working any hindrance to the freeness of the Gospel. "Election (as one has well said) does not prevent the Gospel being free to all. What it does prevent is the Gospel being rejected by all. All are freely invited, but those only "will" to come whom God the Holy Ghost makes willing. Let us, then, value his power the more, and regard it as the great essential to successful evangelisation.

REGENERATION AND REDEMPTION.

Rev. Dr. J. Macfadyen gave an address on "The Earthly Side of Regeneration, and the Heavenly Side of Redemption." He took for a text the words in John iii. 12, "If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things?" A friend last night, on being told that this was the topic, said, "Is there not a paradox here? Ought it not rather to be stated, The heavenly side of regeneration, and the earthly side of redemption?" I told him that the paradox was not mine, but is the paradox of the Lord Himself, as contained in the words I have read. The words are the text of his discourse to Nicodemus, who is told, "Orthodox as you are, highly esteemed as you are as a ruler, even you must be born again." Then in the last part of the discourse the Lord goes on to say, "God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." In an earlier portion of that discourse the words occur, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up," and the words I have quoted as the text of my address stand midway between these two passages; the treatise on regeneration leads up to those words, and the explanation of redemption comes after. If our Lord used words as we do, and followed the courses of thought as we do, He meant Nicodemus to understand that, in some way or other, regeneration has an earthly side, and that redemption has a heavenly side; for He goes on to say, "How shall ye believe if I tell you heavenly things?" So it will be well to ask what our Lord meant when He uttered these words, applying the word "earthly" to regeneration, and "heavenly" to redemption. It goes without saying that our Lord could not have been denying the truth, which has been so eloquently and lucidly set before us to-day, that regeneration has its heavenly side, too. Bless the Lord for the great truth which has been so clearly stated and so conclusively enforced, that the Lord gives us his Spirit; that we are born again, not by our own will, not by our own power, but by the power, and by the will of God.

And here, perhaps, it may help a little to clear up the way, if I remind you of one or two points which must be looked at when we would deal with Regeneration. To-day we are met by a great number who, the moment they hear the words regeneration and new birth, say at once these words do not represent anything that is practical, or that has a meaning in the history of the Christian. Let us look at the case as it respects them. Take the literature of the day, and you will see such phrases as "the regeneration of humanity," "the new birth of a nation." I do not say that the words have no significance; but it is fair for us to say, If it is possible for humanity to be regenerated—if it is possible for a nation to have a new birth, then the teaching of the Lord is justified when He says the individual may be regenerated, and the individual may have a new life.

Going a step further, we find a class who say not that baptism regenerates a man, but that there can be no true regeneration apart from it. Now it is fair to take our stand on this part of God's Word, on its specially distinctive teaching on the point, and ask, How is it possible for a material sign like the application of water to the face or body, to produce a great spiritual change such as that which our Lord represents here? Until that question is answered satisfactorily, we are justified in passing by the difficulties which may present themselves. But there is another class with which it is more important to deal. Some may read Romans viii., or take up the biography of David, and they may say, I find David saying this about himself, and Paul that; and I am afraid that I am not born again, because, honestly, I cannot say the same things about myself that they did. Now, one or two thoughts here. First, does it not savour of self-importance to consider that we must pass through the same experiences as a great mind like that of David or Paul, or to compare ourselves with them? You and I are very little pools, whereas David and Paul are great oceans! It is scarcely wise to ask that the great storms which stir the mighty ocean should be reproduced in the little pools which you and I call yourself and myself. I ask you to read your Bible carefully. Take David's Psalms, those belonging to his early life; or take Paul in the early days of his Christian life, before their development. The 23rd Psalm was written in David's pastoral days, and so you find him saying, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in the green pastures, He leadeth me by the still waters." David had to pass through many a conflict with sin, through terrible experiences before he penned the 51st Psalm with its wonderful utterances of contrition for sin. So with Paul. It is when writing to the Corinthians that you find him disposed to boast a little; you see that in a certain degree he is satisfied; but let a few years go by and bring him to the time when he is writing his Epistle to the Ephesians. Then he writes such words as, "I am less than the least of all the saints!" Years have taught him many a lesson as to the sinful character of his own heart. Come to the Epistles he wrote when his training had been completed, and then you will find him him saying, "This a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief." Paul did not insert that in his early Epistles, and the Lord had to deal with him for many a day and give him many an experience before he could say "I am the chief of sinners." I throw out these hints because I know that with young people there is this difficulty. The great point is that the soul be regenerated, and that questions of time and place and form are subordinate to them, and are to be considered as subordinate questions when dealing with this subject.

Some may think that the expression, "Old things have passed away, all things have become new," is too violent language; but the moment a man is regenerated it is not wild to say that he has now a new God, though there is no change in God; a new Saviour because his position towards Christ is changed; and a new Bible. He has a new life, and business is quite another thing. He lives among a different set of men. So that if you follow the thought to its close you can see that the Apostle's language, violent as it seems to be, is not too violent for the fact; old things have passed away, and this we acknowledge to be by the Spirit of God.

THE EARTHLY SIDE.

God works the change, there is the heavenly; man submits, there is the earthly. The moment that change takes place a man cannot hide it; anyone can see that a change has taken place, and, whether he agrees or not with the account given of it, he is prepared to say it has taken place. A young lady comes to me and says, "I am regenerated. I have passed from darkness to light." I say in reply, Show me that your profession is true; if you have been a giddy girl before, you will show that God has been working with your heart by your becoming a succourer of many. Or, a man comes to me who has been leading a vicious life. "I am regenerate," he says. I cannot accept this unless he abandons his drunkenness and leaves his vice. Take it all round; if a man has undergone this great change, the only way we can judge of it is by beholding an outward change. This is precisely the argument which our Lord submitted to Nicodemus. He came to Jesus saying, "I want to know your teaching, your profession;" and the Lord in answer says, "Look at these fishermen; you are a ruler of the Jews; you know all about these men; try any one of them, and you see that he is a new man, living under new principles." And hence the Lord says, "If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not; if you do not believe what you see with your own eyes, how will you believe if I tell you of God's great love to the world and my love to men?"

THE HEAVENLY SIDE.

"God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Have you ever tried to realise the influence which that one passage, that Gospel within the Gospel, a star of the first magnitude in the firmament of Holy Scripture—what an influence it has all round the world? I suppose there is no congregation of Christians that gathers together all the world over that, in some form or other, has not been thinking of the blessed announcement which that passage makes. Take that as the message of Redemption. You see it is heavenly, because it tells us of the Author—God. You ask, Why did Christ come? God sent Him. You ask, Why did God send Christ? I must answer, Because God loved the world. When you ask me, Why did God love the world, I can only say, He loved the world because He loved the world. It is a heavenly thought; man could never have conceived the thought, and man never did conceive it. If you ask the way in which God shows this love further, you see it is yet more heavenly. He sent his Son Jesus Christ. And what a thought when you look at what Christ came to be and to do. Into that life everything that a sinless man could bear seems to have been crowded. He could understand all things, yet He lives among men of the narrowest sympathies. He had a love which brought Him from heaven, which embraced every individual of the race, and yet when He came to his own they received Him not. He could remember the world when the morning stars sang together, as they saw it fresh from its Maker's hands; but now He lived in the ruin of all He had made. As the long life of suffering drew to its close, the powers of hell were let loose. We see Him in the Garden when his sweat is as great drops of blood; we see Pilate and Herod, enemies before, joining hands over his condemnation; the treachery of one disciple, and the denial of another entering like iron into his soul; and we see Him brought to the place of punishment and crucified between two thieves.

But for the men who compassed his death it was not enough that body and soul were suffering; reproach, scoffing, sneers, each given with deadly hatred, do their work, and yet He prays for them, and will to the end. They stand by exultingly crying, "Come down from the cross." And there, too, that no drop of suffering might be absent from the cup, all his wounds are opened afresh by the presence of his mother, who with her own hands had woven for Him the seamless dress for which the soldiers cast their lots. His mother, when He was a mere boy up in the hill country, had taught him the Psalms of David in the quiet cottage there, but never thought to hear from Calvary the utterance of one of these as his own bitter experience, when bearing the sins of men, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" O Lamb of God, was ever love like thine? That was a heavenly thought; it was only the mind of God that could conceive it; it was only the heart of God that could imagine it; it was only the will of God that could carry it out to the end.

HOW IT BECOMES OURS BY FAITH.

"As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up." I can remember being sorely puzzled whether I had the right faith or not; but faith in the sense in which Christ uses the words, is one of the simplest, one of the easiest things in ordinary life. You have, for example, an account with your banker, you sign a cheque and the banker honours your cheque. That is faith, you believe in him when you deposit your money, he believes in you when you signed your cheque. A young man asks a young woman to marry him. Is there an act of more boundless faith? The man takes the woman until death; the woman reposes all her future peace and usefulness on the man she loves—that is faith. He believes in her, she in him. Christ says, Have faith in Me, I died for you, I live for you, have faith in Me. The main is laid of the great reservoir, passing every one of us, and if we connect our houses it will come up, and will be the water of life. You never heard of salvation offered by philosophers or priests, so that the conception of man being saved by faith in Christ is a heavenly thought. It never entered the heart of man till God put it there.

In the afternoon the Archbishop of Dublin presided, and delivered the address that will be found on another page.

Rev. Dr. Lansdell spoke upon "the Bible in Russia, Siberia, and Turkestan," and gave an account of his travels and experience in circulating the Scriptures in those parts of the Russian Empire. The great object he aimed at was to get copies of the Scriptures, or portions of the Scriptures, placed in every hospital, in every prison, and at every public place. This had been accomplished to a very large extent. The Russian Government would not allow a foreign missionary to work, but it would allow the Word of God to be spread. Whenever it was said that the Greek Church forbade the spreading of the Scriptures it was untrue. There was a field of mission labour—the Valley of Kashgar—where, as far as he knew, there never had been any Christian missionary. He was very much inclined to go there; and if they were to give £5000 for a man to act as interpreter, there was only one whom he knew who could do so, and that man was willing to go. The principal difficulty was the money difficulty. He asked them for their prayers, and it might be that God would provide a way for him to go thither.

Rev. W. Ross described the efforts being made in Cowcaddens, Glasgow, where he has been labouring for several years. There are thousands of people in the neighbourhood outside the pale of all Church effort. There are four theatres open, and the church is surrounded by a battery of twenty-two public-houses constantly tempting the poor people to their own ruin. Other agencies of the worst kind exist in all their deadly strength. Nevertheless something is being done, and as an evidence of this it could be said that 7800 people have come into the church of their own accord and signed the pledge.

REV. E. JENKINS ON HOLINESS.

In the evening Major-General Rice presided. Rev. E. E. Jenkins delivered an address on "Holiness," which he based upon Matt. vi. 16. I believe, he said, that God has reserved for these last times the crowning argument of "the new creature" which is the product of faith in Christ. "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature." This evidence is unlike other, inasmuch as it has not been entrusted to a particular class of apologists, but placed in the charge of the individual disciple. It comes not from the pulpit, from the council chamber, from the treatise, but from the life, and the argument is rendered conclusive from the fact that the character which springs from faith in Jesus is purer in conduct, loftier in aim, and more fruitful in beneficence than that which is produced under any other system of morals or belief.

Look at other religions which are to-day spoken of with great respect by those who reject ours. Formerly we knew but little about them, but we know a great deal about them now. We have access to as much literature as they possess; we have large opportunities for visiting the countries of those that believe in them; we have penetrated the high places which are the authorities of their doctrine, and present their best results; we have examined their traditions; we have mingled with the people whose life has been formed and inspired by their influence. I might accuse these non-Christian faiths of many defects; I might speak of their unhistoric traditions; I might assail their violations of nature; I might condemn the barrenness and failure of their work; but their most conspicuous difficulty is the moral defect of their operations. They cannot produce the new creature, the new character. Their ceremonial abounds in symbols of holiness, they have the form and symbols of purity; but they cannot change the heart; they fail to touch the motives of a man's life, to put him on another path, to make him another man. It has seemed to me that they cannot command the power to bring into practical working even a moderate expression of natural piety, and, as respects the fight in every man's breast, their record is uniform defeat.

But there is a philosophy which unites with us in condemning them, their barrenness and their feebleness, but includes the Christian faith which you and I profess. They acknowledge that it is a more refined and enlightened superstition, but no less is it a superstition. They compliment us on the fact that it has done a good work. An extraordinary discovery that! As an instrument of education it has a favourable record; but in the march of thought and exact knowledge, it must be left in the rear. Now, there is one confession they make, and I will lay hold of it, for I heartily agree with them. They say a new creature is wanted, a new earth is wanted wherein dwelleth righteousness; but they say nature will meet the want, and that she alone has the right to say, "I create all things new." I am disposed to ask philosophy to furnish me with an example of the skill and power with which she can change man's life, and to whom does she refer me? To certain men of unassailable virtue. I know some of them; but I deny that their virtue is the product of their atheistic parentage. They had a Christian parentage; they drew their thoughts from "the milk of the Word," and took their Christian habits with them because they became part of themselves. From whom did they derive the restraints which curbed their passions? From the great storehouse of the Christian Church where you and I got them. And now forsooth these fruits are said to be the product of Antichristian principles; that is a specimen of their logic and their charity.

To make this statement perfect, I must add that, where the Christian faith has not had very much to do with the character of a man, and where most has been left to his atheistic principles, the result is not encouraging. I shall not put accuracy into hazard when I say that in that very proportion the moral standard of the life has gone down. And these facts bring me to this conclusion:—First, that moral purity and practical righteousness are the proposed results of all teaching. Second, that these fruits are not only found in their highest form in the examples of the Christian Church, but are found nowhere else. I would take that stand; let us boldly maintain it. Holiness is the exclusive heritage of Christian believers. The type of separation runs through all the provisions of the Temple and ceremonial, to foreshadow the lines of the Church of the Messiah. Every member of the Jewish congregation was declared holy; every work was supposed to have on it the blood of separation; every house was a miniature sanctuary; every businesss was a religious service; every recreation was a Divine benediction. That is our symbol. The command which comprehends all laws is this: "Ye shall be holy, as I am holy."

At the close of the address, of which the above is little more than the opening, Dr. John Ker delivered an evangelistic address, upon the words. "All we like sheep have gone astray……and the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all."

On Wednesday morning Lord James Butler presided, and the first speaker was Dr. Lansdell, whose topic was "Christian Work and Workers." In referring to some of the difficulties, he said it would have been far easier for the Lord's first disciples to have commenced their work further afield; but they were commanded to begin at home. It is hard work sometimes, as a converted officer, or a young lady of fashion, has often found, to begin to speak for Christ amongst old associates; but that is the field appointed. This is an age in which we see marvellous instances of the blessing accompanying exactly this kind of work.

Rev. Dr. Macfadyen spoke upon "The Parent's Reward," and remarked that, looking at the question from the Scriptural standpoint, the position of parents and guardians of children is one of indescribable importance. It is scarcely possible, indeed, for us to realise the onerous responsibility that God lays upon us when He calls on us to care for children. I think we may lay down two principles with certainty; first, that childhood should have its childhood to itself, though care should be taken that the children are all the time surrounded by an atmosphere of spiritual life and prayer. Then, when infancy is over, comes the time of careful development. What I want to bring before you is this: that if you do your duty by your children, then God has graciously provided not only that there shall be a reward for your work, but, what is of greater importance, a reward in your work.

In the absence of Mr. J. S. Smithson, an old friend at the Convention, who had been expected to arrive from America in time for the meetings, Mr. George Clarke closed the morning with a brief address on the work of the Railway Mission.

In the afternoon there was a good missionary meeting under the presidency of Major-General Rice. Rev. E. E. Jenkins, who, two years ago, paid a visit to Japan, China, and India, referred to the last-named which he had visited four times. On this occasion he had seen the kingdom of Christ outside Christianity. He explained what some might deem a singular expression, as meaning that he had found the rulers and the people of the country working for Christ without knowing it.

Rev. W. H. Collison gave some interesting details of work in the North Pacific, dwelling more at length upon Alaska, the people of which he described as a fine race intellectually, and as superior to all the natives around them.

Rev. H. Grattan Guinness gave a very genial missionary address, the text of which might be said to be his opening remark: The parish of the missionary is the world, because the love of God is universal in its reach. The redeeming work of Christ which the missionary publishes is equally universal; and the Advent of the Holy Ghost in cloven tongues of fire was to inspire the Church to do a universal work. The love of God, the redeeming work of Christ, and the evangelising action of the Holy Ghost are three universal things. He was glad, he said, to see the map which faced the audience; holding in his hand a little pocket atlas of the world, he added—It is a good present either for a traveller or a missionary. McCheyne was wont to say that if people used the map it would guide their prayers. At the prayer-meetings of the China Inland Mission, they always have their maps. Sometimes a missionary will pause while praying, point out the locations of stations to which reference is being made, and then pray. Do not let us forget that our own country is a very small part of the world, and that Ireland is an exceedingly small portion of it.

On Thursday morning General Noble presided, and Rev. H. E. Brooke delivered an address on "The Ministry of Reconciliation."

Rev. John Smith (Edinburgh) spoke upon "The Gift of Power." The ministry of reconciliation, he said, is committed to all God's people; but the question of many hearts is "Who is sufficient for these things?" In proceeding, he based his remarks on the message to the Church at Thyatira (Rev. ii. 26), "And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations." The Church of Christ seems not unlike the Church at Thyatira in the days of old, for it is cowering before the mighty dominant powers of evil. What of the mighty power of drunkenness; what of that terrible miasma of uncleanness; what of the worldliness within the Church to-day? Do we occupy a conquering attitude? Are we not tame and speaking smooth things, when we should be smiting in the name of God? Power is wanted, and we can receive it from God, and be enabled to do great things for Him. In proceeding, Mr. Smith dwelt upon the power needed, and the condition of its reception—accepting a gift. He heartily rejoiced at the earnest tone of the Convention, and trusted it would result in lasting good, both to Dublin and Ireland at large.

WORK AMONG ROMAN CATHOLICS.

Rev. Dr. Hamilton Magee said:—I have made this subject the study of my ministerial life, and one department of it especially,—How to reach the masses of our Roman Catholic fellow-countrymen? There is great difficulty in speaking upon such a subject; but so far as I am concerned, and I am sure I may say the same of those around me, we are perfectly willing and most desirous that our countrymen, both Protestants and Roman Catholics, should precisely understand our attitude in this matter, and that of those who are in sympathy with us. We have nothing to conceal. There are many persons of the opinion that there is no access at all to Roman Catholics, that the efforts made to reach them are vain, if not fictitious, and they look with suspicion upon any statement made to the contrary. I will only say in answer that they are not intimately acquainted with our various forms of Christian work carried on in every part of this country in connection with all our churches. We have been hearing during this Convention of the triumphs of the Gospel all over the world. And is Ireland to be excluded? I affirm, without fear of contradiction, that there is immense freedom of access to them, if we only know how to approach them. I do not underrate the difficulties. They are, no doubt, immense, and no missionary in a foreign land has greater. There are no difficulties peculiar to the mission field which do not present themselves here, and in addition some difficulties peculiarly our own. But, notwithstanding, I affirm that the difficulties are as much in ourselves as in the people whom we desire to benefit. We are not qualified, we have no skill—these are the things which make the difficulties quite as much as any prejudices on their part. The Irish Roman Catholic heart, if I may so say, is like a Chubb's lock, so skilfully constructed as to defy the bungling efforts which most of us have been making in the past. If we have not been succesful it is because we have not the right key, or do not know how to use it. There is a key that will open their hearts, and our one prayer should be that God will put that key into our hands, and give us grace to use it. If the spirit that breathed in the language of the Archbishop of Dublin on this platform took possession of our hearts as Christian Protestants, I care not what the future may be; if Protestants are but united, and if God baptizes us with the baptism of the Holy Spirit, there is a brighter and more glorious future before the Protestants of Ireland than there has been in all the past. What, then, should our aim be in reference to our Roman Catholic fellow-countrymen? Should it be to win them to any particular church? Such is not our aim, for it would be ignoble and selfish; though I cannot deny it has too often been our aim, and I do not exempt my own church from the charge. Speaking generally, I may say that all the churches have had no higher aim than to make converts to themselves, and our quick-witted fellow countrymen have detected the motive; they have been on their guard, and have resented the interference even of those who have approached them with God's Word. Roman Catholics do not resent the approach of those who come to tell them about Christ, if they are perfectly sure that the object is not to proselytise in the sense of which I have spoken. If they are approached in the right spirit, they may be spoken to anywhere and everywhere. We should be as careful as to our method of approaching them as we are about our aim.

Rev. James Creggan (Belfast) recommended open-air preaching, cottage meetings, the circulation of religious tracts, and personal dealing with souls as among the best methods of reaching the masses. Good singing would also prove attractive, as he illustrated by referring to the singing of Mr. Sankey in connection with Mr. Moody's efforts. The work should be carried on with spirit, and, in view of the perishing around them, men and women should come to the rescue.

The last meeting at night was a crowded one, and at the close of two addresses by Rev. John Smith (Edinburgh) and Mr. George Clarke, an after-meeting was held.

SEAMEN AT ANGLESEA, NORTH WALES.—Mr. Richard Morgan has recently opened a Sailors' Rest at Amlwch, Anglesea, which has proved a great success. The port is very small, but is frequented by a large number of sailors, who greatly appreciate the efforts made on their behalf.

FOREIGN NEWSPAPER POSTAGE.—With reference to the table of rates given in our last issue for postage on newspapers to foreign countries and the British colonies, it should have been stated that papers must be posted within eight days of date of issue, otherwise they will be charged at "Book Post" rate.

THE POOR OF THE EAST-END.—A writer in The War Cry, describing "A Saturday night down East," says:—Living is hard work down Whitechapel just now; some are making slippers at three shillings and sixpence per dozen, finding their own cotton and inside linings! One woman we found repairing a coat for threepence, out of which she had already spent three-halfpence for lining, and would be occupied three hours on the job; others are, we see, making Christmas-tree sweet-boxes for two shillings and eightpence per dozen gross. I need not expatiate on the utter impossibility of this rate of labour to do more than just keep body and soul together, which indeed it barely does The rent has of course to be paid at all costs while a bit of bread and sup of tea must suffice to satisfy the claims or ever-recurring hunger.

Letters to the Editor.

"A PROPHETIC LETTER."

Dear Sir,—As a believer who, though united in outward communion with those who are somewhat invidiously called "Exclusive Brethren," yet am one in heart and spirit and affection with all those who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and truth, will you allow me to say a few words in reference to the letter you published in a recent issue from Mr. Groves to Mr. Darby, dated 1836.

You very justly entitle it "A Prophetic Letter." The question naturally arises, What is it prophetical of? Probably I am not transgressing the bounds of charity if I assume that you consider it to be a foreshadowing of that apparently isolated position which the "Brethren" are now found occupying. This is what was in Mr. Groves's mind when he wrote the letter, and many, doubtless, will agree with both him and you.

There is another side to it, however, of which I should like to remind your readers, and in doing so I am only going over a similar line to that which I notice is constantly taken in your journal, though not perhaps with the same object in view. I take it that Mr. Groves's letter is strikingly prophetical of the state of things which has forced this company of earnest and godly Christians who, if they have erred at all, have only erred on the side of an over-sensitiveness and jealousy as to the truth of God and the honour of Christ, into a path of separation from the modern developments of Christendom.

I will not myself attempt to describe what is going on around. I refer your readers to the testimony rendered by your own journal, and by others, like Word and Work and The Sword and Trowel, and by every faithful minister of the Lord Jesus Christ in these days. We who have been, as we believe, led by the Spirit of God into a separate place have to contemplate to-day the striking spectacle of many of the Lord's servants, who in former times have ridiculed our protests and characterised us as croakers and evil prophets, now brought face to face themselves, and engaged in a deadly struggle—and a hopeless struggle, too—with the very things of which we were led to see the beginnings, and to speak vigorously of them, many a long year ago. The seeds of worldliness, looseness of doctrine, and indifference to the claims of Christ, which were being sown in Christendom in the earlier days of "the Brethren," are now bringing forth a plentiful harvest; and it does not require a great amount of perception to see that faithful Christians who are still identified with the various denominations are at their very wits' end to know how to tolerate what is passing under their eyes continually. They would fain alter or stop these things, if they could, but their helplessness is only too manifest.

It is all very well to say, as Mr. Groves does, that we are not responsible for what goes on in the Church of God. In one sense, perhaps that may be true; but that is not the question. Paul was not responsible for the deadness and hypocrisy of Judaism; Wycliffe and Luther were not responsible for the errors of Rome; Whitfield and Wesley were not responsible for the apathy and worldliness of the Anglican Church. But each of these devoted servants of Christ, and thousands of others not so well known, were compelled, sooner or later, by the very force of circumstances, into taking an outside place. Where would have been the glorious unfoldings of Christianity in the Pauline Epistles, where the dawning of the light of truth and liberty in the Reformation, where the wonderful revival of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, if Paul, and Wycliffe, and Luther, and Whitfield, and Wesley, and all the other noble men and women who are identified with them, had persisted in remaining within the communions where they were born and bred, and in associating in life and service with those still linked up with those communions? Were they not all striking examples of the truth of that word in 2 Timothy: "If a man therefore purge himself from these (i.e., the vessels unto dishonour) he shall be a vessel unto honour, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work"?

I do not want to trespass further on your space, or to enter into questions which have been argued times without number. I only seek to take the occasion of the reprint of this letter of Mr. Groves, to emphasise to your readers the circumstances which have placed us where we are.

I should just like to add that there is probably not one amongst us, who knows anything of the present state of Christendom, who does not look out over the great sea of difficulty and perplexity which spreads itself before us, without the deepest yearnings and longings of heart towards those dear saints of God who are still imagining that they can do what no one has ever done yet, that is, to stem the great tide of evil by remaining associated with it.

Such a course can only lead to loss and damage to one's own spiritual life, and a gradual failure and weakening of one's testimony for Christ. It was tried in very early times by one of whom it is said that "he vexed his righteous soul from day to day" with the unlawful deeds of those around him; but, with all his vexing, both he himself and his testimony ended in a dismal failure. "He seemed as one that mocked" when he told of the coming judgment. How much better to have been in the place of faith and power with Abraham, who, though he never sat, as a great man and a judge in this world's affairs, at the gate of a city, as Lot did, yet occupied the infinitely more preferable, if more quiet and out-of-sight, position of the "Friend of God"!—Believe me, yours in Christ,

Adelphos.

[If no one else should reply to this dear brother's letter, we shall be constrained to do so ourselves. He has set a good example in adopting a self-restrained and courteous tone, which we hope will be maintained by any other correspondent. At present we only ask, Can "Adelphos" be right in implying that all other Christians are vessels of wood and earth—Lots vexing their righteous souls among men of Sodom—and that he and other adelphoi are vessels of gold and silver because they purge themselves from these; that is to say, from vessels of wood and earth, from Lots, such as George Müller? To few men is given so long a life of active service; and few have lived so useful and so blameless a life. Yet George Müller stands only second on the list of those whom these zealous but mistaken brethren excommunicate. Surely such an application of this Scripture is not according to truth and love. —Ed.]

NURSES IN INDIAN HOSPITALS.

Sir,—Looking at the Rome-robed "Sisters" now employed in the hospitals of Bombay, &c., and studying their teachings and actions, every wide-awake Protestant can see the leaven of the "Infallible Vicegerent." The subordinate nurses are required to attend some ritualistic church, even though they had been Dissenters before; and as fast as can safely be done they are drawn into the Anglican Confessional.

If the plan for employing lady nurses in Indian hospitals, now being so largely promoted, is to import scores of these Anglo-Roman sisters, it will prove one of the most thorough schemes of Papal proselyting which the Jesuits have ever undertaken in India. The pleas of charity and devotion in nursing the sick, and the nominal Protestant connection, make this Sisterhood scheme all the more effective in its designs. If true Protestants of all names were more united and active they could combine to have the work of nursing the sick done equally well by those whose motives would be of quite a different character. Meantime, much more must be done than ever before in the way of earnest religious work in hospital visitation.

TO MRS. AMANDA SMITH.—As several letters—some containing money—which have been sent to Liberia have gone astray, we shall be glad if Mrs. Amanda Smith will send us a safe postal address, so as to ensure her receiving future communications from her friends.

THE REFORMED CHURCHES in the Cevennes have just celebrated the centenary of the Edict of Toleration. The weather was magnificent. About five thousand were present at the raising of a monolith, on which was a suitable inscription. The audience listened to a fine discourse from Joshua xxiv. 26, 27. May this stone be a memorial that there is a living Church still

The Book World.

Exposition of the New Testament. By Matthew Henry. Jack & Co. We have received vols. viii. and ix. (embracing Epistles to Corinthians to Epistle of James) of this new and handy edition of these world-famed "Expositions." Notwithstanding the many modern commentaries, this ought to hold its ground in the esteem of the Christian public. (4s. each).

"Before His Presence with a Song." By J. D. Bernard, A.M., Canon of Wells. Elliot Stock. Seventeen hymns on spiritual themes, adapted for use in Church Hymnals. Lovers of sacred poetry will find some pleasing and profitable compositions among them, as well as practical suggestions in the preface worth noting in reference to Sacred Hymnology. (1s.)

Friendly Greetings. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. This well-known series of Illustrated Readings for the People merits the warmest commendation. The numbers bound together in the volume fully sustain their character for sound Gospel teaching, presented in most attractive form; while the coloured plates make it one of the most beautiful books of its class.

Pulpit Trees and Homiletic Undergrowth. By Rev. Thomas Kelly. 6s. Funk & Wagnalls. The contents of this volume are described as Dicourses, Sermonic Saplings, Outlines, and Germs. They comprise some fifty different subjects and texts; both in the titles given, as well as in the treatment employed, they display much originality and vivacity of thought. The style of the book is decidedly American; but, in the eyes of many, it will be none the worse for that.

Our Church Manual: Suggestions for Prayers and Devotions at Home and in Church. By Rev. A. H. Dunn, M.A. 6d. Roper & Drowley. This little manual will interest only Episcopalians, and satisfy only those who lay great stress on baptism and the Lord's Supper. The hymns at the close of the book are well chosen, and quite sound in doctrine. Some of the prayers are spiritual, but the chapter on self-examination goes quite beyond the mark, when it recommends "private absolution," whatever that may be.

The Wonders of Nature. By Prof. Rudolph. Second Edition. With illustrations. (2s. 6d.). Simpkin, Marshall & Co. A truly marvellous array of fascinating facts is given in this volume, with respect to the wonders that encompass our world, and the vast universe of which it forms a fractional part. Here are heights to climb, and depths to sound, that will satisfy the most voracious searcher after the wonderful. The book is written with true reverence of spirit, and the study of its pages cannot fail to awaken feelings of worship and awe.

Gordonhaven: Scenes and Sketches of Fisher Life in the North. By an Old Fisherman. 1s. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. Here we have from the pen of a sympathetic observer a most faithful and graphic delineation of seafaring life on the shores of the Moray Firth. The idiosyncrasies and habits of the people; the perils and surroundings of a fisherman's life; the periodical outbreaks of religious zeal—all are depicted with much fidelity and skill, with plenty of local colouring, and numerous specimens of the broad and expressive Scottish dialect spoken in these parts.

Methods of Church Work, Religious, Social, and Financial. By Rev. Sylvanus Stall, A.M. 6s. Funk & Wagnalls. The author has gathered together a mass of valuable material capable of being turned to good account by thoughtful and practical minds. Suggestions on almost every conceivable form of Christian activity are given, and illustrated by facts drawn from the observation and experience of years. The tone of the book is truly spiritual and devout. Pastors of churches and all leaders of Christian effort will find in this compendium of sanctified plans and arrangements an invaluable vade mecum.

The Holy Bible, and the Sacred Books of the East. By Sir M. Monier Williams, K.C.I.E., Boden Professor of Sanscrit. Messrs. Seeley & Co. We are thankful to see these valuable addresses in a collective form. Three of them were delivered in the current year in behalf of the C.M.S., the Bible Society, and the C.M. Zenana Society, and will do much under God to recommend the principles of these noble Societies to the cultured classes. Sir M. Williams does not excel as a platform speaker, but for that very reason his addresses will bear reading again and again. But it is not their deep learning and sound sense that impresses us so much as their bold proclamation and exaltation of A Harmony of the Gospels in the Revised Version. By S. D. Waddy, Q.C., M.P. T. Woolmer. 3s. 6d. It is not often that we find prominent members of the legal profession engaging in theological pursuits; when they do, as in the present case, we generally find that they do it with a thoroughness and clearness of expression that thoughtful readers know how to appreciate. Mr. Waddy has laid Bible students of every class under deep obligation by producing this new attempt to harmonise in chronological order the Gospel narratives of our Lord's life and work on earth. The book bears marks of very careful and discriminating research, fully confirming the author's statement in the preface, where he says, "I have tried to profit by the devotion and learning of my predecessors, and have brought to bear on this interesting but difficult subject the most careful industry that I possess." Readers of the Revised Version will be specially thankful for this timely and scholarly production.

John Murker of Banff. By Rev. Jas. Stark, Aberdeen. 3s. 6d. Second Edition. Hodder & Stoughton. We deem this an almost perfect biography. Mr. Murker left a very decided mark upon the religious life of the north-east of Scotland, and his career as a faithful minister of the Gospel was well worth preserving for posterity. Mr. Stark has pictured the man exactly as he was; his foibles and frailties are not glossed over, and his many virtues are not exaggerated. As we read, we seem once again to see the somewhat gaunt, ungainly figure of the good old man as we have seen him many a time delivering his message from the pulpit, or presiding at some Sabbath school soirée, where he shone as an incisive, homely, and humorous speaker. In his theological tenets and rigidity of precept he was a Puritan of the Puritans, but over all there was the genial glow of a warm human heart. Many who are to-day taking an active part in the world's work in many lands have, with the writer, to thank Mr. Murker for the bent given to their thoughts and aspirations in early life. In addition to the biographical details, Mr. Stark has given an interesting sketch of some of Mr. Murker's contemporaries, and of the religious life of the district.

"Illustrations." Mr. F. G. Heath's pictorial magazine commences its third volume in October with a specially designed cover, and pictorial section headings. The volume will include a variety of interesting illustrated articles.

Past and Present. James Nisbet & Co., 21, Berners-street, W. In "An Outsider's" testimony concerning the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, there is presented at once a most graphic picture of the life of the fisherfolk in the North Sea, and of the wonderful results attained in the brief space of five years by means of the Mission vessels.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. are publishing a new edition, to be completed in twenty monthly parts (6d. each), of The Crown Bible. It contains authentic illustrations specially executed for this edition; and with each part is presented a full-page plate after Gustave Doré. With the first part is issued a family register, handsomely produced in gold.

Four Sermons to Young Men. By Rev. W. J. Dawson. 6d. 161, Fleet-street. An excellent little book to put into the hands of young men. Two of the discourses are biographical, and all are specially instructive and interesting. A careful perusal of these solemn warnings, earnest appeals, and wise counsels, is likely to be of permanent benefit.

Medical Missions. By Rev. John Lowe. 6d. John Snow & Co. In this review of the work of medical missions, their claims, and progress, the author shows that the healing of the sick was by Christ intimately associated with the preaching of the Gospel, and that such work has ever been productive of the best results. The whole subject is most exhaustively and ably dealt with.

I am Debtor—I am Ready. 4d. John Snow & Co. In this sermon Rev. Johnathan Lees, of the London Missionary Society, Tientsin, China, bases a powerful appeal to workers at home who can give themselves to the cause of Christ abroad to do so, on the ground both of their indebtedness and the vastness and darkness of the mission field. They will thus reach to a higher standard in the Christian life, and taste a fuller joy than they had known before.

"The Expositor's Bible" is the title of an important series of works about to be published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton. They will contain a complete set of expository lectures on the Bible by the foremost preachers and theologians of the day. While scholarly, the volumes will be essentially popular. With one or two exceptions they will be absolutely new, not having appeared in magazine or book form. Six volumes will be published annually; price to subscribers, 24s.

Among the Hop-pickers. By Samuel Chinn. J. F. Shaw & Co. This is the story of a great work done in an important field of Christian endeavour. Mr. Chinn writes with sufficiency of information, high-toned enthusiasm, and a directness of style which puts facts simply yet forcibly. His narrative glorifies God by proving the power of the uplifted Saviour to bless and save men. We heartily commend the book, and hope that it will create a deeper interest in the welfare of

MORE OCTOBER MAGAZINES.

THE HOMILIST.

We heartily commend this vigorous little magazine to the notice of thoughtful, hardworking, Christian people, who need help in the preparation of addresses, and Bible-class lessons.

THE QUIVER

opens with a brief, bright paper on God's special care of the little ones. It abounds in stories of hairbreadth escapes of young children. Most parents of any experience have similar tales to tell out of their family histories. We like very much an article in this number on the authorship of Hebrews by Ven. Archdeacon Gore. We are glad to see that this monthly, which begins its new year in November, is to be enlarged to eighty pages, instead of sixty-four, as at present.

THE LEISURE HOUR

has a paper by our old friend Professor J. S. Blackie, on Jean Paul Richter, which should be carefully read. Its value consists in the telling extracts which Professor Blackie has collected from Jean Paul's writings. The following are samples: —Sympathy:—"It is Godlike to love; it is even more Godlike, silently and ungrudgingly, to be a spectator of another's happiness, and sincerely to congratulate him on that happiness." Judgment of Others:—"Commonplace persons easily let go their good impressions, and hold fast to the bad. Tender-hearted men are easily appeased, and with difficulty estranged." Test of Character:—"A man never describes himself so faithfully as when he is describing the character of another man." Ideals: —"No ideal is to be given up; otherwise the sacred fire of life will be extinguished." Earnestness:—"Without hard work and earnest purpose all that is best in the world perishes. We cannot even have a proper game without some earnestness." Hardship and Health:—"The virtuous heart is like the body: it becomes stronger and healthier with hard work than with careful tending and coddling." Great Men:—"That man is worth nothing who does not catch fire from the sunshine of a great man's presence." Asking advice:—"One man asks another for advice, not because he does not know what he should do, but because he knows and does not want to do it, and hopes his adviser will strengthen him in his disinclination." Modesty:—"The truly modest man is he who retains his modesty when he is blamed, as well as when he is praised."

THE SUNDAY AT HOME

is excellent as ever. We are specially glad of two of its papers. The first of these is on "Deuteronomy and its Date," by Dr. S. G. Green. It exposes well the uncertainty and assumption of much of the teaching of the so-called higher criticism, while it brings to view the strong reasonableness of our ancient faith. The following extract will show its drift:—"It is a common device in these discussions to affirm the most doubtful points as if they had become admitted and indubitable truths. 'It is now universally acknowledged'—we often hear—'that Genesis is made up of five documents'; or 'that the Pentateuch'—now generally called the Hexateuch, the Book of Joshua being included—'belongs to the later days of the Judean kingdom, or 'that the Levitical code had no existence until after the Captivity.' These assertions may impose upon the ignorant: but writers like Dr. Moody Stuart, and, we may add, Dr. Bissell, have found themselves able to give good reasons for the old belief. Dr. Stuart sets himself to prove in detail, by an examination of passages often taken to prove the later date, that there are no words in Exodus, Numbers, Leviticus, and Deuteronomy, that could not have been used by Moses; that these books relate no facts which Moses could not have recorded; contain no religious ordinance that Moses could not have instituted; embody no civil law that could not have been enacted by Moses; and exhibit no character in which Moses could not have acted." It is admitted, of course, by both Dr. Stuart and Dr. Green, that certain touches may have been given here and there by subsequent editors or transcribers; but this allowance can be made without any weakening of the argument for the Mosaic origin of the Books.

The second of the two papers we have alluded to, is Mr. Glover's on "Blessed are the pure in heart." It abounds in beautiful thought, nobly expressed. Mr. Glover lays great stress on the order of the beatitudes, as indicating the order of attainment. Before purity comes meekness, hunger after righteousness, but especially mercy. "Without mercy true purity never blessed a human heart…You cannot keep evil out of the soul by evil out by getting good in. Show mercy, and with every act some particle of self within us is destroyed….Live in mercy—outside the cold, shadow of self—and memories will be so sweet, and gratitude so deep, and grace so freely admitted, and so richly given, that every power of the soul will thrive; and the purity, which is the bloom of health, the brightness of strength, the affluence of all fine affections will appear in the heart. No impatience of ambition dwells with mercy, nor any greed, nor any revenge. Mercy arrests the rise of lust and passion within the soul, as no shame can ever do. Mercy is so conversant with Heaven that the defiling greed, the dishonouring artifice, cannot effect lodgment in the soul. In the heart of mercy Jesus dwells, and where He dwells, the purity is not the dead purity of a soul strewn with corpses of suppressed evils; but the living purity of a soul, which is itself a new Jerusalem, with Christ on its throne, and a rush of the water of life flowing through it."

SOME STORY BOOKS.

T. WOOLMER.

Jennie and Her Charges; or, True and False Equality (1s. 6d.). A story illustrative of the wisdom of fidelity to conscience and principle under all circumstances, and in all spheres of service. Jennie's character and example eminently fit her to be made a model for all in similar ranks of life. The story is well written, and should be placed in the hands of all domestic servants, to whom it must be pre-eminently interesting and profitable.

S. W. PARTRIDGE AND CO.

Three People, by Pansy (2s.), is a fine, fresh, healthy story of three lives begun on the same day—one in opulence, another in comfort, and the third in the most wretched poverty. Principle is the guide through life of the gutter-boy, and principle wins. The temperance teaching of the book is in favour of out-and-out prohibition and abolition. The little volume ought to be in every thorough-going Gospel temperance library. Eaglehurst Towers, by Emma Marshall (2s.6d.). Anything from the pen of Mrs. Marshall is sure to be good, and the story under notice is no exception to this rule. Humour, pathos, spiritual and heart-searching insight and dramatic power make the tale one of exceptional value and interest. The Last of the Abbots; or, The Monks of St. Benet's, by Rev. A. Brown (1s.). A historical, well-written tale of the times when "Bluff King Hal" made his absolute will to be felt all over the land, and in nothing more than in his order for the dissolution of the religious houses. There is a pleasant story running through the book side by side with the principal theme. In a new edition of Temperance Stories for the Young, by T. S. Arthur, Author of "Ten Nights in a Bar-room," we have just the sort of book for temperance-readings and mothers' meetings (1s.). The Straight Gate, by Annie S. Swan (2s. 6d.). Despite certain artificialities of dialogue and improbabilities of circumstance, this well-written story of the divergent careers of two brothers, teaches very clearly the true secret of happiness and usefulness in life.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 9.—ISAIAH XLV.

1.—Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus.—Cyrus was first brought upon the scene at the close of the last chapter (ver. 28). It had been better if the new chapter had begun at ver. 24. "The mention of Cyrus by name is here the seal to the truth and consistency of the whole message. The preface (from ver. 24) in its solemnity, and the prophecy in its clearness and importance, now agree together. The fulfilment was minutely true. The second Temple was founded under Cyrus, and through his decree; but founded only. Its completion and dedication were under Darius, after twenty years' delay;"—Birks. The importance of this prophecy about Cyrus is enhanced by its having been delivered about two hundred years before he took Babylon.

4.—Though thou hast not known Me.—"Cyrus was a heathen, and knew not of the prophecy when he was fulfilling it. When Babylon had been taken, and not before, this prophecy would reach him through Daniel and the other exiles. The decrees in Ezra prove clearly how deep an impression it had made."—Birks.

8.—Drop down, ye heavens, from above.—"A transition from Cyrus to the days of the Messiah. The mercies to the returning exiles were an earnest of this promise. But its main fulfilment is in the Incarnation and Atonement of our Lord, and the Pentecostal gift of his Spirit."

11.—Command ye Me.—"How wonderful the exhortation to command Him who (ver. 12) commands the host of heaven."—Ibid.

13.—I have raised him up in righteousness.—Cyrus first as the type, but Christ more fully as the antitype.

21.—A just God and a Saviour.—This is an anticipation of one of the leading principles of the Gospel unfolded Rom. iii. 21, that "through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus," God is "just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus."

24.—Surely, shall one say, In the Lord have I righteousness and strength.—R.V. is more accurate, "Only in the Lord," &c. "Christ Jesus is made unto us of God wisdom—both righteousness and sanctification and redemption: that, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord" (1 Cor. i. 30).

MONDAY, OCTOBER 10.—ISAIAH XLVI.

"The transition is easy and natural from the deliverance of Israel by Cyrus, and the richer blessings to follow in the days of the promised Messiah, to the downfall of Babylon and its idols."—Birks.

1.—Bel boweth down, Nebo stoopeth.—"Bel answers to the Tyrian Baal and to Zeus or Jupiter, Nebo to Hermes or Mercurius."

4.—Even to your old age I am he.—"The nation had its birth at the Exodus, its infancy in the desert, its manhood under David and Solomon, and an old age under the later prophets, when the first covenant was ready to decay. There is here a striking contrast between the idols borne aloft by their votaries, or carried helplessly away; and the true God who bears and sustains his people from infancy to old age." Birks.

11.—Calling a ravenous bird from the east.—"Cyrus was singularly rapid in his movements. It is remarked that he took for his ensign a golden eagle standing with outstretched wings on the top of a spear."—Kay.

12.—Ye stouthearted, that are far from righteousness.—Such was the Pharisee (Luke xviii. 11), self-satisfied and self-complacent, and far from righteousness; but the broken-hearted publican, who threw himself upon God's propitiation for sin, went home justified.

13.—I bring near my righteousness.—In the righteousness—here parallel to God's salvation—is brought very nigh. See Rom. x. 6, &c., as expanding this thought.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 11.—ISAIAH XLVII.

1.—Come down, and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon.—In its primary application this refers to literal Babylon, but Rev. xvii., xviii., distinctly teach that its final fulfilment is to be in mystical Babylon, or apostate Christianity. Comp. the striking contrast in lii. 1, 2, as to Zion.

4.—As for our Redeemer, the Lord of Hosts is his name.—"This is the exclamation of the Church, suddenly recognising its vindicator."—Kay.

8.—I am, and none else beside me.—This speech "in her heart" is repeated in ver. 10 as a characteristic of Babylon. It is strikingly exemplified in the ecclesiastical exclusiveness of mystical Babylon.

10.—Thy wisdom and thy knowledge, it hath perverted thee.—"Babylon was the birthplace of astrology. It was also the home of magic, which pretended to bind the course of events."—Delitzsch.

11.—Desolation shall come upon thee suddenly.—"Heavy, unforeseen calamity was at hand, and their boasts of wisdom would be made foolish by their want of knowledge to prepare for it, and of power to escape from it."—Birks. So shall it be with mystical Babylon, Rev. xviii. 17—24.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 12.—ISAIAH XLVIII.

"The first cycle of the later prophecies (xl.—lxvi.), after announcing the victories of Cyrus and the fall of Babylon, closes in this chapter with a fresh voice of rebuke and encouragement to Israel. The chapter has two equal divisions, each opening with a call to listen to the voice of God. The first is mainly rebuke; the second, encouragement."—Birks.

1.—Not in truth, nor in righteousness.—The description of those addressed in this verse is that of outward professors, who, though "of Israel," are not "Israel." "The appeal is to the whole nation, viewed as mainly faithless to the covenant of their God."—Birks.

6.—I have made thee to hear new things from this time.—"The new things" contrasted with "the former things" (ver. 3) seem to denote the later times of the Messiah, as contrasted with "the former things" of the Babylonish captivity and deliverance, which were typical of the other.

11.—For my own sake will I do it.—Pointing apparently to the earthly blessing in store for Israel after the flesh, when "refined" in the latter day "in the furnace of affliction."

12.—Israel, my called.—Here we have the Israel of God, as contrasted with those who are "called by the name of Israel" (ver. 1).

16.—The Lord God, and his Spirit, hath sent me.—R.V. gives the order as it is in the Hebrew, avoiding thereby the grammatical mistake of A.V. "The Lord God hath sent me, and his Spirit," meaning "and so hath his Spirit." These words, spoken by one who calls himself in the next verse "the Lord, thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel," are a striking testimony to the doctrine of the Trinity.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 13.—ISAIAH XLIX.

The first section of xl.—lxvi. has closed with the words "No peace to the wicked." (See this repeated at the end of lvii. and lxvi.) The second section now begins, in the words of Him who forms the chief subject of it—the Servant of God, the Messiah. He describes his call to service, and sets forth some of the promises by which He is Himself sustained in his work, as well as the scope of that work, his being God's salvation to the end of the earth, and the restorer and deliverer of Zion.

3.—Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified.—"The nation had caused God's name to be blasphemed (lii. 5). God's servant would stand as a new federal head; a true 'Israel' or 'Prince with God'; and in Him God would be glorified. (Compare John xii. 28, the "Israel of God" will be those sprung from Him.

7.—To a servant of rulers.—"Subjecting himself to the despotic will of the 'rulers of this world' (1 Cor. ii. 6), even to the extent of enduring the death of a slave."—Kay.

8.—In a day of salvation have I helped thee.—St. Paul's quotation of this in 2 Cor. vi. 2 shows that he understood by the "day of salvation" the whole of this dispensation.

12.—These from the land of Sinim.—"The identification of Sinim with China is fully vindicated by Gesenius, and is now generally accepted."—S.C. It may be added, the prophecy is now being fulfilled.

20.—The place is too strait for me.—"During the times of the Gentiles Jerusalem had been trodden down. Here, at their close, the land is described as fully peopled once more."—Birks.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 14.—ISAIAH L.

1.—Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement?—"The 'bill of divorce' (Deut. xxiv. 1, 2) was a complete severance of the marriage bond. Such a divorce had been issued against Israel (Jer. iii. 8), but not against Judah."—Kay. "The question implies a strong denial of its existence."—Birks.

4.—The tongue of the learned.—It should be, "of the learner." So R.V., "of them that are taught." Messiah, who is the speaker, "learned obedience by the things which He suffered" (Heb. v. 8). "Learned" at the end of the verse should be "learner" too.

7.—Have I set my face like a flint.—The LXX. rendering for this is alluded to in Luke ix. 51, where Christ "steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem."

8.—He is near that justifieth me; who will contend with me?—"In Rom. viii. 33, 34, all the faithful are empowered to use the challenge of this verse, for in Christ's justification theirs is included (Rom. iv. 25)."—Kay.

10.—That walketh in darkness, and hath no light.—"The humble may walk in darkness for a time, but heavenly light will soon dawn on them. The proud may comfort themselves by false self-righteous zeal or worldly wisdom, with a seeming light, but it will end in darkness and sorrow."—Birks.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 15.—ISAIAH LI.

"The speaker is Messiah, as before. He now turns Himself from the branches to be cut off, who say they are Jews and are not, to his true Israel, now enlarged by converts from the Gentiles."—Birks.

1.—Look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, &c.—"The rock and the hole of the pit are usually applied to Abraham and Sarah, but they rather allude to that Chaldæan idolatry in which Abraham and Sarah once lived. The God of glory had hewn them out of this rock of stubborn heathenism, and digged them out of its pit of idolatrous debasement."—Ibid.

4.—A law shall proceed from Me.—This is "the law of faith" (Rom. iii. 27, xvi. 26; 1 John iii. 23).

5.—My righteousness is near; my salvation is gone forth.—From this comes the expression "the righteousness of God" (Rom. i. 17), denoting "the righteousness which is from God" (see Greek of Phil. iii. 9). As God's salvation is that which He provides, so is God's righteousness that which He provides for those who trust in Christ Jesus: in other words, Jesus Himself, who "of God is made unto us righteousness" (1 Cor. i. 30).

9.—Put on strength, O arm of the Lord.—An intimation that in providing this righteousness, God's power must be put forth, as it was in the deliverance from Egypt, but on so much greater a scale as the Prince of this world (the Dragon, Rev. xii. 3) exceeds Pharaoh in power.

11.—Therefore the redeemed, &c.—A repetition of xxxv. 10.

17.—Awake, awake, &c.—This should be the commencement of the next chapter, thus preserving the connection between the humiliation

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Colonel G. W. Oldham, of Bombay, will be one of the band of evangelists who go out to conduct a special mission in India.

The Bishop of Bath and Wells has appointed Rev. R. D. Monro, of the Church Parochial Mission Society, as special missioner in his diocese.

Archdeacon Clarke, D.D., vicar of Southport, was recently presented with an illuminated address, in recognition of thirty-eight years of labour in Southport.

Dr. Pigou, vicar of Halifax, intends to pass most of the winter at Mentone; he has undertaken the duty at the English Church from January 8 till the close of the season.

Bishop Ryle, of Liverpool, speaking at a meeting at Norwich last week, said he has no sympathy with the gloomy view taken by many of the condition of the Church of England; he does not believe that evangelicalism is declining.

The Church Congress is being held at Wolverhampton this week. Amongst the speakers of the "Evangelical" school are Canons Westcott and Hoare, Prebendary Billing, Revs. E. A. Stuart, F. J. Chevasse, W. H. Barlow, and the Hon. T. H. W. Pelham.

The British Weekly says:—"An ardent admirer of Canon Liddon, who resides in a large Yorkshire town, frequently travels to London on Saturday expressly to hear the Sunday afternoon sermon in St. Paul's during his residentiary month. Thoughtful men are not yet weary of sermons."

Referring to the contemplated resignation of Bishop French, of Lahore, The Rock appeals to the Secretary of State for India not to flood that country with High Church Bishops. "They are bad enough in this country, but in India they are a thousand times worse. There Christianity is face to face with heathenism, and all Christians should as far as possible present a united front."

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

George Wilkie and family are about to settle in Maidstone, to carry on educational and missionary work.

Miss Hettie Butler, who has recently graduated at the Missionary Training College, Chicago, is shortly going out as a missionary to Nanking, China.

At Preston Patrick, in Westmoreland, and also at Greyrigg, among the hills, Frederick Sessions has completed two series of meetings. The Gospel net let down in the after-meetings brought some to land. Christians afresh dedicated themselves to Christ.

Elbert S. Clarke, of the Unsectarian Mission to the Zulu Kaffirs, South Africa, has paid a very acceptable visit to Ireland. He attended meetings in Dublin, Cork, Waterford, Kingstown, and Monkstown, and pleaded the cause of foreign missions generally, giving many interesting particulars of his own work at Rock Fountain, Natal. He and his wife are returning to Africa this month, leaving their children in England.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. W. D. Macdonald, of Killin, has accepted the call from St. Brycedale Free Church, Kirkcaldy.

In the college and schools in connection with the Free Church of Scotland Mission at Madras, there are about 1800 students.

Towards the £20,000 which the United Presbyterian Church is raising as a Special Foreign Mission Fund, the sum of £7438 has been contributed.

Rev. James Scott, of Impolweni, Natal, reports the recent baptism of ten adults, and adds that the work amongst the natives continues to spread.

It is expected that the Moderator of the next Free Church of Scotland Assembly, which is to be held at Inverness, will be Rev. Gustavus Aird, D.D., of Creich, who is a pre-Disruption minister.

The Presbyterian College in London (Queen's-square, W.C.) opens for the winter season on October 11, with an inaugural lecture by Professor Elmslie, entitled "The Bible and Modern Thought."

The Free Church of Scotland have recently sent out the following new missionaries:—To Calcutta, India, Rev. Alexander Tomory, M.A.; to the Santhal Mission, Upper Bengal, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Stevenson and Miss Sprot.

The late Miss Margaret Mackay, Glasgow, has left liberal bequests to a large number of philanthropic and religious objects, among which is included a legacy of £500 to the China Mission of the English Presbyterian Church.

No less than thirty thousand of the young folks in the Free Church of Scotland are engaged in studying the subjects under the "Welfare of Youth" scheme, and over three thousand of these lately presented them selves for examination.

Dr. and Mrs. Anderson, English Presbyterian missionaries, sailed for China on Thursday week. A meeting will be held in Dr. Dykes's church the third week in October, to bid God-speed to four lady missionaries who are leaving for China. Miss Ricketts returns after furlough, and will be accompanied by Miss McMahon, Miss Falkner, and Miss Sutherland, who go out for the first time. Rev. J. A. B. Cook, of Singapore, we regret to hear, is laid aside with illness.

Within a month after the issue of the appeal for £1020 to complete the Medical Mission buildings in connection with the Mission founded by the late Hon. Ion Keith-Falconer, at Shaikh Othman, Arabia, three-fourths of that sum was subscribed to the Treasurer at the Free Church Offices, Edinburgh, by seventy-five donors. One of the donors was Mr. J. Campbell White, of Glasgow, who gave £100. About £300 is still required. The Countess Dowager of Kintore and the Hon. Mrs. Keith Falconer have resolved each to guarantee £300 a year, as the salaries of two missionaries, thus continuing

BAPTIST.

A week of special prayer and evangelistic services has been held at Small Heath, Birmingham, conducted by the pastor, Rev. C. Joseph. All the meetings were largely attended.

The Sunday afternoon lectures for the people at Colston Hall, Bristol, were resumed for the winter session on Sunday week by Rev. E. G. Gange, over 3000 persons attending.

Rev. Charles Williams and Dr. Clifford, who have been to Ireland to report on the churches, recommend that the control of the Irish Baptist Mission should be transferred from London to Ireland.

The Baptist churches in Ireland now number 19; the last census gave the membership as 4894. From emigration and other causes they have declined in numbers, as about forty years ago there were 35 churches.

The Birmingham auxiliary to the Baptist Missionary Society recently celebrated their sixty-fourth anniversary. On Sunday week sermons were preached in twenty-two chapels in aid of the society's work.

Rev. Albert Huntley, late of Pastors' College, previous to his departure for mission work in China, was presented at a largely attended valedictory meeting in Countership Chapel, Bristol, with a useful medicine chest.

Rev. W. Stott, of Abbey-road Church, St. John's Wood, has written a history of his church, under the title of "A Ministry of Twenty-five Years in London." It is a very interesting record of steady earnest work for God.

The proposed Conference between the Congregational and Baptist unions on the subject of the overlapping of church work in the villages, which was postponed from last summer to the present month, has been further deferred until next Spring.

A week's mission was recently conducted at Beulah Chapel, Thornton Heath, by Mr. A. A. Harmer, one of the Metropolitan Tabernacle evangelists. About fifty adults and fifty children signed the pledge, and several persons professed to find the Saviour.

Mr. Spurgeon's health is once more in a feeble state. He had been announced to preach on Tuesday week at Beckenham, but found himself quite unable to do so. After the first Sunday in November he hopes to leave for his usual winter rest in the sunny South. Mentone will probably again be his holiday resort.

A pleasant proof of the real unity existing between Christians is given at the anniversary services in connection with the settlement of pastor H. E. Stone at Nottingham. In 1880, and every year since Rev. George Edgcombe, vicar of St. Peter's, has been one of the speakers. The large building known as the Tabernacle was crowded on Sunday week, when the pastor preached one of the quarterly sermons to young women. It is an almost unique occurrence, we should think, for the vicar to be found for eight successive times among the well wishers at a Nonconformist minister's anniversary.

SALVATION ARMY.

A mid-day meeting is to be conducted daily at 272, Whitechapel-road, E.

"Captain" Narian Das and ten Swedish volunteers are shortly proceeding to India.

Work has been commenced at Sevenoaks, Kent, where the opening meetings were crowded.

Mr. G. Railton has returned from a visit to Germany. He is full of hope for the future of the work there.

In Stuttgart, Würtemberg, the Army are working hard. The weekly meeting is well attended, mostly by people who have not the least regard for God.

The Californian War Cry says that a striking feature of the list of donations from Portland, Oregon, is the liberality of Chinese merchants in giving money to the Army.

The new barracks at Wimbledon, which holds seven hundred and fifty people, is crowded nightly, and Captain Case reports that the prospects are decidedly encouraging.

The yacht Vestal is at Bristol carrying on a mission among the sailors in the port. Meetings are held on board at noon and in the evening each day, and are generally crowded.

"Staff-captain" Cooke says there are now thirty-five persons engaged exclusively in slum work; he appeals for old clothes of all sorts for the "lasses" now that the cold weather is coming on.

During the last two years some eight hundred young women have been received into the Rescue Home. Besides this number there are at present in the Homes in London one hundred hopeful cases.

Two officers at Pinner have been prosecuted for obstruction. One of these was fined 2s. 6d. and 12s. costs, or fourteen days' hard labour, and the other was sentenced to seven days' imprisonment.

One evening last week the Grecian Theatre, City-road, was densely crowded on the occasion of General Booth commissioning one hundred young officers, male and female, for "active service" throughout the country.

The Army have met with much opposition at Dorking. A "skeleton" Army has banded itself together to break up the meetings. Brutal assaults have been committed upon members of the Army, and severe injuries inflicted.

Upon the arrival of the "Jubilee Fifty" officers of the Salvation Army, who left London in August for India, Commander Tucker found a cheque for £11 000, which had been sent to him to assist in maintaining the work of the Army in that country. The donor, who has amassed a large fortune, mainly in India, recently gave a cheque for £5000 towards the same object.

The Bishop of Oxford, speaking at the opening sitting of the Oxford Diocesan Conference on Tuesday week, said that hardly sufficient attention had been paid to the Salvation Army. He did not know what it was that attracted the multitude, but he asked them to make it a study. He wanted to know what the Church of England could learn from it; why the people liked it, and what

METHODIST.

We regret to learn that Rev. George Bowen, editor of The Bombay Guardian, has met with an accident, by which he is temporarily disabled.

Rev. Thomas Cook closed a most successful mission at Lancaster on the 21st ult. Many were brought to decision, including a number of the scholars in the Sunday-school.

The Methodist Recorder says:—There is a probability that Mr. H. J. Atkinson, M.P., may go to Australia shortly to be present at the forthcoming celebration of the centenary of the colony of New South Wales.

A successful mission has just been concluded at Widnes, conducted by Rev. Thomas Waugh. About four hundred adults and a goodly number of juniors declared themselves fully decided to follow Christ.

A ten days' mission at Westminster has resulted in a revival of almost every form of Christian work and the ingathering of souls, many of whom were children. The spiritual blessing which has been poured out on the members of the church will make these meetings memorable.

An interesting farewell meeting was held at Liverpool, on Monday, to bid farewell to the following missionaries, who have since left for the Khassia Hills, India, in connection with the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Missionary Society:—Rev. J. Ceredig Evans and Mrs. Evans, of Nantymoel; Rev. J. Pengwern Jones and Mrs. Jones, of Mountain Ash; Rev. W. Williams, of Llantwit Major; Dr. Hughes, of Kenchester; and Miss John, of Cowbridge.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Priory Church, Wandsworth-road, of which Rev. J. Le Pla is pastor, has resolved to abolish pew-rents in favour of the weekly offering system.

Rev. G. B. Johnson has recently resigned his charge at Torquay to become a travelling evangelist of the Church Aid Society to the churches of Devonshire.

A devotional missionary meeting was held at South Croydon on the 20th inst., in connection with the departure of Miss Gilfillan, one of the members, for mission work in China.

The Self-help Emigration Society, one of the offshoots of the philanthropic work of the London Congregational Union among the poor, has aided four hundred and fifty emigrants to Canada this season.

A ten days' mission has been conducted at Branderton, Suffolk, by Rev. W. Courtnall. The attendance was large throughout. The Church has been refreshed and invigorated, and sinners have been awakened and brought to decision.

The felt need for something like an evangelical revival in the churches has led to applications being made to Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, mission preacher, from some whose names are well known in connection with the "Broad School" of Congregationalism.

At the evening service on Sunday week the seatholders at New-court Chapel, Tollington-park, yielded up their sittings for the purpose of holding the half-yearly strangers' service. During the preceding week strenuous efforts were made to bring the "lapsed masses" into the sanctuary; and these efforts were crowned with success.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The annual Conference of the Y.M.C.A. in Ireland was held in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin, last Friday.

A Convention for the Promotion of Holiness was held in the Methodist Church, Pettigo, on Thursday last. Addresses were delivered by Revs. R. C. Johnson, Chas. Inwood and others. There was a very large attendance.

It has been decided to establish a Home for Soldiers in Belfast, similar to those already existing in Dublin, Cork, and Limerick. The movement has the earnest support of the Mayor of Belfast, Sir James Haslett, Sir J. P. Corry, M.P., and other influential friends.

An all-day meeting for consecration and prayer was held in the Methodist Church, Donegall-square, Belfast, on Friday. Addresses were delivered on "The Deepening of Spiritual Life," and kindred topics. A deep spiritual influence rested on the whole congregation.

The Dublin Prison-gate Mission is evidently doing a good work. During the ten years that have elapsed since it commenced upwards of five thousand women have been admitted on their discharge from prison, and more than eighty women are at present employed at laundry work and other industries, and many of these sleep on the Mission premises.

A deputation from the Sabbath Observance Committee of the General Assembly, consisting of Rev. Dr. Orr, the Moderator, and several others, waited on Monday week on the directors of the Northern Counties Railway in reference to the running of trains on the Lord's day, and received a promise that the matter would receive the careful consideration of the Board.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Mrs. Matilda Blanche Gibbs, of Tynefield, Somersetshire, well known throughout the West of England for her philanthropy.—Rev. James Sears, a well-known Baptist minister in London.—Rev. R. J. Jones, a much-esteemed Methodist minister of Ballycastle, Ireland.—Mrs. Morgan, for sixty-nine years a member of the Congregational church at Winslow, Bucks.—Mr. John Exelby, of Harrogate, a prominent member of the Methodist body.—Mr. H. H. Ellaway, a valued member of the Baptist church at Stratford-road, Birmingham.—Mr. Henry Ball, of the Wesleyan church at Claybrook, Leicestershire.—Mr. R. H. Dowse, an active officer and supporter of the Baptist church at Small Heath, Birmingham.—Mr. G. E. Thorn, of the Wesleyan chapel at Teddington.—Mr. William E. Webber, for over fifty years a member and earnest worker of the Methodist Society at Saltash, Cornwall.—Canon West Wayet, Vicar of Pinchbeck, Spalding.—Rev. Hugh Rose, Presbyterian minister, formerly of Stockton-on-Tees and Manchester.—Mr. Jonathan Green, a local preacher of fifty years' standing in the Shotley Bridge and Consett

OUR LITTLE WOMEN.

"WHAT to do with our girls" is a question in many minds, and one which it is increasingly difficult to answer. A very wise and able article in The Lady's World for September advocates the teaching of some useful handicraft to girls of the middle and upper classes, by which they may, if necessary, be able to earn something toward their support, whether married or not.

Miss Headdon, of the Housewifery Association, is doing good work by training young ladies in cookery, housekeeping, plain and art needlework, music, languages, type-setting, &c. She has also placed her country home at the disposal of the Association as a training house for teachers and children. The applications which she receives for admission to this institution are very largely for the children of military officers, who are, by the limited means of their parents, debarred from many educational advantages. It is proposed to purchase a building which cost £20,000 when recently erected, but which may now be had for £3000. If this amount is forthcoming, it is calculated that the institution will be self-supporting, as tuition fees are charged, though at sufficiently low rates to meet the needs of those whom it is desired to benefit.

Miss Headdon reports the progress of her work in a quarterly magazine, entitled Little Women, post free, 3d.; copies may be had from her at Villa Bullo, Newnham-on-Severn.

KING EDWARD'S SCHOOLS, SPITALFIELDS.—On Friday night about seventy lads met in the school, in connection with the Working Lads' Christian Association, formed some time ago from the Senior Bible class conducted by Mr. H. E. Montague, each member being allowed to bring a friend. After tea Mr. John Kirk, secretary of the Ragged School Union, took the chair. After the distribution of cards of membership earnest appeals to the non-members were made by the hon. superintendent, Mr. Charles Montague, Mr. Lewis, and others.

ANOTHER DEATH ON THE CONGO.—The Baptist Missionary Society has sustained another severe loss. Intelligence comes to hand of the decease of Rev. H. G. Whitley at Lukungu, on the Lower Congo river, on August 3. Mr. Whitley had just returned to Stanley Pool, in charge of the steamer Peace, with his colleague, Mr. Charters, after having been engaged with the Emin Pacha Expedition for nearly seven weeks on the Upper Congo, taking Mr. H. M. Stanley to the mouth of of the Aruwhimi River. Upon his return to Stanley Pool he left the Peace with Mr. Charters, and started off down country, intending, in response to the desire of the committee, to return to England, but was overtaken by a severe attack of Subscriptions Received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Monday, October 3, 1887.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

Appeals.

THE TYNDALE MEMORIAL CHURCH will stand as "a witness for the Reformation" between a Romish and a Ritualistic Church in Brookfield-road, Homerton. Five hundred pounds are required for completion. Rev. J. F. PORTER, 59, Driffield, Bow, E.

ANGLESEA.—Mr. RICHARD MORGAN, of the Sailors' Rest, Amlwch, has recently commenced a much-needed work among the destitute children of this town, for whom nothing had hitherto been done. He has taken a room in which to carry on a ragged school, and asks for help towards furnishing and carrying on the work.

BORDEAUX.—Subscriptions on behalf of the Bible Woman's Mission, founded in 1873, and the schools in connection with the Eglise Evangélique Libre, are invited by Miss Crowe, 50, Cours Balguerie; or Madame Lortsch, 30, Cours du Médoc. A Bible stall will be opened at the Fair on the Quinconces on October 15.

INVALIDED COLPORTEURS.—A special fund has been established by the Christian Colportage Association (37, Farringdon-street, E.C.) for the relief of colporteurs who, through illness or failing strength, are unable to pursue their work. These workers are very much exposed to fatigue and inclement weather, which render them especially liable to illness. Contributions to the fund will be gratefully received by the Committee.

RESCUE WORK IN NORTH LONDON.—The branch of the National Vigilance Association at Hornsey-rise has met with much encouragement and success amongst the fallen; but owing to the absence of many friends during the summer the funds have fallen off, rendering a temporary curtailing of the work necessary. Gifts in money or clothes will be most thankfully received by Mrs. BAILHACHE, Alpha House, 43, Hanley-road, Hornsey-rise, N.

DEAR SIR,—Kindly permit me through the medium of your valued paper to thank the many friends for their kind tributes of sympathy in flowers and texts, &c., for our sick ones, which have comforted the Lord's own, and awakened others; also to appeal for framed texts for Gospel preaching-room in course of erection, and books and tracts for distribution among the poor people. Help of any kind will be gratefully welcomed.—(Pastor) O. TIDMAN, Park-street, Blaenavon, Mon.

JOHNSON'S-COURT RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION ("The Gap," Johnson's-court, Leman-street, Whitechapel, E.).—The workers are entering upon their winter work, and are in need of funds for carrying on the same efficiently. The school is opened on five, and occasionally six, evenings a week, and various agencies are in operation. There is no settled income, most of the funds necessary for carrying on the work having to be obtained by the teachers from their personal friends. Donations will be gratefully acknowledged and further information give SPECIAL APPEAL.

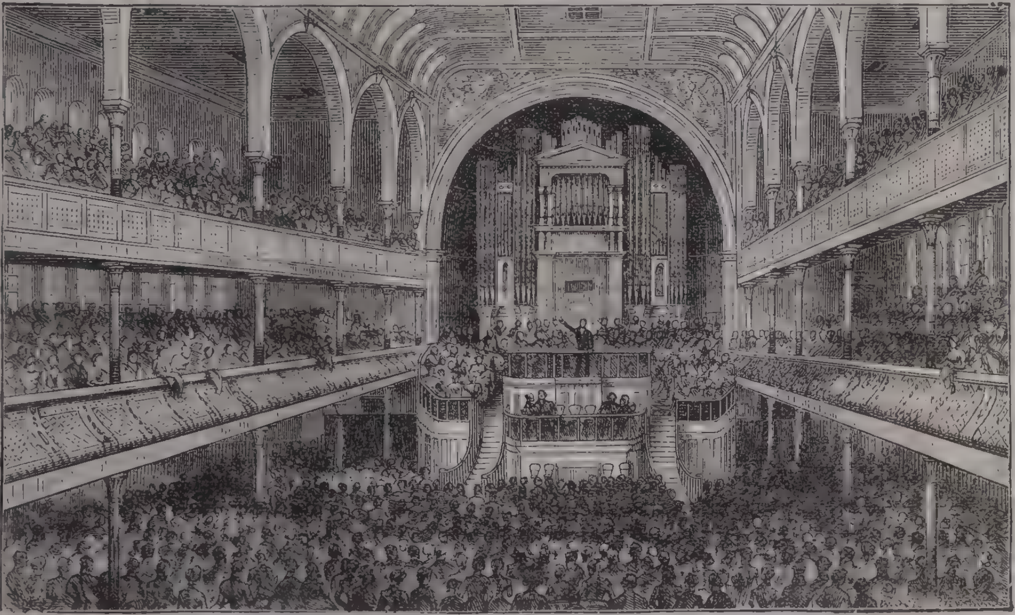
Dear Friends,

We are compelled to make a special appeal to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for two reasons: (1) our recent successful efforts in closing altogether twenty houses of ill-fame in the short space of three weeks has entailed an amount of Rescue work upon us which we are quite unable to sustain without immediate help.



GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL, MILE END ROAD, HOLDING 5,000 PERSONS.

Finding the hope of their gains is gone, quite a number of poor fallen ones are now willing and anxious to lead a better life, and having broken up their wretched homes we are in duty bound to provide in some way for their maintenance. We have already had some most hopeful cases of reformation, and we trust conversion, in our "Home," but many say they are too old for Homes, and it is amongst these we have had some of the most touching incidents. Instead of their going into a Home we have paid the rent of a room for two of them together, and by odd jobs of scrubbing and washing they have managed (with a little assistance) to keep body and soul together by honest means. One case especially we have never seen equalled in all our nineteen years' labours. It was the case of a woman who was the last to leave the last house which was shut up out of fifteen in one street. In fact, she actually broke into the house again after it had been fastened up as an empty house, and I had to go in with a policeman to force her out for fear she should set fire to the houses. She had actually been, as she told me herself, the fighting woman of the house, and her face was battered till it presented the most awful appearance I ever saw in a human being. I could not help saying to a friend, "Oh, for an artist to paint that face!" And when she begged me after she was out of the house to help her to reform without going into a "home," I could hardly believe it possible for such a creature to be reformed; however, the idea of taking a room for her came into my mind, and our Bible-woman was instructed to arrange it all for her. This week I could hardly believe my own eyes when I saw her respectably dressed with a hat or bonnet on (which she had not had for years), and passing by the very public-house she had formerly frequented. In reply to my inquiries our Bible-woman tells me she is now going on well.

Our second reason for a special appeal for help is for a Convalescent Home, which we have for a long time greatly needed: an opportunity having unexpectedly occurred of buying the lease of a Coastguard station which has been given up by the Government. It is most beautifully situated on a high down by the seashore close to Rottingdean, near Brighton. It will be the greatest possible boon to many a sick one (unable to pay for themselves) to go to recruit in such a lovely spot, so conveniently situated for access from London, and we confidently appeal to our readers for help to enable us to furnish the houses, and other necessary expenses. Our nightly meetings and the other branches of our work are going on as usual; the great Hall (picture of interior above) being crowded on Sunday nights—in fact, last Sunday evening literally thousands were unable to gain admission.

IMMEDIATE HELP is absolutely needed, as our funds are more than exhausted.

All contributions to be sent to me at 31, Mile End Road, London, E.

I am, Dear Friends, yours faithfully,

FREDK. N. CHARRINGTON.

REV. J. THAIN DAVIDSON, D.D.

Islington Presbyterian Church.

IN the religious world of London the name of Thain Davidson is almost as universally known and esteemed as that of John Bright in the sphere of politics; though the preacher is by no means so venerable in years as the illustrious "tribune of the people." Dr. Davidson's years are but two score and fourteen. Thirty of them have been spent in the Gospel ministry; of these thirty, some twenty-five or thereabouts have come and gone while he has been pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Colebrook-row, Islington. Like many of his young fellow-countrymen he could not resist the fascinations of life and work in the Metropolis of the world; and, also like many of them, it seems as if he had "come South" to stay. A little while ago, he had a warm invitation to take a charge in his native land, but the claims or the attractions of London were too strong for him. At this decision his numerous friends rejoiced, for if he left London he would undoubtedly be missed.

If pedigree goes for anything in the choice of a man's life-work, Dr. Davidson ought certainly to be what he is. Both his father and grandfather wore the pulpit gown for many years; while his maternal grandfather spent a long life in the same noble calling.

J. THAIN DAVIDSON was born at Broughty Ferry, near Dundee, in 1833, his father being then minister of that parish. Ten years later, at the never-to-be-forgotten "Disruption" time, being on his dying bed, his father signed the Deed of Demission, thus casting in his lot with those who had thrown off the shackles of the State connection. The son of course followed suit. After passing through the usual curriculum at Edinburgh University, and afterwards the Divinity Hall, he began the practical work of the pastorate, as assistant at Free St. Mary's in that city. Declining an offer to be formally ordained as colleague and successor to Dr. Grey, the pastor of the church, Mr. Davidson elected to work single-handed at Maryton, Forfarshire. There, for two years, he gave time and energy without stint to building up his country flock in their holy faith, and leading them in all good work, with no small success. We next find him busily engaged in the more extended sphere of Salford, Manchester. Three years afterwards, mainly through the influence of the late and widely-esteemed Dr. Hamilton, of Regent-square, he accepted a call to Colebrook-row, Islington, where, as we have said, he remains to this day.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons, London.)

Islington is a sphere of Christian service that might satisfy the most ambitious and energetic of men, especially if he is an enthusiastic and patriotic Scotchman. It has often been described as a little Scotland, from the fact that so many of the young Northerners, who come in shoals to push their fortunes in mighty London, reside within its borders. Being but an easy walk from "the City" it is much affected by frugal youths, who do not feel justified in expending much money in the luxury of season tickets for the suburbs. With a quick and sympathetic eye to the situation and its exceptional opportunities, the pastor of Colebrook Church laid himself out to catch this class of the Islington community, and his success has been phenomenal. Not only are young men a conspicuous feature in the congregational attendance, but his special monthly Sunday evening sermon for them has long been a settled and flourishing institution. Dr. Davidson's style and manner of preaching are eminently fitted to attract and impress the rising intellects of the day. Nothing could be farther removed from prosiness, pedantry, or pulpit professionalism, than his bright, manly and colloquial mode of address. His sermons to young men take largely the character of homely, confidential, fireside talks on the supremest of subjects. He speaks to his young brethren as one of themselves, sharing in all their special doubts, difficulties, and temptations; and as having discovered the most excellent way of playing a worthy part in the battle of life, in a city where the forces of evil are strongest, but where the rewards of spiritual victory are proportionately great.

Judging from his utterances, Dr. Davidson gives a firm but intelligent adherence to the old-fashioned and well-proved Gospel. He has no sympathy with any effort to tone down the scheme of saving truth to suit the requirements of a highly intellectual and rationalistic age. At the same time he recognises the fact that man is a social and intellectual as well as a spiritual being; and everything that is lovely and of good report, in the varied departments of human knowledge and attainment, is claimed as a province to be occupied and permeated with the spirit of the religion of Christ, which has the promise of this life as well as of that which is to come. Three volumes of his sermons to young men have been published, and have had a deservedly large circulation.

Having devoted considerable attention to the study of popular science, he has given in his own church and at Exeter Hall a series of astronomical discourses, which have been much appreciated by young men. On the lecturing platform he is almost as much at home as in the more circumscribed region of the pulpit.

Besides being the haunt of young workers in the City, Islington is somewhat notorious as the abode of the unchurched masses; though specially favoured with an evangelical ministry. Nearly twenty years ago, Dr. Davidson conceived the admirable idea of holding strictly unsectarian Gospel services on Sunday afternoons, in one of the large annexes of the leviathan Agricultural Hall. In this project he has been warmly supported and aided by members of all evangelical branches of the Christian Church. Peers of the realm, members of the Episcopal bench, clergymen, ministers of all Nonconformist bodies, and "laymen" have in turn declared the Gospel message from the platform of St. Mary's Hall, to the throngs of people who resort to it every Sunday afternoon. The work is purely of a missionary character. The converts, whose number we confidently believe cannot be reckoned or counted, are left to attach themselves to any Christian communion, as their convictions may dictate. The longevity of this movement, and the favour it has gained among the people, show that it has met a distinctly felt want. The nineteenth anniversary of these truly popular services was celebrated two weeks ago, when Dr. Davidson gave a special address to an audience of nearly 3000 persons. He pointed out that the teaching at these services, while thoroughly "evangelical," in the sense of discarding all idea of salvation by works or sacraments, was also "catholic," inasmuch as no questions of Church or sect were allowed to come to the front. Not only as a means of carrying the Gospel to those outside the pale of congregational effort, but as an exhibition of true Christian unity and co-operation, these Agricultural Hall services appear to us to be one of the happiest movements in modern London.

Some of our older readers may recollect that when "The Revival" became "The Christian," Dr. Davidson contributed three articles to the first three numbers, upon the passages in the New Testament in which the word "Christian" occurs. The topics were the name, the reality, and the discipline of the Christian; and the respective passages as follow:—"The disciples were called Christians first at Antioch." "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." "If any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed."

For a good many years past he has acted as one of the Chaplains to the Scottish Corporation, and preaches monthly to the pensioners at the chapel in Crane-court, Fleet-street. In 1872 there was conferred on him the highest ecclesiastical honour at the disposal of his denomination, in being appointed Moderator of the English Presbyterian Synod. But his sympathies have ever overflowed the boundary walls of sect, and to this catholicity of heart may be attributed much of the usefulness that has marked his ministerial career.

In company with Rev. Newman Hall, Dr. Monro Gibson, the late Rev. William Fraser, of Brighton, and other clerical brethren, Dr. Davidson paid a three-months' visit to Egypt and Palestine last year. He found much stimulus and benefit from the interesting journey, and doubtless his congregation will reap the fruits of his observation for many a year to come, if, as we trust, he is spared to continue to them his helpful ministrations.

A CONFESSION OF FAITH.

By Rev. ARTHUR VINE HALL,
Scarborough.

The following statement of religious belief, given by this young minister at his ordination as pastor of the Congregational Church, Scarborough, will be read with interest at the present juncture in the history of that denomination.

The evidences for the truth of Christianity are both external and internal, and the evidence that any man is a Christian must be both external and internal; but with the individual the internal evidence must ever be the more important. I believe the Gospel accounts of the life and death, resurrection and ascension, work and teaching of Jesus Christ. If I am charged with credulity, I feel no anxiety to escape from the charge, but would strive to place it on a truer basis; for I confess belief in many things infinitely less well authenticated than anything in the New Testament. I confess that I believe that Julius Cæsar landed in Britain, about B.C. 55, and that William of Normandy conquered this island some thousand years later. There are also many other things in every department of knowledge that I confess I believe in, though not backed by anything like the strength of evidence there is for the belief that there was such a person as Jesus Christ, and that He wrought miracles; that He was crucified; that He rose from the dead and ascended into heaven, and that in the Gospels, and especially in the Epistles, we have the record of what those who knew Him best thought of Him and his teaching. I believe that the Apostles were not mistaken in their estimate of Christ and his work. I believe Christ was not mistaken. I believe He was neither impostor nor fanatic, but what He claimed to be—the Son of God—God his "own" Father in a way we cannot address the Supreme Being.

But I think a man cannot truly call himself a Christian because of intellectual assent to anything or everything of the creeds of Christendom. Comparatively few can spend much study on the external evidences of Christianity. Millions have no time nor ability to give the subject a thought. Did personal religion, therefore, rest upon this, there could be no hope for the masses of mankind. But a Christian believes he is one, not because of any intellectual assent to the facts of Christianity—even the fact that Christ rose again from the dead and now lives—but because of consciousness of personal relations with the ascended Christ. No mathematical proof can be given, but mathematical proofs are not usually sought for psychical phenomena; the proofs needed by such phenomena are not wanting in Christian psychical research.

Perhaps I should now throw aside the mask of the third person, and try and say something of my own experience. I cannot say much about this. The innermost sanctuary of a man's heart should be known only to a man and his Maker. I will say this much:—Christ has become to me a personal friend. He has often made me miserable, and does so yet sometimes, at the thought of how often I find myself influenced by, or looking complacently at evil. But He has given me a joy that I am confident nothing can injure but sin. The cause of this joy is the consciousness that He has forgiven my sins, and the consciousness of increasing union with Him, in desire at least—growing more willing to do his will and more grieved at the many failures. A mother's love and influence over her son is not a thing to be explained and argued about. At least such explanation and argument could never have given me the knowledge I have from happy experience. I know how a mother's love influences me, but I know of no language that can explain what it is; not even the language of flowers, or of music, or of art.

And what Christian can explain what Christ is to him? His new life begins in various ways. To some it commences with an appalling sense of sin, a voice by day and night ringing in the ears and crying, "Flee from the wrath to come." To some it seems as a sudden light, a revelation of the love of God, as the sunlight bursting through the clouds, transforming them into canopies of molten gold. To others it grows as the pale light of dawn, scarcely recognised at first as a friend because only sufficient to rob the stars of their splendour, but growing, growing into the full glory of noon-day. I cannot say when I became a Christian. I don't know when I began to love either my earthly or heavenly Father. I cannot prove that I love my father, and I cannot prove that I love God. The tendency of a man's life may prove that he does not, or it may lead one to suppose that he does, but it reaches not the region of proof. A man's Christianity is a matter between himself and God. He must seek for the proof in his own consciousness, the Spirit bearing witness with our spirit that we are the children of God. I believe I have this proof.

My reason for being a preacher of the Gospel is chiefly because I believe it to be God's will that I should spend my life in this way, rather than in any other. I believe He directs all lives that are given to Him to direct. I believe the words, "Commit thy way unto the Lord, and He shall direct thy paths." I have committed my way to Him. But though God's will concerning my becoming a minister is another matter of self-consciousness mainly, there are other aspects of the question less strictly subjective, and therefore more suitable here. I believe it to be the duty of every Christian to strive to bring as many as possible to love and serve the same Master. It was, therefore, my duty. The question arose as to how I could best fulfil it. It seemed to me, and it yet seems to me, that very many who are gladly conscious of this duty, have never yet sufficiently considered how they may best discharge it, or they would now be engaged in mission work at home or abroad. Not only do I think I can best serve God thus, but I believe I can best serve my fellow-men. I think a man should strive to make the best possible use of his life; and surely that man makes the best use of life who benefits the greatest possible number of his fellow-men. That life is most worth living that contributes most to the uplifting of the greatest number of other lives. Where shall we find such an uplifting power as in Christ? —lifting man from the mire of sin to the sapphire throne, from the dust of death to a life immortal. How can life be spent better than in preaching Christ, the Saviour of the world, the great uplifter of man to God? I am, therefore, a Christian preacher because I desire to make the best use of my life, and I believe that by proclaiming the Gospel I can best benefit the greatest number of my fellow-men.

As to the doctrines that will form the foundation of my teaching:—First, in reference to God. I believe there is one God, the Creator of all things. I believe what Mr. Herbert Spencer says—viz., "The assumption of the existence of a first cause of the universe is a necessity of thought." This first cause cannot be caused or it would cease to be a first cause. This first cause I call God. That God had no beginning goes beyond the reach of human comprehension—but not of reasonable belief, for we must believe one of two things, both equally incomprehensible, either that there was one infinite cause—God—or an endless chain of finite causes. Thus we are shut into believing what is incomprehensible. Of the two we have to choose from; the belief in an infinite final cause—God—is the more rational. We cannot believe in the everlasting chain of finite causes. Science may trace the universe back to something very simple—to vapour—but it is unthinkable that any cloud of vapour existed from eternity. We are compelled to believe that there was a time when everything was not, except the One who created all things. We are here standing on a little promontory, between two boundless oceans that no mortal could navigate. Men may turn their backs upon the infinite mystery that stretches Godward, but they are instantly faced by a no less infinite, but far more dreadful mystery. It is the most rational belief man can hold that God is the cause of all things. I believe every efficient cause contains in itself everything (either actively or potentially) of which it is the cause.

We find a creature—man—with intelligence, with a moral nature, with free will. From whence came these? From a final cause possessed of intelligence, a moral nature, volition. From God. I believe love—the highest attribute of man—exists on an infinitely grander scale in God. I believe the Incarnation to be the supreme manifestation of this love. I cannot conceive of the Incarnation being impossible. If God is Omnipotent, then it must be possible for Him to lay aside for a time some of the attributes of deity. A poor man cannot become rich because he desires it; but may not a rich man become poor if he desires it? What if the rich man be God! Who will say that an Omnipotent Being cannot lay aside even his Omnipotence if He wills. Looking at Christ as God, I can think the thought of the Divine condescending to the human. Looking at Christ as man, I can think the absolute perfectibility of man, and can believe that this has taken place in Christ—humanity being raised to Divinity. I believe the Incarnation was not the cause but the result of God's love to man—"God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son."

By the love of God I mean something far removed from good-natured imbecility. I could not believe the Bible account of the love of God, unless it spoke also of a wrath of God; but I consider not the wrath of God as illustrated by the wrath of man. I believe the wrath of Almighty God to be infinitely removed from what may be characterised as ill-temper or personal spite. I believe God's wrath to be holy indignation against evil. To the extent that any man becomes identified with evil, to that extent is God wroth with him. And as all are tainted with sin by virtue of the solidarity of the race, as well as by individual transgression, I believe the Prophets and Apostles were not under a misconception when they spoke of the wrath of God; and that this is not contradictory of the love of God, it being only another aspect of the same fire, able to consume by virtue of its very power to warm and cheer. A being incapable of anger, would be incapable of love; but men should be careful not to attach to the righteous anger of the infinitely pure and holy One, any of the states we include in the term "rage."

I believe that Jesus Christ was the greatest manifestation of the love of God to man, and at the same time of wrath against evil, the power that had ruined the fairest work of Omnipotence. God could not but be wroth with evil. "The soul that sinneth it shall die" was the decree, and Adam was told that in the day of his disobedience he should surely die. This, however, did not seem to come true. He lived many years, and died as his descendants apparently died, from natural causes. If God's law of death as punishment for sin was to be fulfilled, men must die individually as the direct punishment for sin (which gave no hope beyond the grave), or a representative man must die for the race. This man must be sinless, or death would be but the natural punishment of his own sins. This man could not be evolved, but the Divine entered the human, and in the God-man we behold the ideal man—God's idea of a man—the "Son of Man." The sentence of death was passed upon every man, for all had sinned; but Christ, by virtue of the solidarity of the race, as the representative man, died for all. Paul's conclusion therefore is, "We thus judge that if one died for all, then all died." But as Christ rose from the dead, so all who are united to Him by faith rise to life eternal. Paul says again, "Therefore, as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so by the righteousness of One the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life."

I hold that all we are brethren; that Jesus Christ is our great High Priest, that He is our only mediator and advocate, and that no man may aspire to such a position. I believe that salvation as looked at from man's side is, first, faith in Christ. I believe that repentance and the forgiveness that invariably follow it constitute man justified but not holy. Salvation must be both subjective and objective—the work of Christ within us as well as for us. Christ came to save men from sin, and this is accomplished by the working of the Holy Spirit in the heart of the believer. There is no salvation apart from sanctification, as there is no life without growth. Sanctification I consider to be the gradual work of the Holy Spirit in the heart, the life bearing witness to this power by increasing likeness to that of Christ. There is, however, a sense in which "sanctification" is used in the Bible, that refers to anything set apart for the service of God; and in this sense, and in this sense only, can a Christian be said to be sanctified as soon as he is a Christian. I believe all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness. My desire will be to find the true teaching of Scripture on every matter, believing that to-day it is able to make men wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.

I do not profess to know all about everything, or anything. We teach the little ones to say "God is love," but will not the wisest and most saintliest the Church has ever produced, have still much to learn about those three words 10,000 years hence? And yet I deny that I preach about what I do not know. I have lived for some years in London. I know some of the great thoroughfares, and some scores of small ones. Is that knowing London? And yet I cannot say that I do not know London. And I know something of a few of the thoroughfares in the vast Metropolis of Truth. I have found that they lead to the palace of the Great King, and I believe that every by-way leads into these great thoroughfares, if followed aright. My mission is not to strive to gather the millions of mankind into the little plot of freehold that I may call my denomination. My mission is to point the way to the palace—to bid men seek an interview with the King—to bid men learn his love, and live to work in that Great City; guides to those who have lost their way in its infinite labyrinths—voices of inspiration to careless ones—messengers of glad tidings to down-trodden slaves of sin and Satan.

SPANISH AND PORTUGUESE CHURCH AID SOCIETY.—The churches under the control of this Society appear to be doing good work amongst adults and the children, the educational and religious instruction of the latter being a prominent and interesting feature. The churches at Madrid, Seville, Malaga, Monistrol, Salamanca, Villaescusa, and Valladolid present encouraging tokens of blessing under earnest pastors, and from some of these centres the surrounding villages are evangelised. In Portugal two of the pastors are ex-Roman Catholic priests. Information concerning the work may be obtained from the secretary, Rev. L. S. Tugwell, 8, Adam-street, Adelphi, W.C.

BURIAL REFORM ASSOCIATION.—A meeting in connection with this Association was held at the Church Congress last week. The seven reforms submitted for general acceptance were: (1) Christian instead of heathen symbolism; (2) Timely, instead of delayed, interment; (3) Reverent laying of the body into the earth in a speedily decaying coffin, instead of attempting to preserve it in a strong, durable coffin. (4) Proper sanitary burial in soil sufficient and suitable, instead of imperfect, unsanitary burial in an already crowded grave or in a vault. (5) Strict moderation, instead of excess, in every detail. (6) Solemn meditation, instead of ostentation or feasting. (7) Due reverence, instead of indifference, at the burial of a pauper. Information can be obtained at the office, 16, King-street, London, E.C.; or from Rev. F. Lawrence, Hon. Sec., Weston Vicarage, York.

LOVE—THE SUPREME GIFT.

AN ADDRESS AT THE NORTHFIELD CONFERENCE.

By Professor HENRY DRUMMOND.

(Concluded from Sept. 30.)

So much for this analysis of love. Now, my brethren, the business of your lives is to fit these things into your character. That is the supreme thing to which you have to address yourselves—to learn love. And life is full of opportunities for learning love. Every man and woman every day has a thousand of them. The world is not a playground; it is a schoolroom; and its great lesson that we are always to learn is the lesson of love in all its parts. What makes a man a good football player? Practice. What makes a man a good artist—a good sculptor—a good musician? Practice. What makes a man a good athlete? Practice. What makes a man a good man? Practice. Nothing else. There is nothing capricious about religion. We do not get the soul in a different way—under different laws—from that in which we get the body. If a man doesn't exercise his arm, he gets no biceps muscle; and if a man doesn't exercise his soul, he has no muscle in his soul—no strength of character, no robustness. Love is not a thing of emotion and gush. It is a robust, strong, manly, vigorous expression of the whole character and nature in its fullest development. And these things are only to be acquired by daily and hourly practice.

Don't quarrel, therefore, with your lot in life. Don't quarrel with the quality you have of life. Don't be angry that you have to go through a network of temptation—that you are haunted with it every day. That is your practice, which God appoints you. That is your practice; and it is having its work in making you patient, and humble, and sincere, and unselfish, and kind, and courteous, and guileless. Don't grudge the hand that is moulding the shapeless image in you; it is growing more beautiful; and every touch is adding to its perfection. Keep in the midst of life. Don't isolate yourself. Be among men, and among things, and among troubles, and amongst difficulties and obstacles. You remember Goethe's words: Ein Talent bildet sich in der Stille; Karacter in den Strom von Leben—"Talent develops itself in solitude; character in the stream of life." That is where you are to learn love.

How? I might again go over all the things I went over last Sunday night as the futile means of becoming like Christ. We apply them all to love. We strive for it. We brace our wills to get it. We make laws for ourselves. And we pray for it. These things will not bring love into our nature. Love is an effect. It is a question of cause and effect; and if you fulfil the right condition, you must have the effect produced in you. Shall I tell you what the cause of love is? If you turn, when you get home, to the Revised Version of the Epistles of John, you will find there these words: "We love because He first loved us." "We love"—not, "We love Him." That is the way the old Version has it, and it is wrong. "We love because He first loved us." Look at that word "because." There is the cause of which I have spoken. "Because He first loved us." The effect follows that we love Him—we love all men. Our heart is slowly changed. Because He loved us, we love. Contemplate the love of Christ, and you will love Him. Stand before that, and you will be changed into the same image, from tenderness to tenderness.

There is no other way. You cannot love to order. You can only look at the lovely object, and fall in love with it. You cannot command yourself to do it. And so look at the great sacrifice of Christ, as He laid down his life all through life, and at his death upon the Cross of Calvary; and you must love Him. Love begets love. It is a process of induction. You put a piece of iron in the mere presence of an electrified body, and that piece of iron for a time becomes electrified. It becomes a temporary magnet in the presence of a permanent magnet, and as long as you leave the two side by side, they are both magnets. Remain side by side with Him who loved us, and gave Himself for us, and you too will become a permanent magnet—a permanent attractive force; and like Him you will draw all men—be they white men or black men—unto you. That is the inevitable effect of love. Any man who fulfils that cause must have that effect produced in him. Gentlemen, give up the idea that religion comes to us by chance, or by mystery, or by caprice. It comes to us by natural law: or by supernatural law, for all law is Divine. Edward Irving went to see a dying boy once, and when he entered the room, he just put his hand on the sufferer's head, and said, "My boy, God loves you," and went away. And the boy started from his bed, and he called out to the people in the house, "God loves me! God loves me!" One word. It changed that boy. The sense that God loved him had overpowered him, melted him down, and begun the making of a new heart. And that is how the love of God melts down the unlovely heart in us, and begets in us this new creature, who is patient and humble and unselfish. And there is no other way to get it. There is no trick about it. Oh, truth lies in that!—we love others, we love everybody, we love our enemies, because He first loved us.

LOVE DEFENDED.

Now, lastly: I have a word or two to say about Paul's reason for singling out love as the supreme possession. Love defended or justified. It is a very remarkable reason. In a single word it is this: it lasts. It is a thing that is going to last. "Love never faileth." Then Paul begins again one of his marvellous lists of the great things of the day, and exposes them. He runs over the things that men thought were going to last—the things that men accounted great; and he shows that they are all fleeting and transitory. He says: "Love never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail." It was the mother's ambition for a boy in those days that he should become a prophet. For hundreds of years God had never spoken by means of any prophet, and the prophet was greater than the king. Men waited for a prophet to appear, and hung upon his lips when he did. Paul says: "Whether there be prophecies, they shall fail."

Then Paul talks about tongues. That was another thing that was greatly coveted. "Whether there be tongues, they shall cease." As we all know, many, many centuries have passed since tongues have been known in this world. They have ceased. Take it in any sense you like. Take it in its narrowest sense, which probably was not in Paul's mind at all—languages in general. Take the words in which these chapters were written—Greek. It has gone. Take the Latin—the other great tongue of those days. It ceased long ago. Look at the Indian language. It is ceasing. The language of my own Scottish Highlands is ceasing. The most popular book in the English tongue at the present time, except the Bible, is one of Dickens' works—his "Pickwick Papers." It is written in the language of London street-life; and experts assure us that in fifty years it will be unintelligible to the average English reader. Its language is ceasing. Don't covet that.

Then Paul goes farther, and with even greater boldness he says, "Whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away." And the wisdom of the ancients, where is it? It is already gone. A school-boy to-day knows more than Sir Isaac Newton knew. His knowledge has vanished away. You put yesterday's newspaper in the fire. Its knowledge has vanished away. You buy the old editions of the great encyclopædias for a few cents. Their knowledge has vanished away. Look how the coach has been superseded by the steam-engine. Look how electricity, look how the telephone, has come in and put a hundred inventions aside. Ay, and they will have their day and then vanish away. The greatest living authority on electricity and on physics—Sir William Thomson—said the other day in Scotland at a meeting at which I was present, "The steam engine is passing away." "Whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away." At every workshop in America you will see out in the backyard a heap of old iron—a few wheels, and a few levers, all rusty. Twenty years ago that was the pride of the city. Men flocked in from the country to see this great invention, and now it has been superseded and has vanished away. And all the boasted science and philosophy of this day will soon be old. It is not going to last. My brother, it is not going to last. Let us pursue it; but let us not make it the chief thing. Let us be humble with it when we get it, because it is temporary.

In my time in the University of Edinburgh, the greatest figure in the faculty was Sir James Simpson, the discoverer of chloroform. The other day, just before I left Scotland, his successor and nephew, Professor Simpson, was asked by the librarian of the University to go to the library and pick out the books on his subject (midwifery) that were no longer needed. And his reply to the librarian was this:—"Take every book that is more than ten years old, and put it down in the cellar." Knowledge has vanished away. Sir James Simpson was a great authority ten years ago—twelve years ago; men came from all parts of the earth to consult him; and the whole knowledge of that day, within that short period, is now consigned by the science of to-day to the cellar. How true are the words of Paul, "We know in part, and we prophesy in part." "We see through a glass darkly." Can you tell me anything that is going to last? Many things Paul did not condescend to name. He did not mention money, fortune, fame; but he picked out the great things of his time, and then brushed them aside. A great many things that men denounce as sins are not sins; but they are temporary. And that is a favourite argument of Paul. He says, "The world passeth away." That is a great charge against the world. There is a great deal in it that is delightful and beautiful; there is a great deal in it that is useful and pleasant; but it passeth away—all that is in the world—the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life. But while the world passeth away, "he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever."

And Paul's argument here again is precisely that all these things are going to pass away, and therefore they are not worth the entire life and the consecration of an immortal soul. Let the immortal soul give himself to something that is immortal; and the only things that are eternal are these: "Now abideth faith, hope, love; and the greatest of these is love." You can see that the time will come when two of these things will perhaps pass away. I do not know—we know so little about the conditions of life in the other world—but it seems to me as if there will come a time when faith shall vanish into sight, and when hope shall vanish into full fruition. Then there will be one thing left, and that is love. Covet that everlasting gift—that one thing which is going to stand out—that one coinage which will be current when all the other coinages of all the nations shall be returned from the bank of eternity. Covet that, my brothers, and give yourselves to that. Put things in their proportion. Put things in their proportion; and let the object of your life be for yourself to have the character defended in these words—and it is the character of Christ—borne into your character, that you may be created into the same image.

Did you ever notice how John is continually associating love and faith with eternal life? I was not told when I was a Sunday scholar that "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should have everlasting life." What I was told, I remember, was that God so loved the world that if I trusted in Him, I was to have a thing called peace, or I was to have rest, or I was to have joy, or I was to have safety. But I had to find out for myself that whosoever trusteth in Him—that is, whosoever loveth Him, for trust is only the means to the end—hath everlasting life. The Gospel offers a man life. Don't offer men a thimbleful of Gospel. Don't offer them merely joy, or merely peace, or merely rest, or merely safety; but remember how Christ came to give man a more abundant life than they had, and then you will take hold of the whole of a man—you will give him a bigger life, a fuller life-current, than the life he is living. Then your Gospel will move him, if he has laid hold of it. Instead of laying hold of a part of his nature, you lay hold of the whole of his nature. Christ becomes to him—the Way, and the Truth, and the Life. Do you want to know whether you are to live to-morrow? Why do you want to live to-morrow? It is because there is some one who loves you, and whom you want to see to-morrow, and be with, and to love back. There is no other reason why we should live on than that we love and are beloved. You see how the thing is eternal. The moment a man has no one to love him, he commits suicide. So long as a man has those who love him, and whom he loves, he will live; because to live is to love. If it be but the love of a dog, it will keep him in life; but let that go and he has no contact with life—no reason to live. He dies by his own hand. You want to live because you love, so that love is life. "Love never faileth." Life never faileth, so long as there is love. That is the philosophy of what Paul is showing us: why love should be the supreme thing—because it is going to last. It is the eternal thing.

FULFILLING THE CONDITIONS.

Now, gentlemen, I have finished. How many of you will join me in reading that chapter once a week for the next three months? I know a man who did that, and it changed his whole life. Will you do it? It is for the greatest thing in the world. Ay, you might begin by reading it every day for a week—especially the verses in the middle which describe the perfect character. "Love suffereth long, and is kind; love envieth not; love vaunteth not itself." Get these ingredients fitted into your life. Then everything that you do is eternal. I need not tell you that eternal life is not a thing that we are to get when we die. It is a thing that we are living now, and that we will have a poor chance of getting when we die unless we are living it now. The life of love is an eternal life; and there is no worse fate can befall a man than to live and grow old alone—unloving and unloved. To be lost is to live in an unregenerate condition, loveless and unloved; and to be saved is to love—for God is love. So that this thing is worth doing. It is worth doing! It is worth giving time to. No man can become a saint in his sleep; and to fulfil the condition requires a certain amount of prayer and meditation and time, just as improvement in any direction, bodily or mental, requires a certain amount of preparation and time. Address yourselves to that one thing, and have this supreme thing engraven upon your character.

You will find as you look back upon your life that the moments that stand out above everything else are the moments when you have done things in a spirit of love. "He that loveth is born of God;" and above all the transitory pleasures of life there stand forward those supreme moments when we have been enabled to do unnoticed kindnesses to those around about us—things too trifling to speak about, but they become a part of us. I can remember them now. I have seen almost all the beautiful things God has made; I have enjoyed almost every pleasure that God has planned for man; and yet I can look back, and I see standing out above all the life that has gone four or five short experiences when the love of God reflected itself in some poor imitation, some small act of love of mine—and that is the thing that I get comfort from now. When I think about my past life, everything else has been transitory—has passed away. But the acts of love which no man knows about, or will ever know about—they never fail. And, my brethren, in closing, let me remind you that in the Book of Matthew, where the great Judgment Day is depicted for us in the imagery of One seated upon a throne and dividing the sheep from the goats, the test of a man then is not, "How have I believed?"—but "How have I loved?" The test of religion—the final test of religion—is not religiousness but love. I say the final test of religion at the great assizes is not religiousness, but love; not what I have done—not what I have believed—not what I have achieved—but how I have loved: according to the number of the cups of cold water we have given in the name of Christ.

Oh, may I join the choir invisible
Of those immortal dead who live again
In lives made better by their presence!

BETHNAL GREEN FREE LIBRARY.—The work carried on in this institution for some years among the factory hands has increased in interest, the numbers attending the library (through the liberality of the Religious Tract Society) and evening classes having considerably increased of late, so that we are now straitened for want of room. Missionaries, Bible students, open-air preachers, Sunday-school workers, and other Christian workers of East London continue to avail themselves of the special facilities afforded for study. G. F. HILCKEN, Librarian.

ELIJAH THE PROPHET.

OUR readers must have been interested and profited with the exposition of the life of the intrepid prophet, which has been presented in its varied phases by Rev. F. B. Meyer. Few Old Testament biographies are more instructive, and many have testified that the Lord has blessed the lessons derived from it to the hearts of its readers. Perhaps more than any those who, from sickness or any other cause, have been unable to visit the house of God, have derived benefit and enjoyment from Mr. Meyer's articles, which have been full of encouragement and comfort, as well as of exhortation.

As already announced, these articles will be shortly collected in book form, with several original illustrations. These illustrations will be found in "THE CHRISTIAN" ALMANACK for 1888, a copy of which forms a supplement to each number of our present issue. This wall-sheet will serve to bring back through the eye to the heart many of the lessons which have been learnt in the chamber whilst perusing Elijah's history; and we trust that the texts selected for each day of the ensuing year will prove, as it were, the voice of the living God speaking to waiting and listening souls.

CONFERENCE IN MELBOURNE.

THE fourteenth annual Christian Conference of the Melbourne Y.M.C.A. was held for four days early in August, and proved a season of remarkable power and blessing. The subject was, "Things most surely believed among us," and these were considered in fourteen addresses on "Foundation Truths" by as many ministers and other gentlemen. The main lines adopted covered the declarations of the Word of God concerning God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. The true Fatherhood of God, as opposed to modern theories on the subject; the Deity and the atoning work of Christ; and the varied operations of the Holy Spirit—were prominently dealt with. The last two addresses were on the Authority and Profitableness of Holy Scripture.

Local circumstances impressed the promoters with the advisability of making the Conference an affirmation of these essential features in evangelical truth, and although there was some fear lest the result should be a dry theological discussion, prayer and faith had their way, and with one consent, the occasion proved a time of most precious instruction, enjoyment, and revival. The attendance was considerably in advance of previous years, the new Freemasons' Hall having been used, and at the closing meeting a United Communion Service was held. Sixteen ministers, representing every evangelical section of the Church, dispensed the bread and wine to nearly a thousand communicants. This was a new departure, as well as an occasion of unspeakable solemnity and blessing.

On the last morning the Hon. James Balfour, M.L.C., gave an invitation breakfast to a large number of ladies and gentlemen, and, as in past years, this gathering was devoted to reports of Christian work.

August, 1887. W. A. SOUTHWELL, Gen. Sec.

LETTER TO SCHOOLBOYS.—DEAR SIR,—About six years ago, through your kindly making known my willingness to send a copy of my "Letter to Schoolboys" (addressed to the boys of our public schools), nearly a thousand copies were circulated throughout the United Kingdom. May I ask you to again make known that I am prepared to send a copy to any boy who will write direct to me for the same.—Yours, very truly,

JOHN SHRIMPTON.

Church Parliaments.

THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

This influential deliberative assembly met last week at Wolverhampton and discussed numerous topics, most of them of living interest and pressing importance in the present day. The opening sermon by the Bishop of Durham, on Monday, was a plea for a comprehensive world wide Catholic Church—a dream that is not likely to come within sight of realisation, so far as we can see, during this dispensation. Uniformity of organisation would not of necessity secure unity of spirit; and the latter, which is the thing to be desired, can surely be had without the former.

TUESDAY.

This morning the Bishop of Lichfield, President of the Conference, gave the inaugural address, which was a review of progress during the past twenty years, and the lessons of that period. In view of the extension of the Church of England system in America, the Colonies, and other parts of the world, the Bishop found many grounds for encouragement. He also referred, in a congratulatory spirit, to such subjects as the revision of the Scriptures, the closer approximation of Science and Revelation, as marking the advances of the last two decades. He, too, had a good deal to say about Christian Union, the most noteworthy remark being that union with the Romish Church, though desirable, appeared hopeless. "A supreme and infallible Pope is a barrier which seems to shut out all hope. The claims of Rome are destructive of catholicity." Speaking of the relations between Church and State, he hinted that possibly the time would come when the Church of England would require to be freed from Parliamentary control, as in the past she had been delivered from Papal supremacy. In a brief address that followed, the Archbishop of Canterbury paid a warm tribute to the work of the Church Army, and urged a large extension of its operations as a means of reaching with the Gospel the artisan and industrial population. The Primate's pleas for greater simplicity of life among the wealthy classes, and for undoing the evil caused by our liquor trading among the heathen fell, we hope, on sympathetic and responsive ears.

The greater part of the day was devoted to papers and discussions of historical matters, and the consideration of "preaching orders." On this last point one speaker said there would be no need to institute any new order of preachers if the heads of the Church had the power of summarily dismissing incompetent clergymen. One of the speakers was Canon Body, the High Church missioner, who revealed his sacerdotal proclivities by the statement that only secondary in importance to the question, "What think ye of Christ?" is the other question, "What think ye of the Church?" At a thinly attended meeting in the evening the question of "The Priesthood of the Laity" was considered. There seemed to be a wide difference of view as to the exact limits of the power and privilege to be assigned to those not Episcopally ordained. The most sweeping statement was one by Rev. H. W. Webb Peploe, who said that the Holy Ghost was imparted as fully to women and children as to an ordained person, when Christ said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." This view, however, although founded upon Westcott's authority, the President, Bishop Maclagan, challenged in his closing remarks.

WEDNESDAY.

Many excellent and weighty words were spoken this morning about the need for greater "elasticity of worship" in the services of the Church of England, if the people are to be attracted and edified. They might all be summed up, perhaps, in this sentence, uttered by a Bristol clergyman:—"We lose the people because the chapel services are so much more simple, and more readily understood." If the people all went to chapel it would not matter so much, but we think it likely that many who do not go there might be drawn within the sound of the Gospel at Church of England places of worship, if there were less routine and more life in the conduct of the services.

The afternoon was devoted to the tithe question. We may pass on, however, to the subject of the evening, which was of more general interest, "Socialism and Christianity." A paper, prepared by the Bishop of Derry, opened well by recognising the fact that it is only under the Christian system that the spirit of Socialism could grow. "The sentiment and aspiration of Socialism are distinctly Christian. To be pained by the discrepancies of conditions round us; to own the enormous chasm yawning between Lazarus and Dives; to hold the brotherhood and essential equality of all the children of our Father; to maintain certainly not the abstract right to education, fair wages, fitting homes, and civilising rest, but the moral expediency of bringing these blessings within the reach of all who will use them—if this is the spirit of Socialism, so it is also the spirit of Christianity."

When, however, the Prelate went on to discourage all experiments in Socialism, it seemed to be trifling with a vital subject, to treat it in such an academical and inconsequential fashion. To preach the crucified and risen Christ, he said most truly, is to develop all that is true, and refute all that is false in Socialism. But surely "the preaching of the crucified and risen Christ" implies the living out of a crucified and risen life on the part of Christ's followers; that is, a life devoted to the well-being of others, especially the needy and the sorrowing.

Perhaps the one event of this year's Congress most remarked upon beforehand, was the selection of Mr. H. H. Champion, a well-known Socialistic agitator, to read a paper on the subject. He got a very cordial reception on the whole, though he excited much dissent by strongly animadverting on the waste of spending £17,000 in "upholstering Westminster Abbey" at the recent Jubilee celebration. Premising that it was possible for some men to lift themselves above their surroundings, he asserted that the great mass of the people are affected largely by their material condition. We append a part of the speaker's incisive utterances, because they contain some of the arguments that our Christian society will have to meet, and if possible answer:—

> The extremes of wealth and poverty alike almost entirely prevent the possibility of a general attainment of the physical and mental health which are the basis of moral health. It does not necessarily follow that vice and misery will disappear in a community in which the overwhelming temptations occasioned by destitution and luxury are absent. But it does, we think, hold true that the average man is less likely to prove a cause of misery to himself and to others if he is neither very poor nor very rich.... What is the main cause of the existence of such things in a community so wealthy as the British nation? First, the possession by individuals of the means of producing all wealth; second, the consequent unlimited power of those individuals to fix the conditions under which alone the propertyless class shall have access to the means of satisfying their needs; third, the self-regarding instinct in man which prompts these propertied individuals to deny such access, unless they are to gain by it; and fourth, the fact that the propertyless classes are compelled by their necessities to accept whatever conditions are offered them.
> Apply these propositions to any case where you see a man who is willing to work, and starving because he cannot, by his work, keep not only himself, but also the persons who own the means and implements necessary for making wealth, or where you see a man, woman, or child slaving from morning till night for "a bed of straw, a crust of bread, and rags." You will find them the only complete explanations of the appalling problems that face us; of how it comes that this England who emancipated black slaves that worked as a rule for 45 hours a week for a wholesome living, yet suffers tramway men to work 110; who spends wealth like water to send the Bible to the heathen, yet must buy female labour in the cheapest market, and get the uniforms of the servants of the State made at wages that recruit the army of prostitutes; who subscribes thousands to aid a few score of sufferers by earthquake or flood, yet allows railway servants to be killed by the hundred, and maimed by the thousand, every year, through accidents that could be prevented by an outlay of ¼ per cent. on the capital; who spends £17,000 upholstering Westminster Abbey in order to thank the God who lives in temples not made with hands, that one woman has not died, yet grudges the dole of a free meal to helpless starvelings in our Board schools; who does not think twice about laying out £40,000 to ease the stream of carriages turning Hyde Park-corner, yet never thinks at all of using the national wealth to stem or divert the flood of the unemployed flowing to the workhouse door, or the suicide's grave.
> Acting on the above propositions, Socialists would commence at once to limit the right of property to take advantage of the necessities of the poor, by a further and drastic application of the principles of the Factory Acts, the Irish Land Acts, the recent Shop Hours Regulation Acts. They would further carry out very logically and practically the universally accepted sentiment that if property has its rights it also has its duties, by decreeing that property holders who do not fulfil their duties thereby forfeit their rights. In a district in central London the death-rate, owing to insanitary conditions, is seven times as high as it is in St. George's, Hanover-square. I say the house owners there are abusing their rights by killing people, and I would be glad to confiscate the instruments of slow murder. Bryant & May, Limited (in which company some twenty clergymen are shareholders), pay a dividend of 20 per cent., and a wage of under a penny an hour to some of their workers. I have no respect for rights of property so used. These slaves too must be emancipated, and, as to the method, it is for the educated and propertied classes to say, and to say soon, whether they are to be bought out with money like the slaves of our West Indian colonies, or like the slaves of the Southern States of America, with blood.
> I have taken it for granted that the other speakers to-night will have told you that the churches are bound not to return the answer of Cain to the cries of anguish that go up to heaven from our wealthy civilisation. I can tell you that it is my opinion that if the spirit of the New Testament had been boldly and fearlessly preached to rich and poor in England, there would be no Socialist movement to discuss; and that I believe that to be the opinion of every working class audience I have ever addressed. There is among the poor a strong belief in the simple doctrine of the Gospels, but a great disbelief in the sincerity of a church that many of them rightly or wrongly think has turned that doctrine into "a Christless creed that spits on Christ."
> Put yourselves for a moment in the place of a man who has known what it is to tramp in search of work with the cries of his starving child in his ears, when he reads, "Come unto Me, all ye who labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," and who hears that the Primate of the English Church, with his £15,000 a year and two palaces, when considering the lot of some wretchedly paid toilers in East London, said that it might be "alleviated by spiritual consolation." Or when he remembers the scourge of small cords in the Temple, and finds in English churches seats sold in a theatre, the best to the highest bidder; and the rich, who shall hardly enter the kingdom, allowed, when in the act of declaring the brotherhood of men, to keep the poor from between the wind and their nobility. Or when he remembers that the word is choked by the deceitfulness of riches and the lust of other things, and reads lists of bishops who have taken hundreds of thousands of pounds as their viaticum cœli. Or when he learns from many an instance that the comparatively few priests who boldly lift up their voices on behalf of the poor are more likely to get suspension than preferment.

Every day I see more clearly that the great thing needful to save our country from grave calamity is that just and resolute men should stand between the opposing hosts of Capital and Labour, and tell the whole truth fearlessly to each, absolutely unmoved by the vultus instantis tyranni, or by the civium ardor prava jubentium; to King Capital, that the claims of labour are in the main rightful, and that true patriotism and true religion demand that they be generously and fairly met; to the clamouring hosts of Labour that if as they are strong they will be merciful, demand not vengeance for the past, but only justice for the future, and argue their case without passion or prejudice, then the churches and creeds and sects can and will put aside their minor differences for the moment, and find in their common worship at the Cross of Christ an over-mastering impulse to unite in bringing about a speedy but peaceful solution of the social problem.

In the after discussion, Mr. Stanley Leighton, M.P., asserted that the Christian was as much dissatisfied with the present state of things as the "Socialist," but which of them, he asked, works the most effectually to set matters right? What have Socialists done to help the poor by emigration or otherwise? Prebendary Grier advised Socialists to inquire how far the poverty of the people is self-inflicted—an evident hit at the evils of intemperance among the masses. One speaker said much more could be done through influencing individuals than by legislation; but Rev. H. C. Shuttleworth declared that legislation was needed to compel capitalists and employers to mete out justice to those who serve them. The Dean of Armagh put the thing in a nutshell, as to the difference between the Christian and the Socialistic methods:—The one says, "Give," the other says, "I will take." Dr. Maclagan, in closing the animated discussion, made a good point in showing that most of the movements of recent times for the amelioration of the poor and the socially oppressed had come from a Christian and Episcopalian statesman—the Earl of Shaftesbury.

THURSDAY.

The following excellent summary of part of this day's proceedings is from The Daily News:—By far the most interesting meeting to day has been one that can only indirectly be included in the Congress programme. It was a special gathering for women members of Congress at the Agricultural Hall. Here there have been already two Conventions for working women, and these might be not inaptly described as mothers' meetings on a large scale. The meeting this morning was for ladies. The Vicar of Wolverhampton and another clergyman were present at the opening to conduct the devotional exercises, but they went away when the ladies on the platform took the business in hand. The singing was very pretty, but one sadly missed the underground of bass and the upper scaffolding of tenor which men's voices alone can supply. The Bishop delivered a paternal address by way of starting the proceedings, and he then gave up the chair to his wife, retiring with the other gentlemen in good order to the rear of the position. Mrs. Maclagan delivered a really excellent extempore address in a style of elocution which many of the clergy might imitate with advantage. Her theme was the duties of ladies to their daughters and servants. Girls nowadays, she pointed out, live more for pleasure than did their mothers and grandmothers, and have much more done for them, the consequence being a tendency to selfishness. Young ladies often protest that they have no time for duty, when on inquiry it is found that their lives are taken up in an unceasing round of amusements and pleasures: and when the young lady, in what is called Society, marries, her one idea is that she and her husband shall do nothing but enjoy themselves. What, it was demanded, did many mistresses know of the manner in which the maid servants occupied their leisure? Upon this point Mrs. Maclagan said that it was a mistress's duty to provide wholesome amusements and literature for the servants—good but not goody books, and chess, draughts, and the newer games which are so easily learned. Ladies, she added, think a good deal of the servants' duties to them, but do they ever think of their duty to the servants?

Following Mrs. Maclagan was Laura Ridding, wife of the Bishop of Nottingham. She read a good sensible paper on the home duties of educated women, urging ladies to make their homes attractive to all, and remarking that they are indeed victorious women whose grown-up sons tell them that home is "the jolliest place in the world." The talking of scandal, fast romps, and a low tone at the dinner table were amongst the evil influences to be boldly discouraged in the home.

Miss M. H. Mason, of the Local Government Board, in a succeeding paper, dealt with the social side of women's work amongst neighbours, admitting that no doubt many ladies engaged in movements in order to make desirable acquaintances and because they were fashionable, but contending that it was something to engage their services even in such a way. Miss Mason created no little amusement by pleading on behalf of old maids, and protesting against the injustice and impertinence of the supposition that women remained single because no one had asked them to marry. The next paper (by Mrs. Bevan) was a treatise on the religious aspect of woman's life.

In Congress Hall at this evening's meeting the Bishop of Bedford gave a harrowing account of child-life in great cities. He began, indeed, by admitting a temptation to declare that there is no child-life. While, on the one hand, he did not say that our country villages always produce a supply of little ones characterised by pastoral simplicity and rustic innocence, he confessed that it would be a gross wrong to think of all town children as contaminated with vice and depraved by unwholesome knowledge. His main contention was that if we recognise childhood by years and not by character, there is a very piteous child-life in our great cities. "It is not," he said—

> A wholesome life, whether for the little boy who swaggers with his cigarette, and rattles off his "language" by the gin-palace corner; or for the little girl, with her long fringe of hair on her forehead, her hired ostrich feather for her Sunday walk, and her young man, who is probably the little boy with the cigarette; or for the babies, who are kept out and up to any time of night, and learn rakish hours from the cradle. Street education is not the purest and most refining; and there are two most potent influences affecting the child life of great cities which are not altogether counteractive of the evil tendency of the streets. There is, first, the Board school system, and, secondly, the popular amusements.

The Bishop, however, hastened to explain that he was not going to decry the Board school system, because it had supplied a great need; yet it was vain to contend that it was satisfactory in its religious teaching. The cheap theatre, the music hall, and the dancing saloon were referred to as schools of evil, and to these was added the terrible facility with which depraving literature is obtained and secretly circulated amongst boys and girls. The enormous decrease in juvenile crime was cited by Dr. How as a hopeful sign of improvement due to the Board school system and wide spread of education, the better homes, the temperance movement, Sunday-schools, and children's services. Upon the subject of neglected and ill-treated children, the Bishop said there is a stratum in our social deposits in which child-life is a thing to arouse infinite pity and fierce indignation, and that it is a disgrace to our English name and honour that a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is needed. After illustrating this dark picture by a number of anecdotes, the speaker observed that the sufferings of children were not all caused by cruelty; for there is, in London at any rate, much want. Thus a little girl, dying the other day in Shoreditch, said, "Now there will be enough for the rest to eat."

FRIDAY.

In the morning six papers were read upon the Epistle to the Hebrews. Hymns were sung at intervals, and there was no discussion. The afternoon subject upon Church Missions in Africa produced some observations upon polygamy, which was described by all who have had experience in missionary work as a serious hindrance. Still it was admitted that the system was so engrained in the native races that it could not be eradicated for many years. The only hope, therefore, was to teach the children the true way, since it was impossible for the Church to come to any terms with a system so opposed to Christianity. A gentleman, who has had personal acquaintance with the races of Central Africa, pointed out that the sudden abolition of polygamy would be hard upon the man whose social status depended upon the number of his wives, as in England it was determined by the number of a man's acres, while the women would be unable to marry again, and would be reduced to much distress.

During the Congress week an unusual number of outside meetings have been held. In addition to those for working men and working women, they have been in support of the Church Army, the Church Defence Institution, Missions to Seamen, Home Missions in East London, the Marriage Law Defence Union, the Young Men's Friendly Society, the Incorporated Free and Open Church Association, the Home Reunion Society, and the Thames Church Mission. The day has long gone by for contentions between Ritualists and Evangelicals at Church Congresses; we hear nothing now about vestments and Romish tendencies, and even Father Ignatius seems to have given up attending these annual gatherings.

THE BAPTIST UNION.

The autumnal assembly of this body was held this year at the busy industrial centre, Sheffield. No topic of overwhelming interest came up for consideration, but all the utterances were marked by a direct and practical bearing on the Church's work of to-day. The full reports of the proceedings given in the denominational organs indicate that the "Down Grade" papers, by Mr. Spurgeon, were much discussed in private, but no specific reference was made to them at the public sessions of the Union.

The greatest disappointments felt in connection with the meetings arose from the feeble health of the President, Dr. Culross. He was not able to be at the reception meetings, but his place was ably filled by the Vice-President, Dr. Clifford. Words of mature wisdom and counsel were also uttered by two veterans, Rev. John Aldis and Dr. Trestrail. Deputations from other free churches attended, and offered words of congratulation and greeting. It would have been well if the Church of England friends in the city had copied the example of their Nonconforming brethren at Wolverhampton, who expressed a fraternal interest in the assembling of the Church Congress there.

Much interest was created by the sermon to young men by Rev. D. P. McPherson, Mr. Hugh Stowell Brown's successor at Liverpool. His theme was the old, old story of the Divine love to sinful men, and its crowning manifestation in the incarnation, life, and death of Jesus Christ. He urged his young brethren to prove themselves worthy of having been redeemed at such a cost, by giving up their lives for the salvation of their fellows, whether at home or on the foreign field. The noble example of those who had laid down their lives on the Congo in Christ's service was held up to emulation.

The autumnal missionary sermon, by Dr. McLaren, of Manchester, drew together a great crowd, attracted by the high repute of the preacher. He took for his text Isa. lx. 1, 2, 3, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come," &c.

> A darkened world and a sunlit church were two convictions without which we could not do our work. The darkness of ignorance and the sorrow of sin having been depicted with all the preacher's graphic power and tenderness, a warning note was struck against present-day tendencies to weaken the force of solemn convictions about the realities of heathenism. The Church should be not only sun-lighted, but sun-like, shining into the darkness of the earth. The last word of the Gospel was transformation. Christ came to be our light, and because He is in us we are changed into his image. We are "suns," "the light of the world," "Christ's prophets," "servants of the Lord," &c. Christ moves in the heavens, circled by many another sun. The summons to the Church was to shine; the spiritual shining was not altogether spontaneous. Stars did not need to be bidden to shine, nor a candle either; but the voluntariness of Christian service enhanced the value of our contribution to the illumination of the world. If we were light, we should be able to shine, we should find it easy to shine, we could not help shining. Nearness to Christ was the condition of all faithful service. The fitness to impart was to possess. Electricians endeavour to accumulate force; Christians could not start "accumulators;" personal contact was power, and only personal contact. What should we say about the Christians who never had any wish to shine? God forbid that he should say they had no light. But this he would say—it burned very low. Speaking of the confident promise, "The Gentiles shall come to his light," &c., the Doctor said men and women, with the life of Christians in them, would draw men to Him. We had, however, no reason to expect hasty results in anything that was worth doing. We could not say how long might be the preparation for a rapid and seemingly sudden manifestation in the end. But we must not be satisfied with a low growth at home and abroad, the result of not brightly shining with Christ's light. Artificial light, "smelling sulphurous and impurified," must be shunned, and phosphorescent vapours rising from decay.

As a practical commentary on the discourse, a designation and valedictory service took place in the afternoon of the same day. Mr. A. H. Baynes, the mission secretary, made an interesting statement referring mainly to the brethren about to depart for their fields of labour. Referring at the close to the Congo Mission he said:—

> This Congo Mission has been a vast blessing to the Christian Church. It has lifted up the missionary enterprise into a higher and more sacred place; it has developed new sympathies and loftier aspirations, called forth joyful self-sacrifice, and shown the world that the heroic in Christianity has not yet died out. Why, even in this unheroic utilitarian age, this blessed enterprise has kindled new stars, large and lustrous, in the galaxy of truest sainthood, and added imperishable names to the noble army of martyrs. Trials, disappointments, sickness, and death. Yes, truly. But as Livingstone wrote:—"This discipline is sure to come. No great enterprise is ever accomplished without loss; and pioneering work must always mean experience through suffering. Let Christians at home clearly understand this, and, instead of wringing their hands and growing faint-hearted when they hear of death—which they often call disaster—let them regard all such providences as fresh calls to duty, and fresh inspirations to more unselfish service." In marvellous condescension and Divine pity God has committed to our poor human hands this blessed ministry of reconciliation, and made us in some mysterious sense fellow-workers with his Son in the regeneration of this lost continent. We have put our hands to this sublime enterprise, and to it we, to-day, stand publicly committed. Shall we be traitors to our trust? It is less than ten years since the whole region of the Congo, so long enveloped in mystery, has been explored and opened up by Mr. Stanley; and this decade more than covers all the missionary work of our Society. Yet in this brief span harvest sheaves have been already gathered in, and the fields are waving white. Surely, never since the days of the great Apostle of the Gentiles has so great and effectual a door been opened to the Church of Christ as Africa presents to-day.

Dr. Dallinger, who presided, encouraged the outgoing missionaries with some weighty words as to the philosophic and immovable basis of the Christian faith. Then followed words of farewell from these departing friends—Rev. T. R. Edwards, Rev. R. Wright Hay, Rev. G. H. Rouse, Rev. W. H. Gamble, Rev. James Smith (of Delhi), and others. Mr. Smith, who returns to India at a somewhat advanced age, said:—

> When I have seen such a redundance of ministerial labour in England—I am sure I shall be pardoned for saying that I have seen brethren elbowing each other rather too much—so many out-of-employment ministers, I have thought this is no longer the place for me. I went out to India forty-seven years ago, and I can look back and see that country as very few men can. Though the work has progressed, and the country is becoming more hopeful, and the people are being largely emancipated from the ignorance of ages, the work is not done. Up to a very recent period the whole labouring population of India was prevented from partaking, in the smallest degree, in the benefits of education; millions could not read, caste would not permit them to touch a book; now the Government has, a short time ago, made a great effort to reach these labouring classes, and give them the benefit of education. There is an awakening, somehow, full of encouragement. The old stagnant pools of Hinduism have been stirred to their very depths, and everywhere men are asking for more light and more information; everywhere men are waiting to be taught. The harvest is white, but the labourers are few. There are especial calls just now. There is a very great and important change in the native churches. I do not believe it possible for any missionary society to continue to the end of the chapter paying their own agents and the native agents. A missionary society accomplishes its purpose in proportion as it establishes self-supporting and self-propagating churches.

In the evening a great public missionary meeting was held, the Mayor of Sheffield presiding. Stirring speeches were delivered by various friends, who, from personal knowledge and experience, dwelt on the claims of the heathen and told of the past triumphs of the Gospel among those who had sat in nature's darkness and superstition.

A communion service on Wednesday morning was greatly enjoyed, and felt to be a hallowed preparation for the engagements of the day. The chief of these was the address of the President, Dr. Culross, who was able to deliver it himself, though he looked far from well. His theme was "Faith" as "the root grace of the Gospel." As to the assertion that faith is decaying, he said it was no new one; the same assertion has been made and repeated from generation to generation since the days of the Reformation. It would be easy to array facts that seem to prove the statement. They are portentous facts, and justify solicitude. To those who doubt the statements related in the Gospels, the resurrection of Jesus, as the central fact of the Christian faith, stands up as an impassable barrier. The excessive devotion to culture on the part of some, results in a materialistic turn of mind; but the things of the Spirit can only be understood by the spiritual part of man. Another modern peril is the increase of luxury. The purely worldly man has a larger sphere of enjoyment open to him, and therefore thinks he is better able to do without God. At the other end of the scale the struggle for existence tends to make men forget God, though it ought to send them to Him as their true refuge. Another obstacle to faith is pride, whether of intellect or of heart. Then it must be admitted that believers have done something to produce unbelief by their way of handling the Bible. It is too often spiritualised so as to turn the Word of God into a kind of clever children's puzzle. Textual preaching as opposed to continuous exposition is apt to give an incomplete idea of the scope of the Scriptures. The preacher's preconceived notions sometimes bias him, so that the Bible becomes the fiddle on which is played the tune of sect or party, and the deadly heresy has got abroad that we can make the Bible prove anything we like.

As to the brighter side of the subject, it is certainly better to have this open opposition than the old, stolid, serene indifference; or than the dead, passionless lip assent, with no heart behind it, that passed itself off as Christian faith. The beautiful heroic lives of many believers, too, are stronger as arguments for Christianity than all that can be said against it. We are coming also to see truth better in its real and relative proportions. Said the speaker, "I say frankly that I believe fewer things than at one time I did, or thought I did; but then these fewer things are bigger, grander, more influential, in all ways more to the soul...Do not set that down for decay of faith, which is really the enlarging and deepening of it." Best of all—

> Jesus Christ is the grand answer to all fears... The scattered rays of light which shone in former ages of the world are focussed in Him; a thousand prophetic fingers pointed onward to Him; He is the Desire of all nations, meeting the questions and yearnings of the universal conscience and heart; He is the culmination of those ever-brightening disclosures of the Divine character and attributes that had preceded, and the substance of those inextinguishable hopes that had been kindled; without Him the strange, sad history of man would be an inexplicable riddle; and his coming marked the fulness of the time, and was the new-beginning of the ages...The drift of all is this, that we should go on with our Christian living and Christian labour in our various spheres, unmoved by the clamour around us, undismayed by hostility, possessing our souls in peace.

Many subjects of interest and importance were dealt with at the succeeding sessions of the Union, but our limited space will not permit us to particularise.

MEDICAL MISSIONS have lately been established in Canning Town and Walworth.

Post-office Orders should be made payable at 66, High-street, Whitechapel, E. Letters and Parcels should be addressed to GEORGE HOLLAND, The Ragged Schools, George Yard, High-street, Whitechapel, London, E.

EVANGELICAL HOSPITAL for Spezia and District.—Further subscriptions are urgently needed for the foundation of above. Suitable premises have already been secured. The annual expenses will amount to about £400. Donations will be thankfully received and acknowledged by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, or by the Director, Mr. A. A. COATES, Spezia, Italy.

Referee, Rev. F. B. MEYER, Leicester.

THE SAN REMO HOME for Invalid Ladies.—This Home will re-open as usual on November 1. The damages caused by the recent earthquakes have necessitated considerable extra expense in structural repairs to the house, and it is hoped that those who know what a boon the above institution has been to many for the last nine years (and any who have it in their power to help), may be glad of this opportunity of showing their interest in, and aiding by their contributions to relieve it of its unforeseen debt.—All communications connected with the above work to be addressed to Miss MACDONALD LOCKHART, The Lee, Lanark, N.B.

NERVOUS DISEASES. — Special provision is made in the National Hospital for the Paralyzed and Epileptic (Albany Memorial), Queen-square, Bloomsbury, for persons of the middle classes in straitened circumstances, who pay 21s. per week. Apply to the Secretary-Director.

INEBRIATE HOME for Gentlemen.—The Salvation Army has opened a Home in the North of London.—Friends of patients should apply by letter, marked private, addressed Mr. GYSIN, 101, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C.

SUNDAY SCHOOL EXTENSION on the Continent.—Special fund devoted to this work now exhausted. Seventeen missionaries employed, but Committee without means to pay salaries falling due, and other grants already pledged. Appeals therefore, to all friends of religious education for immediate and generous assistance. Contributions gratefully received by Mr. J. E. TRESSIDER, Financial Secretary, Sunday School Union, 56, Old Bailey, E.C.

HOME HOSPITAL, 9 and 32, Lupus-street, St. George's-square, S.W., for Ladies and Children (medical, surgical, and confinement cases). Private wards. Ladies taken as dispensing and midwifery students. The Trustees ask help for free bed.—Address LADY SUPERINTENDENT.

PARIS CITY MISSION. — Eight well-qualified Missionaries now make Christ and His salvation known to the poor of Paris. The spiritual and social wounds of Atheism, Superstition, and Corruption can only be healed by the "glorious Gospel." Hundreds of our own poor in the English colony of that city have spiritual care. Funds are urgently needed, and the Committee ask for Immediate Help. Paris Christians, who are few and poor, add one-third to all foreign contributions. —Remit to F. A. BEVAN, Esq., Treasurer, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or to the Hon. Secretary for England, Mr. J. M. WEYLLAND, 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's Wood, N.W., from whom reports and copies of "Paris and the Paris City Mission" can be obtained free.

MONEY, WARM WEARING APPAREL, UNDERCLOTHING. — HELP earnestly solicited for many necessitous Gentlewomen and Invalids.—Miss FAITHFULL, The Institute, 136, Regent-street. The need is very urgent.

CONTRIBUTIONS OF CLOTHING for distribution among the poorer patients and their families are earnestly solicited by the Committee of the Ladies' Samaritan Society, National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen-square, Bloomsbury.—Parcels should be addressed to Miss S. WHITMORE, Clerk to the Ladies' Committee, at the Hospital. Donations in money will also be thankfully received.

ANXIETY OF SOUL. — Any to whom the way of salvation is not clear, are invited to communicate, either personally or by letter, to W. S., care of Evangelistic Secretary, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

SIXPENCE (Post Free), or Large Edition (cloth), 1s. 3d., from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E., and Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The Twenty-second Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing, from August to October.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN" WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CHRONIC WEAKNESS of the LUNGS, WITH LIVER AFFECTION.

CASE OF MISS M—— M——, OF LIMBER HILL, ULCEBY, LINC.

This patient wishes me not to publish her name in print, but to give it for private reference only.

She first consulted me in November last. She had been ill for four years. Symptoms—pains in the chest, with expectoration, poor appetite, sickness, disordered digestion, all the secretions irregular, flushings, palpitations, loss of strength, and general wasting of flesh.

She was under my treatment from November to May of this year. From the commencement improvement was manifest. In December her mother writes: "Her appetite is much better. She does not look so pale and ghastly."

In March she writes: "My daughter is mending very nicely. She digests her food better than she has done for years, and is gaining strength."

May 24th, the patient writes me: "I cannot thank you enough for the good I have received. I shall not fail to recommend your treatment to all whom I know."

August 16th, Miss M—— writes: "I am pleased to tell you that I have been wonderfully well, except neuralgia at times."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

This biography has been written at the request of Dr. Punshon's family and executors, and the whole of his private papers have been placed in Mr. Macdonald's hands. Consequently it has not been anticipated by any memorials or sketches that have already appeared. The history of the five years which Dr. Punshon spent in Canada is furnished by his son-in-law, Professor Reynar.

For the Young.

LITTLE THINGS.

I cannot do great things for Him
 Who did so much for me,
But I would like to show my love,
 Dear Jesus, unto Thee.
Faithful in every little thing,
 O Saviour, may I be!

There are small crosses I may take,
 Small burdens I may bear,
Small acts of faith and deeds of love,
 Small sorrows I may share;
And little bits of work for thee
 I may do everywhere.

And so I ask Thee, Give me grace
 My little place to fill,
That I may ever walk with Thee
 And ever do thy will;
And in each duty, great or small,
 May I be faithful still.

"FOR JESUS' SAKE."

"Please, mamma, may we have a party?" said one little maid, and "Please, mamma, may we have a party?" said another little maid, and "Please, mamma, tan we have a palty?" said a third wee wee maid, in a lisping voice; so what could mamma do but say "yes" to such a trio of youthful pleaders?

Away they scampered, with Cecil at their heels, who seemed quite as well pleased as his sisters, though he had not joined them in their request; and soon Phemie's new china set was spread out on the little round table. Since grandma sent the tea set as a Christmas present to her little namesake, parties had become quite common with the children, rather too common, mamma out of doors, and Nellie was so little, and Phemie was so importunate, and Fanny was so persevering at her lessons, that mamma's resolution to put a stop to them was for once overcome.

A saucer of jam, a few cookies, some crackers, and bread and cheese were provided, and when the kettle boiled mamma made tea, and then left the little people to themselves.

Presently, high words and discordant tones proceeded from the dining-room, and mamma listened for some clue to the disturbance.

"No, I'll pour it out, 'cause they're my dishes!" said one voice. "I ought to do it, Phemie, 'cause I'm the oldest, and the oldest should be the mamma!" said another voice.

"You just shan't, then!" said the first speaker.

"Let Phemie do it," broke in Cecil; "you're so big and awkward, Fan."

"I ain't awkward! Let go that teapot or I'll tell ma."

Then there was a smash, followed by a succession of shrieks, which soon brought mamma to the scene of disaster, where lay Phemie's lovely little teapot with the forget-me-nots and gold bands, broken in a dozen pieces.

"It was all Cecil's fault, mamma," said Fan; "he was pulling it away from me because I wanted to pour out the tea."

"She wouldn't let Phemie have it, and it's hers," said Cecil.

Phemie could only look down at her broken treasure, and sob, and sob again. Of course there was no party after that; how could there be, with no teapot? Besides, Fanny and Cecil were sent to bed directly after supper, as they had been the chief cause of the trouble.

It took mamma and Nellie a long time to calm and comfort the disconsolate Phemie, for the teapot had been very dear to her heart, and had come all the way from Boston, too. When she was quiet, mamma took her on her knee, and said—

"I think it would have been better to have given up the pouring of the tea for once, seeing that Fannie set the table and buttered the bread, and was so anxious to help you all. I fear you forgot the little verse on your last Sunday's card. Did you not read, 'For even Christ pleased not Himself'? We will ask grandma to try and get another teapot to match the dishes, but I hope you will remember this text whenever you play party again."

"I sink it was a nasty party, mamma, 'tause Cecil didn't say, 'For Desus' sake,'" said little Nellie, with a very serious face.

The child meant that her brother had not asked a blessing, but I could not help thinking how many "palties" had become "nasty," and how many unions had become severed, and how many undertakings had proved disastrous, all on account of the omitted "For Jesus' sake."

"For Jesus' sake," who bore for us
 The ribald railing, and the scorn,
The mocking, and the heavy cross,
 The cruel scourging and the thorn.

"For Jesus' sake" let us forbear
 To frame the bitter thought in speech;
Of passion's shafts let us have care,
 Before their sting the mark can reach.

"For Jesus' sake," let us deny
 The slackened rein to self and sin,
Though for the mastery they cry,
 And clamour long and loud within.

"For Jesus' sake," from day to day,
 Let us our cross in meekness take,
And in submission learn to say,
 With patient lips, "For Jesus' sake."

IT ISN'T FAR TO JESUS.

It isn't far to Jesus:
 If you only knew how near,
You would reach Him in a moment,
 And banish all your fear.

He is standing close beside you,
 If only you could see;
And is saying—could you hear Him—
 "Let the children come to Me."

Don't you know He never changes,
 As your little friends do here?
He is always kind, and ready
 To comfort and to cheer.

And the very best about it is,
 He's always close at hand,
And will always listen to you,
 And always understand.

It matters not how little,
 Or how very young or weak;
And, if you have been sinful,
 It was you He came to seek.

There is nothing that need hinder
 Your coming to Him now;
So you surely will not linger
 Until you older grow.

You really must love Jesus,
 When you think of all his love
In coming down from heaven,
 That happy home above;

And lying in a manger,
 And suffering so much woe,
That you and all dear children
 To that bright world might go.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

I have to thank many of the readers of your valuable Christian for their prayers on behalf of the Lord's work among our railway-men, and not a few for hearty co-operation in making known the Saviour's love to a class whose opportunities are not like those of most people. Over two hundred places are now reached by permanent Missions; but there are hundreds of thousands of men yet untouched. Very few people realise that there are more railway-men in the United Kingdom than there are soldiers, sailors, policemen, and postmen put together, and how much most of us owe to this great multitude?

At Swindon recently a glorious work has been done. There are 7000 railway-men at this place. Night after night, during a fortnight's mission, just concluded, the room has been crowded, and many have been led to Christ. One man, the head of a public-house "sing-song" party, told his mates he had learned a new song and was going to sing it. Another who had twice attempted his life is now rejoicing in the Lord; a ritualist finds "Jesus paid it all;" women and children alike stood up to bear testimony to the Lord having blessed them. A driver said to one, "I'm anxious about my family of eight; I went right off my engine and took them all to the meeting." "My husband is not like the same man," said a woman. This "same man" brought many others, and several were converted. At the last meeting over a thousand persons were packed in the Mechanics' Institute, and several hundred could not get in. It was my privilege to conduct the after-meeting. First, many stood up to bear testimony that they had been blessed during the mission; next, over a score asked prayer for themselves by rising or putting up their hands; and last, but not least, a most gratifying feature of the whole was the way in which Christians of various denominations worked together. Quite three hundred rose in response to a request whether the meetings had been a blessing to them.

The chief instrument of the great blessing given at this mission was one of our lady workers, Miss Doswell, of Weymouth, for whose gentle manner, sweet singing, and intense love for souls we thank God.

This is a sample of what our God is doing on the lines, and it is not too much to ask all your readers to continue to pray for the work of the Railway Mission. It is growing exceedingly, and its needs are manifold. We have recently taken over the responsibilities of the Mildmay Railway work, consequent upon Miss Campbell going to China. Another of our best workers, Miss Ord, of Plymouth, is going there, too.

Urgent requests to start work come to us from every quarter. A friend in Ireland writes:—"There are a number of open doors; do let us enter them." South Africa says:—"Send us a missionary." India says:—"Let us have at least one evangelist for our railway-men," while in the home country I should be thankful to enlist the services of several thousands. Will such write to me? D. Spencer.

PASTOR CHINIQUY.—Writing from St. Anne, Kankakee Co., Illinois, acknowledging donations from our readers for the support of his work, Father Chiniquy says:—By the great mercy of God, these missions among my Roman Catholic countrymen are more and more successful every day. Not less than one hundred new converts have filled our hearts with an unspeakable joy these last six months, by giving up the errors of Rome to accept the Gospel of Christ. The power of Rome is evidently shaken to-day in many places on this continent, and it is my sincere hope that the deadly blows which Dr. McGlynn is now giving to Popery in this country will, by the mercy of God, shake the walls of that modern Babylon all over the world.

MEDICAL MISSIONS IN ROME.

Dear Sir,—It is now rather more than a year since Mr. Wall opened a large hall for evangelistic work in the Prati di Castello, Rome. This new quarter of the city is situated near the Vatican, and was not long since a part of the Campagna Romana, and full of malaria. To render it more healthy, its level has now been raised about ten feet. Several new bridges connect it with the city, and streets, many of them composed of immense palaces, are already built.

These great changes have brought thousands of workmen from many parts of Italy into this quarter. In Rome these men, far away from their homes and families, have no one to care for them. They are oftentimes found sleeping from fifteen to twenty in one room. Their average wages of twelve shillings a week, of which two shillings at least go for their miserable lodgings, are inadequate to feed and clothe themselves, and support their families at home. Hence they are obliged to live on insufficient and unsuitable food, which renders them liable to various diseases. Working, as many of them do, at the foundations of the buildings, in water below the level of the Tiber, or under a blazing sun, with the thermometer oftentimes above a hundred, the daily sick rate is very high. During the summer hundreds have been stricken with fever.

The two Medical Missions which we have in other parts of Rome have been greatly appreciated. Many have availed themselves of the Doctor's advice and medicines and the good nutritious soup which is always provided for the sick ones. At the Medical Mission in Via della Consolazione seventeen fever-stricken workmen presented themselves one morning. We advised their going to a public hospital, seeing they really required rest. They told us this was quite impossible, for if they left their work for more than a few hours together they would be discharged, "and then what would our families do?" added one almost in despair. It was plain to us then what ought to be done. These men, unable to leave their work, too poor to pay for medicines, and no provision made for them by the municipal authorities by which they can obtain them gratis, need some place near their employment where they could be medically and kindly cared for, which would oftentimes help them to escape pernicious fevers which, when not fatal, leave the constitution shattered for life.

It is to give a little timely help, where and when it is most needed, that we have decided to open a Medical Mission in this new quarter, in the assurance that, while thus relieving the body, the highest interests of the soul will be most effectually promoted. The husband far away from his wife, or the boy or girl from home without a helper or a friend, who are cared for in the time of sickness, and helped in Christ's name, will, we believe, more readily believe in Him, as the Good Samaritan healing and binding the wounds of men. Then, returning to their distant homes, healed in body and in soul, they can testify that Jesus the Living Saviour, not only delivers from the pains of hell, but also from the sin and vices of the life that now is.

The hall, in the Prati di Castello, in which Mr. Wall holds evangelistic services, can be used also for this new Medical Mission, and the furnishing has been in part very kindly paid for by the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society. All that we now need to commence our work will be £60 for the doctor and medicines for the first year, and the remainder of the furnishing, which we feel sure our kind friends will not delay in sending us, as they will see the great importance of beginning this Mission as speedily as possible.

Yours in the service of the Master,
35, Piazza in Lucina, Rome. Emily J. Wall.

MR. ANTHONY COMSTOCK, New York, in a work entitled, "Gambling Outrages, or Improving the Breed of Horses at the Expense of Public Morals," has just made a terrible exposure of the wide and disastrous sweep of the race-course gambling.

THE EAST LONDON INSTITUTE.

On Tuesday, October 4, two meetings were held at Harley College, Bow, to commend to God in prayer a party of seventeen missionaries leaving for various parts of the world: China, Jamaica, S. America, the United States, Germany, and elsewhere. The first meeting, at 4 o'clock, was presided over by Sir Robert Phayre. The second meeting was at 7, the president being Rev. H. Grattan Guinness.

The afternoon meeting was well attended, the large hall of the College being filled. Rev. James Stephens, of Highgate, offered prayer, after which Mr. Grattan Guinnes read and commented upon a portion of Phil. iii., remarking that the Apostle Paul, while not doubting the fact of his salvation, did not consider that he had attained the height or reached the standard to which the Lord Jesus Christ desired to lift him. To this height he pressed forward, and urged his fellow Christians to be "like minded," to go on, and to have fellowship with Christ even to the death of the cross.

Sir Robert Phayre said they were all agreed that Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness and their family were employed on the highest work that could engage the Christian mind and heart, and that to them should be accorded the fullest sympathy and support. With regard to the brethren and sisters going out, he was sure the meeting would pray that the Lord would go with them, that they might be men and women of one faith, pressing forward with one object in view—the salvation of souls and fidelity to Christ. Paul was moved by such a spirit of undying love that it constrained him in whatever he undertook. Speaking from an experience of forty-three years with missions and missionaries, he could testify to the fact that such a spirit was still displayed by devoted men and women among the heathen to-day. The more missionaries live up to the ideal of the Apostle Paul, as revealed in Phil. iii., the more influence they would exercise among the heathen, from the highest to the lowest.

Mr. William Rattray, head master at the Derbyshire branch of the Institute, who has devoted the summer vacation to visiting former students of the College now located in various parts of the United States and Canada, gave a résumé of his journeyings. At each of the settlements, from Boston to Chicago, he received from the men a most hearty welcome, and found them all faithful in their work, and doing good service for the Master. He found them grateful, too, for the training they had received in old England, and desirous of helping the College as far as they possibly could.

Of each one of the men he had asked these questions:—(1) As far as your knowledge goes of your country what need is there of more labourers? The answer has been, Oh, there is much need for more labourers; we cannot do the work. (2) How should they best begin the work? Let them get connected with some organisation. If they go unconnected they have to spend a great amount of labour in vain, and get disheartened; but if they are connected with some church or congregation they get their foot down firmly and soon get good results from their work. (3) In the case of young men going out, what are the essentials? By all means, good health and strength. (4) Will that do? No; they want spiritual life abundantly, and power to work hard and endure. If they have not that, they need not come out. If they have, let them come by all means, but let them get all the education they can before they start. Men going out should be rich in Bible knowledge, strong in spiritual life, and with an unfailing and unfaltering desire to have the Lord's work well done.

Mr. Rattray also questioned a number of American farmers as to how many of their sons went into the University, the reply being invariably "they all 'go West'"—to take new land, to make new fortunes; they go—not as the old Pilgrim Fathers to get a home where they might worship God—but where they might make money. Hence it is necessary to send men with the Gospel to that country. That was the opinion of those well acquainted with the subject. Mr. Rattray closed with an earnest appeal (1) to the men present to be faithful to Christ and to the Scriptures, and (2) to Christians staying at home, who ought, he urged, to devote the whole, and not even the "tenth" of their means to the extension of Christ's kingdom, when men were found to give up themselves and all they have to the work.

Mr. Guinness reminded them all that Mr. Rattray had been speaking of only a few of the men who had gone forth from the Institute, out of about a total of some five hundred, of whose work it would be impossible to tell in the course of a single meeting. He desired prayer for the seventeen missionaries now going forth in addition to that number.

In the evening addresses were delivered by several of the brethren going out, much interest being manifested in the various records as to how the Lord had called and guided his servants up to the moment of going forth to the mission field. The following is a list of the brethren and sisters on behalf of whom the meetings were held, and the spheres to which they are going:—Messrs. C. J. I'anson, Redfern, R. Wellwood, A. Bland, F. Poole, B. Pirie, and Miss Ramsay, to China; Mr. G. Graham, Argentine Republic; Mr. F. Holmes, Brazil; Mr. E. Walters, Jamaica; Mr. A. Miles, Illinois, U.S.A.; Mr. H. Johnson, Wisconsin, U.S.A.; Mr. S. Bill, Calabar; Mr. D. Robertson, Lake Nyassa; Mr. T. Harrison, and Mr. A. Stephenson, Home work; Miss Edith Fooks, Germany.

Two other missionaries, Mr. Otto Schmidt, for Germany, and Miss Milne, for China, left about a month ago. The sixteenth year of the Institute commenced on the first of October. Two colleges for men and one for women are connected with it, as well as several mission halls and centres.

SAILORS' HOME, CONSTANTINOPLE.

The friends and supporters of Miss Maria A. West, who for so many years laboured amongst soldiers and sailors in the East, will hear with deep regret that, on account of failing strength, she has left Constantinople, and returned to the United States, to end her days in her native land. She writes:—

"I beg the prayers of the many Christian friends in Great Britain who have so lovingly ministered to my needs in my various visits when broken down by over strain of nerves and much labour, and who have so generously aided me in my work. I cannot express my grateful appreciation of kindness received at the hands of many of God's dear children in England and Scotland. But I can never forget it. To me it has been simply the gracious fulfilment of our kind Master's words to those who have left all to follow Him in service for souls in foreign lands. And I can testify that I have received a 'hundredfold of fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, houses and lands,' and am richer for all eternity in these God-given friends, perhaps nearer of kin than even by the ties of birth."

Miss West's address, for the present is, care of Rev. Wm. Kincaid, Bible House, New York, U.S.A.

STOWMARKET.—The annual meeting in connection with the Working Men's Prayer-meeting here was held on Monday last, when nearly 150 men sat down to tea, after which a meeting was held in the school-room connected with the church, which was well filled. The enthusiasm of the members knows no bounds; always are they with hearts aglow ready to seek the unsaved ones, and many have cause to rejoice for having first realised the joy of a cleansed heart at the Stowmarket men's meetings. The members are doing their best to spread the glorious news of salvation by going out into the surrounding villages, and there holding services which are owned by God to the salvation of souls. On some Sundays the men go out in groups and preach the Gospel, sinners often being converted. Rev. Luther W. Caws paid a high tribute to the power of the men's meetings, and only wished similar meetings were held in connection with all the churches. Other addresses were also given.

THE CLIFTON CONFERENCE.

The subject of the twenty-fifth annual Conference, held last week, was "The Pastoral Offices of Christ." On Tuesday morning there was a good attendance. Rev. J. Ormiston, convener, having spoken some words of hearty greeting, Rev. Talbot A. L. Greaves, vicar of Clifton, opened the first topic, "Christ the Good Shepherd" in his Vicarious Death. In the course of his address he quoted a striking passage from the martyred Bishop Hooper, to the effect that it was "an abomination that any Bishop of Rome, Jerusalem, Antioch, or elsewhere, should claim to be Christ's vicar. "If godly Moses," said the intrepid Bishop, "and his brother Aaron never claimed this title on earth, doubtless it was a foul and detestable arrogance that the ungodly Bishops of Rome attribute unto themselves to be head of Christ's Church."

Rev. E. Thwaites showed that it was the work of the devil to destroy, and if possible to deceive even the elect. Four classes of shepherds were referred to by the Lord in John x., three false, only one true. The hireling shepherd, the stranger shepherd, the robber shepherd. Then, there is the Good Shepherd who gave his life for the sheep, and who died that men might have eternal life. At the close of an address by Rev. R. Noyes, Mr. Ormiston asked prayer for Mr. Whitfield, of Hastings, who by illness was hindered from attending the Conference. He also referred in touching terms to the memoir of the late Mr. Barnes, which his dear widow had written.

In the evening there was a large attendance, and Mr. Ormiston opened by reading and expounding the parable of the lost sheep. Mr. J. Stancomb (Yeovil) quoted Ezekiel's stern words, "Son of man, prophesy against the shepherds of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God unto the shepherds, Woe be to the shepherds of Israel, that do feed themselves! Should not the shepherds feed the flocks?" He insisted on the importance of the truth being recognised and proclaimed that it is on the ground of the blood on the mercyseat that the Gospel of peace comes to men. God has made peace by the blood of the cross, and is preaching peace through it. Christ's sheep, he said further, are delivered not only from the penalty but from the power of sin. Rev. F. Bishop (Hot Wells) said that gladness, joy, and delight, are the things suggested by the precious title of Shepherd. The gladness and delight are in the heart of the Great Shepherd Himself. But what has He in us? In Psalm xxiii. there is the joy of the sheep in the Shepherd; in Luke xv. we have the joy and gladness and delight of the Great Shepherd Himself. In Zephaniah we are told, "I will joy over you with singing." Think of God Himself singing! We are never told that the angels sing; but the redeemed will sing, and the Lord Himself begins the song by singing over his chosen ones.

Bishop Gregg followed with an address upon John x. 16, "And other sheep I have which are not of this fold." Several thoughts were well brought out: the absolute security of the sheep, the necessity for sacrifice, and the unity of the flock that has been attracted by the Shepherd's grace.

WEDNESDAY.

Mr. J. Penstone spoke upon the topic for the day, "The Great Shepherd of the sheep in his Triumphant Resurrection." The Lord Jesus, he said, is represented from the beginning to the end as the Lamb. It is a type and character so lovely in the sight of God that He never lets it go. Rev. W. Elliott, who had left a sick-room in order to attend the Conference, in speaking of the passage "There is one body, one Spirit, one God and Father of all," said it did not say anything about the corporate unity of Christendom. It sets forth that the love, the union exists as a fact. It was one twenty-five years ago when their dear brother, Mr. Walker, founded this Conference, and it is one to-day. The unity is brought about by Christ when He brings us into living union with Himself.

In the evening Mr. James Wright delivered a most important address upon two aspects of the Great Shepherd—his "Moral Greatness," and his "Operative Greatness," suggested by the words of David: "Thy servant kept his father's sheep." In the words we seem to catch a hint of the Coming One. He dwelt, in very comforting words, upon the perfect individual care of the Great Shepherd.

Rev. J. Martin spoke of the covenant, the great pivot on which the whole work turns. Rev. W. Saunders spoke upon the passage: "Now the God of peace who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, through the blood of the everlasting covenant." He dwelt upon the provision of the covenant made before all time with the Son. Rev. Thomas Davis and W. Frith also spoke.

THURSDAY.

On Thursday morning the topic was "Christ the Chief Shepherd, at his Second Appearing," and this was introduced by Colonel Molesworth, who insisted that all human fancies and conceptions about God apart from the Atonement are idolatrous. The Resurrection he regarded as God's receipt testifying that the Lord has finished his work—a sign that it has been perfectly done, and by it Christ is declared to be the Son of God with power. "Thy kingdom come" is the prayer of his disciples who work for his appearing to initiate this kingdom. We look for Him, for when He appears our hearts will be content, but not till then.

Rev. W. Johnson (Portsmouth), and Mr. Bailey (both blind), expressed their grateful recognition of the stimulus they had received at the Conference.

Rev. J. Ormiston, in some closing words, thanked all friends for the manner in which they had strengthened his hands throughout the gathering.

In the evening there was a special service and Lord's Supper at the Memorial Church, and the sermon was preached by Rev. Talbot Graves, vicar of Clifton.

AFTERNOON MEETINGS.

A glance must be taken at two or three of these, which were under the superintendence of Mr. Benjamin Thomas.

The Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society was well represented by Mr. W. Martin and Mr. J. E. Hazelton, Secretary, from London. The former gave an interesting sketch of the Society's rise and progress. The number of pensioners has gone on increasing, so that at the present time there are no less than 1109 of the Lord's aged poor who are the recipients of the help of the Society, amounting to upwards of £7000 per annum. Mr. Hazelton and Rev. W. Saunders also supported the Society's claims.

Mr. F. Selim Zaytoon (from Syria) spoke of Christian efforts in the Lebanon, where the Druse people number 150,000; also in Bashan, Damascus, in the mountains near Alleppo, and in the South, at Mount Carmel. He has been four years in the Edinburgh University, and speaks English fluently. He hopes to go out next year to establish a medical mission among his own people, and is anxious to gain the sympathy of friends to enable him to carry the Gospel to them. He said they were quite ready to receive it.

Mrs. Finn had a most attentive audience as she told the story of persecuted Jews in recent times. It is the desire of the Society in which she is interested that the plot of ground purchased some years ago near Jerusalem, in order to furnish a day's work for a poor Jew, should be turned to the best account. For a long time English Christians did not take any interest in the matter, but now, she says, the work has been resumed. The ground is not large enough for a great farm, but quite large enough to furnish employment and industries of different kinds. Another plan proposed for the relief of the Jews is to enable them to go to the colonies to join their brethren who have gone out, or to purchase some of the tracts of ground now offered to them, so that they may be able to form a colony. Mrs. Finn pathetically described the sufferings of Jews in Russia.

THE STRANGERS' REST.

At the monthly meeting of the workers at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff-highway, on Friday last, Mr. Isaac, secretary, said he had received a letter from a missionary in China, who formerly laboured for several years at the Rest; the writer characterised the institution as a grand training college for the foreign field. The work among the rough lads, which had been suspended for a time, is about to be resumed. More workers are needed for this department, which bids fair to be most successful.

"Our sources of strength" formed the subject of a thoughtful and impressive address by Rev. G. A. Bennett, Wesleyan minister, Mildmay-park. The fountain-head of our strength as Christian workers is the Lord Himself, and the Church is only mighty as it continues to be the organ of Christ's life in the world. To be successful workers, we must banish self; we must realise the presence of the personal, living Christ. One great defect, remarked Mr. Bennett, of the work of the Church at the present moment is the lack of prayer. Until the Church of Christ becomes a truly praying Church the world will never be conquered.

MR. WOOKEY AT GIBRALTAR.

The thirteen days' mission to men held at the new Soldiers' Institute was brought to a close on the 1st inst. The Institute mission-hall was filled night after night by soldiers only, and not only was the subject of Purity faithfully dealt with, and the sins of impurity scathingly denounced, but the Gospel remedy was also lovingly and faithfully set forth. Men who had not before ventured inside the building came night after night, and remained with us to pray. I have seldom seen soldiers so evidently held under the power of conviction as during this mission. Mr. Wookey's book to "Men Only," so well adapted to this class of men, had prepared the way by free distribution, and not a few came to hear the man who had unearthed the secrets of their lives.

Such a mission was much needed here, as the Rock abounds with impurity, and before Mr. Wookey's departure a meeting was held at the Institute to form a committee, comprising ministers of each denomination, for the furtherance of the cause in the garrison. By permission of the senior chaplain, Mr. Wookey addressed the patients in the Military Hospital on the Sunday morning, and from the rapt attention of all we feel sure the seed fell into good ground. We ask the prayers of your readers for this place where iniquity still abounds.

Whilst writing, I should like to thank those kind friends who, in answer to an appeal in The Christian some time ago, have sent lavender bags with texts attached for the hospital patients, and to assure them that their labour has not been in vain. These little bags have been treasured by many a poor fellow, and when unable to speak the upturned eye and faint smile have testified the recipients gratitude; while others have expressed their heartfelt thanks for the attention thus shown to them.

George Holmes.

Soldiers' Institute, Gibraltar.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH.—A letter has just been received from Mrs. Smith, dated Old Calabar, saying she had been detained there by ill health, but expected to leave by next steamer for Cape Palmas, where Mr. Pratt, Bishop Taylor's agent, would take charge of her letters.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. Robert Tuck, of the Sunday-school Union.

The eagerly anticipated biography of the late Dr. Morley Punshon, by Rev. F. W. Macdonald, of Birmingham, is now published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, and is in every way worthy of the man, and the prominent place he filled in the Wesleyan Church. In an early issue we hope to give a portrait of Dr. Punshon, and a sketch of his life, as given in this deeply interesting volume.

We had a visit last week from our energetic and whole-souled friend, Mr. J. S. Smithson, late of Dublin, now resident in the United States. For some time he has taken up his abode in Norfolk, Virginia, in order to do something towards the evangelisation of the large coloured population of that region. The details he gave us of progress made in this direction were deeply encouraging, speaking comparatively. Mr. Smithson is very anxious, however, to increase the scope of the work, and one object he has in view during his present visit to Great Britain is to secure the co-operation of some Christian workers from this country.

More doleful even than the account that Mr. Smithson gave us of spiritual destitution among the Southern blacks, was his statement as to the attitude towards them of the white population. It appears to be one not simply of indifference (which would be culpable enough), but of positive hostility, as far as the advancement of their true interest, is concerned. The negroes are boycotted socially, while religiously they are left to their own scanty resources. Many of the coloured pastors are men of no intellectual gifts and poor spiritual fibre, but they are anxiously longing for help and guidance in their time of tutelage. It seems to us a crying disgrace, and a serious reflection on the Christianity of the white Southerners, that this help is withheld.

Mr. F. N. Charrington and Mr. Kerwin are manfully waging a war of extermination against the dens of infamy and social pestilence, with which the East of London has long been afflicted. The best proof of their success is to be found in the fact that the professional bullies and publicans, whose craft and calling are being seriously imperilled, have adopted an attitude of determined hostility towards our brave reforming friends, and they are under police protection. We are glad to note that other Christian workers in the East are being encouraged by the example of Messrs. Charrington and Kerwin in the effort to cleanse the centres of corruption in their own localities.

It ought to be known everywhere that under the recent Criminal Law Amendment Act, the work of closing notorious houses of ill-fame is comparatively easy; and its provisions are so comprehensive, that the keepers, tenants, and landlords of these houses are alike amenable to punishment. It therefore now rests with the dwellers in any neighbourhood, whether or not these places shall be permitted to carry on their nefarious trade.

The Committee that conduct the religious services on Sundays in theatres and halls have commenced their twenty-ninth winter course. Past experience as to the spiritual success of this effort would indicate that it ought to have a large extension, and nothing, we believe, hinders this but the lack of public support. Many places of amusement are such centres of evil during the week that it would be some small set-off if, on the Lord's Day, they could all be made a blessing instead of a bane.

Reviewing a new book by the author of "The Gates Ajar," The New York Evangelist has the following:—

> It seems to us a pitiful and injurious attempt of the imagination to supplement Revelation. It is tinged with the vagaries of Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism, and draws its materials from what Prof. Bowne has called a "well of omniscience undefiled," which the New Theology has substituted for Scripture. There is now quite a literature of the "Gates" order, and a good deal of manufactured information has been given a credulous public in regard to disembodied souls. Alas! there is a market for it even among professing Christians: for it is one of the marks of an unspiritual mind to be curious about a second probation while careless of the conditions of a first.

"The Guardians of Headington, in Oxfordshire, appear to be a nice, tender-hearted set of gentlemen. A man having gone to America, leaving his wife and family chargeable to the parish, his two children were placed by the Guardians in the industrial school. Shortly afterwards the father forwarded from America the passage money for the children, and requested that they might be sent out to him. Will it be believed that the Guardians packed the children off to America without consulting the mother? The woman actually visited her children two days before they left, and was never told that they were going. Will the day ever come (asks Truth) when Boards of Guardians will consider people in receipt of parish relief to be within the pale of humanity?"

The same paper notes the following case of parochial tyranny, as one of exceptional atrocity, and adds:—"It is horrible that such brutalities should be permitted to pass without rebuke and correction by the personages 'of light and leading' in the locality."

> A hard case is reported from a village near Devizes. An old man, over eighty years of age, has just died, leaving a widow, with whom he had lived for sixty-four years. Within an hour after the remains of her husband were taken away to be buried, the poor old woman, who is on the verge of ninety, was hustled away to the workhouse, to spend her few remaining days.

At Perth, Sheriff Graham convicted Mrs. Mackay, of Union-street, Blairgowrie, of having sold two tobacco pipes and two boxes of matches on Sunday, August 14; and Mrs. Mackay was sentenced to pay a fine and costs amounting to £2 16s. 4d., the alternative being a month's hard labour in the gaol at Perth. It is very questionable if this is the right way to promote Sabbath-keeping. But if the fine and costs are not an insufficient penalty, what shall be said of the savage alternative of a month's hard labour in prison? The fine would be as nothing compared to the imprisonment. The whole system of giving the option of fine or imprisonment is unjust, and should be abolished. If a fine is a fitting penalty, fine them; if imprisonment, imprison them. The present method is a gross injustice to the poor, and a mere farce as regards the rich.

All who are interested in the progress of medical missions in India should read an article in the current issue of Medical Missions at Home and Abroad, by Dr. Maxwell, in which he frames a severe impeachment of the basis on which Lady Dufferin's scheme for promoting medical tuition and relief among Indian women is founded. We recently animadverted on the requirement of silence with regard to Christian testimony imposed on women nurses, and Dr. Maxwell's clearly expressed paper fortifies the position we took.

An esteemed correspondent and worker amongst sailors writes to us concerning a case of religious intolerance on board a British man-of-war. The boatswain, a godly man, who had been blessed to the conversion of several shipmates, obtained leave from the chief officer for the little band of converts to meet together for mutual edification. The chaplain, however, put his veto upon this, explaining that "it was baptism which saved men, and he would not allow anyone to preach a lot of heresies on board." Our correspondent fears there are many such chaplains in our navy. Seeing how great are the temptations to which sailors are exposed, and how few comparatively amongst them care for the things of God, it is painful to find any desire on the part of Christian seamen to worship God, and to lead their fellows to the Saviour, interfered with by those appointed to guide them in the way of life.

An ounce of fact is worth a pound of theory. A practical illustration of the evil results of the Sunday opening of museums and art galleries is afforded by what is happening in Australia. In that colony, we learn from a published letter received by the Secretary of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, the legalising by the House of Assembly of the Sunday opening of these pleasure resorts has proved the signal for gradual further inroads upon the Sunday rest. The Sydney Morning Herald announces a music hall, two theatres, an opera-house, and an aquarium, as being all open on Sundays from 11 a.m. to 10 p m. Let us be warned in time.

The report of the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police for 1886, which has been published, gives some very gratifying statistics respecting the number of persons apprehended for drunkenness and the proportion per thousand each year from 1831 to 1886. It appears from the report that the arrests in 1831 were 20·574 per 1000, and in 1886 only 4·589. Dr. Burns, of the United Kingdom Alliance, points out in a letter to The Times, that some allowance must be made for the change of instructions given to the police as to the arrest of the intoxicated. Fifty years ago the custom was to arrest every disorderly drunkard, but at the present day, unless they are very uproarious, or absolutely incapable of motion, and without friends to take charge of them, they are not interfered with. Still, even after making every allowance for this change of tactics, the difference in the statistics is so great that we are quite justified in deducing from them a very satisfactory decrease in the addiction to this degrading vice, especially as it is fully corroborated by statistics of the sale and consumption of liquor. Such facts should go far to encourage the advocates of temperance to persevere in their noble efforts for the emancipation of mankind from the tyranny of this curse of our modern civilisation.

The proceedings at the recent meeting of the Synod of the Waldensian Church show that there is no falling off in the energy of this old Christian communion, and the ordination of young pastors who are the fruit of the mission work in Italy, with the admission of lay members representing the same work, formed an especially interesting episode. It is to be regretted, however, that it was not found possible to agree to union with Chiesa Libera (the Free Church of Italy), and we trust that the negotiations which have for some time been proceeding will not be abandoned.

The action of the Spanish authorities in regard to the Caroline Islands seems to be based upon a desire to suppress or to root out the Protestant missions. Already, by the order of the Government, a number of Protestant schools and churches have been closed, and native preachers and American missionaries fined and imprisoned. It is stated that so sharp and severe has the unworthy action been, that "thirty years' evangelistic labour has been destroyed." The American Government, however, is not likely to allow the matter to rest as it is, and has already made a protest against the treatment of the missionaries and the appropriation of their land; and it may be that the result will be a further opening of the islands to missionary effort and the influences of the Gospel.

Mr. Moody recently had something to say in regard to the "pew system" and the selfishness frequently shown by pew owners with respect to strangers who require seats occasionally. He said, amongst other wise things:—

> If you can't have free pews, then let us come to a compromise—let us have them free every Sunday night. Let the strangers have the best seats then. Let it be well advertised, and make the people welcome when they come. If you do this you will soon have all the non-church-goers you can do with.

The experiment is worth trying, and we trust that the suggession will soon be widely adopted. Rev. J. Ossian Davies, at New Court Chapel, has followed the example of Mr. Spurgeon in having periodically "a Strangers' Service," at which all pewholders vacate their seats.

It is stated that the alphabet which has been constructed for the use of the blind in China is the work of Rev. W. H. Murray who was formerly a letter carrier in Glasgow and was sent out to China sixteen years ago. Mr. Murray, it appears, has succeeded in reducing the 4000 sounds of the language, and his alphabet contains only 420 representative letters. As there are upwards of 800,000 blind persons in China this is almost like opening a new continent to the Scriptures, portions of which have already been produced in raised characters.

Preaching in the Franciscan Church, Dublin, a week ago, Father Cassidy ventured to speak some plain truths to his congregation, and at the conclusion of his sermon said he was assured that if St. Francis were in Ireland all that they would hear from his lips throughout the length and breadth of the land would be, "avoid drink, for it is Ireland's curse" and "a curse which has accumulated more evils on the Irish race than all other evils, social or political." In the face of the growing Irish Drink Bill these words deserve wide circulation.

The Church of England is rapidly and practically recognising the value of lay help, not merely in the form of the "Church Army," but in isolated districts; and a recent leader in The Church Times gives expression to a widely-spread feeling that perhaps it is not so much in the direction of an increase in the Episcopate, as in a greatly increased number of lay evangelists and readers, that development must proceed. Our contemporary says:—

> Hundreds of laymen are, at any rate, preaching in wayside and moorland Bethels every Sunday in the year, and many of them are able to retain as large a congregation as the curate of the parish can in the church. If Dissent can produce such men, why does not the Church? The fault, if fault there be, is in our want of faith in the power of a spiritual man.

Any arrangement that would result in the Gospel being taken into our scattered hamlets is to be welcomed, and we trust that another band of evangelists may soon be sent forth to preach Christ in the districts which at present are shut out from regular ministrations.

An interesting story is told of the late Princess Alice in a recent volume from the pen of Rev. F. Arnold. It appears that when the Princess visited the Penitents' Home in Brighton, founded by Rev. Geo. Wagner, she objected to the word "penitent" being applied specially to a certain class of people. "We are all penitents," she said; "clap a label on my back—I, too, am a penitent!" The institution was afterwards, at the wish of the Princess, changed to the Albion Hill Home.

Mr. Denham Smith has shown slight but definite signs of returning strength during the past week, although the attacks of deep prostration and alarming failure of circulation which have throughout characterised his illness, return from time to time with unabated vigour, thus rendering his condition still one of extreme anxiety to his family and those who love him, and make them hesitate to indulge their flickering hopes.

It was a bold step on the part of the organisers of the Church Congress which has just closed at Wolverhampton to invite Mr. H. H. Champion to read a paper on Socialism. But we think that it cannot be productive of anything but good. It is better for Christian people to meet face to face so important a fact as Socialism while there is yet time. The ostrich policy is never wise.

We fancy, however, that Mr. Champion will have carried away some useful information. Though he spoke with much truth of the terrible state of the poor, and contrasted the luxuries of the rich, he can hardly have failed to learn something of the lesson afterwards given to him that, after all said and done, such alleviations of the sufferings of the poor as have taken place have been made not by Socialists, but by godly Christians. While Socialists talk, and would, if successful, only make the miseries of the poor worse, godly men such as the late Earl of Shaftesbury, Mr. Samuel Morley, and countless others, have been toiling, and toiling successfully, to alter the laws, or to provide means of emigration or of physical improvement. The fact is that Christ's object in coming into the world was to save men's bodies as well as their souls, and that it is seldom that others than truly Christian men have realised this side of his teaching.

In his paper on "The Priesthood of the Laity," read at the Church Congress, the Bishop of Ossory touched upon the prevalent mistake that charity may be compounded for by pecuniary payments:—

> We give, it may be, the guinea a year (the rate of subscription received by vain tradition from our fathers) to a hospital, an orphanage, or a mission; but do we visit the fatherless and widow in their affliction? Do we pass by some sick or bedridden neighbour to whom a kindly visit would be more than all our gold? Do we leave the words of light and life unsaid when God has put the opportunity in our way? And do we think that we can compensate for these omissions by pounds, shillings, and pence? Better far the poorest man who can say, "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee," than he who, having time, or sympathy, or knowledge, or influence at his command, hides his talents in the earth, and thinks that a small income-tax upon each will satisfy the Master who entrusted them to his care.

This touches all the trusts placed in our hands, and opens up a wide field for self-examination in regard to our undischarged responsibilities.

Amongst the multitude of "Harvest Thanksgivings" few, perhaps, are turned to more practical account than in the plan adopted by Mr. Robert Adcock, of the Victoria Hall Mission, Norwich, who writes:—

> We have a harvest thanksgiving service, commencing with a public tea, which is followed by a "missionary meeting," at which our friends are asked to help by their thankofferings some branch of work in God's great vineyard. In 1885 it was our privilege thus to have fellowship with the workers at the Strangers' Rest; last year dear George Holland brought us in touch with his Christlike labours in Whitechapel and on Monday last we had the joy of according a hearty welcome to Mr. E. H. Glenny, who advocated the claims of the mission to the Kabyles and other Berber tribes of North Africa. The hall was crowded, and the audience most sympathetic. Mr. Glenny addressed a meeting in the afternoon of the same day, under the presidency of Rev. Canon Ripley, in the parlour of the Y.M.C.A.

This is a method of extending interest in the Lord's work at home and abroad well worthy of imitation.

Under the presidency of its genial and incisive convener, Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites, the Conference at Salisbury this year was as bright and cheery in manner, and as definite in matter, as ever. We regret that we have not space for a detailed report.

GIPSY AND VAN CHILDREN.—Mr. George Smith, of Coalville, was among the gipsy and van children late and early at the Nottingham Goose Fair last week. At a breakfast given to some van and show boys at the Gordon Boys' Home, Mr. Smith explained the objects of the Bill he is promoting for their welfare.

MELBOURNE Y.M.C.A.—The sixteenth anniversary was recently held in the Town Hall, about a thousand persons being present at the tea, and large numbers coming in to the public meeting. Bishop Goe was amongst the speakers, and the essentially Christian and missionary character of the Association was strongly enforced in all the addresses. During the past year the various meetings of the Association showed aggregate attendances of about 120,000 persons, of whom 80,000 were young men. Immediate steps are to be taken for enlargement, the ordinary operations being greatly crippled for want of room.

August, 1887. W. A. Southwell, Gen. Sec.

MADAGASCAR.—The Prime Minister in Madagascar, replying to a letter from the Directors of the London Missionary Society, stated that he was authorised by the Queen to say that she and her Government regard with the most complete satisfaction the education and other work carried on by the missionaries of the Society (about thirty) to the great advantage of Her Majesty's people, and that she is greatly rejoiced to hear that this is to be continued.

THE DEEP THINGS OF GOD.

ADDRESS TO YOUNG MEN,

By Sir ANRDEW CLARK, M.D.

The good friends who superintend the Y.M.C.A. at Aldersgate-street are evidently of the opinion that there is a good deal of "honest doubt" among those who make up their constituency. They have projected a series of "friendly talks" for successive Friday evenings, so that these difficulties on religious matters may be met and, if possible, removed. Beginning at the very beginning, the first talk last week, by the eminent West-end physician, Sir Andrew Clark, was on "The Question of Life: is it matter or God?" There was a good muster of men, more or less young, and it is no exaggeration to say that their attention and interest were enthralled from the first word to the last of the lecturer's remarks. This was, perhaps, all the more remarkable, as the subject itself is one of the most profound, and Sir Andrew's treatment of it was, perforce, of a highly argumentative and metaphysical description. Some hearer might have thought it rather a risky thing to confess, as the lecturer did at the outset, that he had given no special thought to what he should say; but any feeling of this kind must have vanished long before he had done. He said he came with a splitting headache, and only intended to open up the topic in a ten minutes' talk. Instead of that he spoke well on to an hour, and then seemed as fresh and full of matter as when he began. He moved through his subject with the majestic familiarity of a man who has made it a life-long study, and has explored it in every nook and corner.

Every man, said Sir Andrew, consciously or unconsciously, has formed some opinion as to what life is, and it is therefore a matter of supreme importance that this opinion should be well founded. On this will depend how his life, in its practical outcome, is shaped and guided. In a preliminary word or two, he said these discussions ought to be conducted, between believers and unbelievers, on terms of mutual respect. It is too much the fashion for those who believe in theistic and Christian doctrine to look on those who differ from them as necessarily wicked. This is contrary to that loving and charitable spirit which is of the very essence of Christianity. Besides, it is not true to fact; there are many who long to know the truth, and earnestly seek it, but have not, for the time at least, been able to find it. On the other hand, unbelievers are too fond of "calling names," in dealing with those who accept the Christian revelation.

Coming closer to the subject of life and what it is, Sir Andrew said that to understand it at all we must postulate the threefold constitution of our being. We have life in common with the plant; we have mind in common with the lower animal; and we have spirit in common with God. The perfect development of the man requires a harmonious adjustment of these three parts of our being. If one is developed to excess it is done at the expense of the other. Too much bodily development produces sensuality; misdirected mental development lands us in rationalism or scepticism; while over development of the spirit ends in mysticism. Here there comes the great mystery of the freedom of the human will, which differentiates man from all other living beings. There have been endless discussions about freewill, but it may be accepted as a settled fact in human consciousness. Then there is another undoubted fact of our constitution—the power of distinguishing between right and wrong. Then it is important to note another axiomatic truth, as to the mode in which we can know anything. We cannot really know anything as it is in itself; we only know it from the impression made upon us. Expanding this thought, the speaker argued that we can know God just as well as we can know man. As to the origin of life, Sir Andrew went on to say that the great majority of thinkers whose words are worth listening to are agreed that behind this universe there is an awful "force," which manifests itself. Some "scientists," so called, entitle it "the supreme cause," but do not call it a being. On the other hand, Christian believers transfigure "force" into "Father." If we study this "force" in its manifestations in the universe and in ourselves, we can come to a knowledge of it just in the same way, or at least in the same measure, as we can know matter or can know ourselves. Christian believers further aver that in addition to the mere knowledge of this "force," which they call "God" and "Father," if we place ourselves in a certain relationship to it we begin to find a new order of phenomena quite different from and far above the ordinary causal phenomena. As to our apprehension of the mysteries concerning God, ourselves, and the world in which we live, we are much influenced by the atmosphere in which we have been brought up and in which we move. Some young men grow up in families where these questions are not considered at all; some in families where they are not accepted; and some in Christian families where the desires after such knowledge are gratified as far as they can be gratified. Most greatly to be pitied is the youth who grows up in surroundings where unbelief is prevalent. The two prevailing root theories of the universe are the materialistic and the theistic. The former theory, with its blank negation of God, of soul, of right or wrong, of vice or virtue, and its consequent denial of rewards and punishments, was vividly contrasted with the Christian conception of God and the universe, and the responsibility which attaches to man for the course he takes and the life he lives. While admitting that there are some unbelieving men who live very respectable and moral lives, Sir Andrew argued that the inevitable outcome of a purely materialistic belief as regards the masses of men is, and always has been, a most disastrous one, morally considered. The whole tendency, he asserted, of modern physical research is to show that the materialistic theory is untenable. We are, therefore, shut up by the constitution of our being, and by all the lessons of the past, to the theory which recognises the great force behind the universe, and which looks on that force as the intelligent being whom we call God. Again he reiterated the truth that the Christian believer is one who not only, by the force of reasoning, but by actual personal experiment, comes to believe in God, and knows Him, as a Creator, a Father, and a Saviour.

Sir Andrew must have convinced his audience by his address or he must have been speaking to those already convinced, for the after discussion did not reveal more than one questioner who spoke from the standpoint of agnosticism or unbelief. The points he advanced, moreover, did not at all go to the root of the discussion, though the lecturer gave him a very patient hearing, and replied to his queries with crushing force. The hearty thanks of the meeting given to Sir Andrew were well earned. We only wish that all our Christian advocates and apologists could speak from the same fulness of knowledge and in the same spirit of true Christian humility and sympathy.

THE PROPORTIONATE GIVING UNION is an Association recently formed for uniting those persons who approve of the practice of proportionate giving. For the present Rev. E. A. Watkins, Vicar of Ubbeston, Yoxford, Suffolk, is acting as hon. secretary of the movement.

THE WEST CENTRAL MISSION.—Rev. Hugh Price Hughes appeals for the co-operation of all Christians, within reach of St. James's Hall, who are not at present hard at work for Christ, in the forthcoming West-end mission. He says:—"They need not be Methodists. Like John Wesley, we are 'the friends of all, the enemies of none.' We want every kind of help, from distributing hymn-books to delivering short addresses. We also want volunteers for the choir, the orchestral band, and the brass band. We want women as well as men. We want everybody who is not better employed elsewhere." All who think they can in any conceivable way help the good work should write at once to Mr. Hughes, 8, Taviton-street, Gordon-square, W.C.

THE MORNING WATCH.

"Early in the morning will I direct my prayer unto Thee, and will look up."—Ps. v. 3.

Begin each day with God,
Give Him the dawn;
The first fresh rosy hour
Of every morn.

Before your fellow-men
Your face shall see,
Spend a good hour with Christ—
He will meet thee.

Before the things of earth
Thy thoughts engage,
Spread out before thy soul
The Sacred Page.

Get one good heavenly view
From Zion's hill,
Drink "living water" from The Fountain rill.

Eat of the "Bread of life,"
So freely given;
Feed on the "Angels' food,"
"Manna," from Heaven.

Thus, having seen the face
Of God, most High,
You shall go forth prepared
To live—or die!

FRENCH FOREIGN MISSIONS.

M. Jeanmairet writes from Sesheke, a village on the left bank of the Zambesi, a letter dated February last, in which he says that Pastor Coillard and his wife arrived safely at Sefula in January. A hearty welcome had been accorded to them, and a pitso was to be held to present the missionaries officially to the nation. The king had also promised to send a chief to go through the same ceremony at Sesheke. In consequence of long-continued drought the natives were suffering from a terrible famine. This and the roving habits of the people greatly hindered regular Gospel work and the establishing of schools.

At Leribe the young people who at first gave cause for much concern are now the subject of joy and gratitude. Several young women, catechumens, have a weekly meeting for prayer, which has produced much serious impression on some of the pagan women. At Koloyane there were about twenty conversions in two months. The old chief now remains the only pagan of his family, and his conscience is much exercised. "This is a grand answer to our prayers," says M. Weitzecker, a medical missionary.

All South Africa is in a critical, financial position, and the missions suffer pecuniarily from this. At a Conference held in Cana in April, the reports from the surrounding stations were very encouraging.

M. de Pomaret, of Tahiti, accompanied by two deacons, had begun a system of regular visitation of the sick and the unconverted, which had greatly quickened the zeal of the deacons, and been a blessing to many of those visited. But, alas! the demon of drunkenness was seeking to seize his prey.

SHOW PEOPLE AT BREAKFAST.—On Friday last an interesting gathering took place in connection with the Birmingham Fair, when about two hundred of the show people partook of a good breakfast at 7 o'clock in the morning. The caravans were visited, and invitations given the previous day. Alderman W. H. Hart presided, and there were present several local ministers and other gentlemen and ladies. Several addresses were given, and hymns sung, and on leaving each received a Gospel book, a large text card, and a copy of the New Testament. Nearly thirty signed the pledge, and during visits the ladies made to the caravans in the after part of the day, testimony was given that the words spoken were impressed upon many.

AMERICAN MISSION IN EGYPT.

E ask the attention of our readers to the fol- wing statement by Rev. Dr. Lansing. All who ve been in Egypt, and who are capable of dging, will recognise the necessity of coming the help of those who are working so efficiently wards the regeneration of the Egyptian people.

Our United Presbyterian Church, like many the American churches, has of late years been lling back in their support of the foreign mis- on work, so that, at length, they found them- lves encumbered with a debt of £4600 to their issions in Egypt and India. Our Board of issions felt themselves constrained to order us make a reduction of 10 per cent. upon our nnual estimates for the present year. After oing our utmost to obey this order, we still ound that our estimates were £600 above the ppropriation of the Board.

We have, from the first, done what we could make the work of the Lord in Egypt self-sup- orting, and, next to Japan, we think no foreign ission has succeeded so well in this respect. n our seventy-nine mission stations we have ow under our care fifty-three congregational chools, which are entirely supported by the atives. Considerably over two-thirds of the upport of the nine native pastorates, which ave been established in the Valley of the Nile, s now paid by the native churches which these astors serve. This, although these pastors are equired to give fully one-third of their time to vangelistic work in out-stations, outside of their wn charges. £5785 were reported the past year s contributed by the native churches for church nd school purposes. Besides, a good deal was ontributed for church and school building and ther purposes which was not reported.

The policy of retrenchment forced upon us s suicidal, while the Mission demands enlarge- nent instead of retrenchment. The whole ountry is open before us, and as yet, in a great art, the reaping time has not come. It is the owing season. As examples of what the rder for a 10 per cent. reduction has imposed pon us, I may state that in some of our on-self-supporting schools we have so raised he school fees that the number of pupils has een materially diminished, and also that we ave closed several schools, e.g., the Boys' School in Boulak, one of the suburbs of Cairo, n which there were about seventy pupils. To prevent further retrenchment in this disastrous ine, we ask for the £600 mentioned; and should more be raised, it will be used in retracing the etrograde steps which we have been so painfully orced to take, and in the expansion of the work for which there are now so many open doors.

A NOTE OF THANKS.

Sir,—I have just returned from the Protestant valleys of Dauphiny, and I think it due to the kind friends, readers of your journal, who entrusted to me their contributions in aid of the above, to report what I saw. I visitor Pastor Brunel, the successor of Felix Neff, in his parish of Freis- inières. I had the great pleasure of meeting there three of the Nicot orphans, who had come to spend their holidays with the dear old friend of their father. They were all well, and are making good progress with their education. The two other children are also cared for, one with a relative in Geneva, and the infant with a nurse in Guillestre. The help sent from England proved of great value, and Christian friends in France and Switzerland have interested themselves in the cause of the orphans. The widowed mother, alas! remains in a hopeless condition of mental alienation.

The three burnt villages have been restored. I had the satisfaction of seeing two of them, Brunis- ard and Aiguilles, rebuilt in stone, and so less exposed than formerly to the danger of fire. I received an official letter from the Mayor of Aiguilles conveying in the warmest terms the hanks of himself and his community to the Eng- ish friends who had succoured them in their time f need. The aid given has been well applied and ighly appreciated.—I am, yours, &c.,

A MUSICAL OPEN-AIR MEETING.

By GAWIN KIRKHAM.

It was a lovely Sunday morning in September. I was reclining on the beach at Hastings turning over the leaves of my Bible to refresh my memory with some passages for an evening open-air sermon, when my attention was attracted by a group preparing for an open-air service. I noticed there was a harmonium, a violoncello, and two silver cornets, in addition to about twenty singers. Presently a hymn was announced, and as it was sung with the musical accompaniments the beautiful harmony drew the people quickly together. I soon perceived that, excellent as were the musical arrangements, it was no mere performance. An earnest prayer succeeded the two opening hymns, and an earnest Gospel address varied the singing which followed, while another prayer closed the meeting.

I am free to confess that the harmonious blending of vocal and instrumental music was the great attraction, and seemed irresistible to the promenaders. But therein was its advantage. This brief half-hour's meeting was only a preliminary to the usual morning service in a hall not far away, and the audience responded so freely to the invitation to go inside, that it seemed to me the bulk of the people followed to the hall.

When the crowd had dispersed, it occurred to me to see, by way of contrast, whether another crowd would gather to hear the Scriptures read. So I read aloud, carefully, Psalm cvii. But the people did not stop, though I have known a crowd repeatedly gathered in that way. Afterwards, when I began expounding "The Voices of the Sea," they came; but I clearly saw the immense advantage possessed by twenty people with good voices and musical accompaniments over one solitary individual.

As this interesting group had announced another meeting by the Queen's Hotel in the early evening, I went again, and witnessed the same effects as in the morning. The crowd gathered readily, was most orderly, and again the bulk of them went in the direction of the hall for the ordinary evening service. I found afterwards that a Mr. Hermitage, who has both a music warehouse and a musical family of ten children, arranged and conducted these meetings, and that a Sunday rarely passed without conversions as the result of these pleasant labours.

In justice to the Hastings Y.M.C.A., I cheerfully render their secretary, treasurer, and members all honour for a singularly successful open-air campaign, carried on by them during the summer, in which we (Open-Air Mission) have had a share by sending a preacher from London for each Sunday. On this particular Sunday evening we had a fine crowd after the musical party had left. But in an age when people are increasingly difficult to bring under the sound of the Gospel, it does seem to me important that godly people should use their musical gift more freely out of doors, seeing that it is such a charming handmaid to Gospel effort.

NORWOOD CONFERENCE HALL.—This building, which owes its existence to the earnest efforts of Mr. Woodford Fawcett and other active Christian workers in the district, was recently opened. Rev. W. T. Moore preached in the afternoon, and amongst the speakers at the evening meeting were Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, Mr. W. Noble, and other friends of Christian philanthropy. In connection with the Hall is a Servants' Institute, and the work will include Bible-readings, Gospel addresses, Temperance meetings, Bands of Hope, &c. A snug kitchen will also be established in the winter. Mrs. Fawcett in her address spoke of the necessity of those who would be true workers of Christ being full of sympathy towards the suffering and the lost. The building, which, including the fittings, has cost £6230, is at 485A, Norwood-road, with the entrance in Park-villas.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

Dear Sir,—I send you some extracts from a letter of a Christian lady of Amsterdam, who takes a lively interest in the Gospel work in Spain. She writes:—

"We began our rounds of visits at San Sebastian, where I had two children at Mr. Gulick's Missionary Training Home, who are now transferred to Mr. Moore's Institute, at Puerto Santa Maria. From San Sebastian we went to Madrid, to be present at the Synod then assembling, and where I was glad to meet many old friends and some new acquaintances, and to hear the reports of various stations. Then on to Seville, with a most pleasant halt at Utreva, where I wanted to see everything, and get acquainted with the evangelist Calamita. I stayed a night with him and his wife, who were most kind. In the evening we had a very good and well-attended meeting, at the close of which all the men came up to me to shake hands, and the women most cordially to embrace me—it was simply charming, so hearty and real.

"After Utreva (Andalusia) we went to Puerto Sa. Maria, and spent some very pleasant days with Mr. and Mrs. Moore, making excursions to the neighbouring towns of Cadiz and San Fernando, whose pastors I was very glad to see. Dr. Angel Blanco (pastor of San Fernando) is a very living Christian; he told me that Dr. Antonio Carrasco (who perished in the steamship Ville du Havre) had been the means of bringing him to Jesus.

"From thence we went to Malaga, where we stopped about ten days as the guests of Dr. Manuel Carrasco and his wife, but at our mission house, which is very large and comfortable, quite suited to the purpose, containing the chapel, boys' and girls' schools, besides sufficient rooms for the pastor's family, the schoolmaster, and mistress, &c. Carrasco, although not quite so gifted as his brother perhaps, is very talented also, and I trust there is blessing on his work, and God is owning it. The schools and also the Sunday-school are very prosperous.

"There is a congregation on the top of a mountain in the province of Jaen, composed of simple and ignorant people, one of whom had bought a New Testament from a colporteur, had been brought to Christ through its means, and had ever since been evangelising the whole district with so much blessing that the greater part of the population consisted of believers, whose changed lives gave testimony to their faith. These people have not only left off swearing and intemperance, but they have even given up smoking, as an undue indulgence to the flesh, whilst they daily come together for the reading of the Word and prayer."

Ever yours truly, W. G.

MISS ANNIE MACPHERSON, accompanied by a staff of earnest workers, says the Toronto Faithful Witness, has been engaged with her Bible-carriage in evangelistic work on the Toronto Exhibition grounds. The success of this novel plan (in Canada) of distributing the Word of God, and at the same time preaching the Gospel to the crowds assembled, has been attended with great success and blessing; the interest aroused has been so great as to lead the Toronto Christian Institute to decide upon building an evangelistic carriage, to be used in Toronto and vicinity.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—We had the joy this morning of baptizing a carpenter, who was cured of opium-smoking last year. He is the first-fruits of the Opium Refuge established here. There are now twenty-four Christians in communion here. We are praying and looking and working for the salvation of many heathen. Work has been much hindered of late in this province by anti-foreign feeling, &c.; but it is now, with the exception of some places, open again. More workers are needed. We are cheered by reading the reports of the Lord's work at home. May our Master thrust forth quickly many of his servants into the great harvest-field. George Andrew.

Y.W.C.A., IRELAND.

THE fourth annual conference of the Y.W.C.A. was held in Dublin on September 30, when a very large number of members from different parts of Ireland were present, indeed, the meetings were so crowded that it became necessary to engage a second hall, both in the afternoon and evening.

An earnest spirit pervaded all the meetings; devotional exercises occupied the first hour, at which Mrs. F. L. Tottenham presided. She spoke with deep solemnity on walking with God, and its consequences, agreement, communion, humility, and self surrender, resulting in hearing his voice, walking in his light, seeing his beauty, living in his presence, receiving strength in place of weakness, and living his life, till at length, we shall walk with Him in white, and be presented faultless before his presence in glory.

The president, Mrs. Hatt Noble, reminded the members of the claims which the love of God had on them, and how it necessitated the whole life being laid at his feet. She emphasised the words "I have separated you, that ye should be Mine" (Lev. xx. 24—26). Being separated to Him, his servants would be conscious of walking with Him. God longs to employ his children in taking his messages to those who are living in darkness, to give them the power which President Finney calls, "savingly to impress men." Are his children ready and willing to receive this gift, and to do his service?

The morning meeting was occupied in hearing reports read from the various branches, which were most interesting and encouraging.

In the afternoon addresses were given by Mrs. Noble on "The General Condition of the Association in Ireland," which numbers about 10,800 members, in 241 branches; by Mrs. Porter, on "Thoroughness"; Mrs. Jebb, on "Thrift"; Miss Nugent, on "Sympathy"; and Mrs. Noble, on "Young Ladies," making an earnest appeal to them to give their hearts, their time, and their talents to the service of their Lord. Mrs. Tottenham followed up this appeal by showing God's purpose in his people (2 Tim. ii. 21). In close connection with these subjects, came appeals for service among Roman Catholics from Mrs. Smyly, and from Miss Crossle for the Railway Mission, and from Mrs. Barter, for the Mission to the Police. Numerous allusions were made respecting work among the heathen.

In the evening General Noble presided over the meeting, at which Revs. Dr. Marrable, Dunlop, H. Bird, and Mrs. Jebb took part. Earnest evangelistic addresses were delivered by Mr. George Clarke and Mr. R. C. Morgan.

MILDMAY EVANGELICAL TRAINING CLASS.—The first social gathering of the members and friends was held on Tuesday, Sept. 27, at Mildmay-avenue Mission-room. After tea practical addresses were given by Mr. John Girling (of Hackney-road Mission), Mr. Clover and Mr. G. B. Chick, dwelling chiefly on the method and tact needful in speaking to the masses. The class will meet in future at the Cottage Mission, 18, Spencer-road, Stoke Newington, N., every Tuesday evening at 8 p.m. Young men are invited to attend.

SAILORS' WELCOME HOME.—Cheerful testimony to the saving power of Christ was borne at the monthly meeting of the Christian Lifeboat Crew at the Sailors' Welcome Home, Ratcliff-highway, on Tuesday week. Miss Grimston, of the Sailors' Rest, Smyrna, gave an interesting and encouraging account of the good work being accomplished there among the mariners visiting the port. An officer, lately arrived from Adelaide, stated that so many sailors are being converted there that the public-houses are almost empty at times. The sailors as a class are becoming soberer every day. He had been in all parts of the world, and had mixed with all sorts of people, and all sorts of Christians, but he had never seen more faithful and devoted followers of Christ than his brothers of the sea. Once converted, they are out and out for Christ. Some touching testimonies followed as to the power of Christ to save and keep.

FIRSTFRUITS IN TUNIS.

DEAR SIR,—You have reported in your pages on previous occasions the conversion of a few of the Mohammedans of Morocco. I am glad to send you now the news of another having turned to Christ in Tunis. Mr. J. Bureau writes that in the beginning of last November, while going through the various quarters of the city, distributing tracts and leaflets, he met a young Arab, and had many conversations with him. He was, however, given somewhat to indulgence in intoxicants, though he always expressed contrition. One day, after at least six months of frequent visits, he came to the missionary asking for baptism, and saying that he had believed the Gospel message. Mr. Bureau told him frankly that his life since the day he had met him for the first time had a little changed, but still it was not all that could be desired; if at the end of three months his life had given proof of a change of heart, his request would be granted. The three months having ended, and he having given to the brethren the joy of seeing his way of life totally changed, and having in the meantime made great progress in his knowledge of the Scriptures, he was baptized in the sea, near to the village of Hammam-el-Nef. This is the first-fruits of the labours of these brethren in Tunis.

Should not this stir us up to renewed and more earnest efforts for the evangelisation of North Africa? Southern Morocco has some three millions of people quite unevangelised. Several large districts in Algeria, such as that to the west of Algiers, Southern Algeria, and the Aures Mountains, are still without any messengers of Christ, though there are no obstacles to missionaries residing and labouring there. The southern part of the Empire of Tunis, though within a week's journey of London, is as destitute of the Gospel as the centre of Africa. The vast region of Tripoli, though within nine days' journey of London, is without any Protestant missionary or agent of any sort, and so is the Sahara.

We have had an offer of funds to begin work in Tripoli with a view to penetrating southward to the Central Soudan, but at present we have no volunteers. Are there not some among your readers who would be willing to go and make known Christ in that destitute land? When an English clergyman visited the city of Tripoli a year or two ago, and held a service there, he heard it was the first for several years. May not God's time for blessing to Mohammedans be come? Everywhere we hear the same story of the decay of the spiritual as well as the political forces of Islam. Arabia cries for labourers, and will receive them if they go. North Africa stands with open arms.

Could not some Christians who are unable to bear the severity of an English winter spend it in North Africa? If they could not speak Arabic, they might do a little through French, Spanish, or Italian. Surely, if they saw with their own eyes the crowds of Christless Moslems that some of us have seen, their hearts would be stirred to do what lay within their power, and to stir up their friends at home to help either personally or by their means. We have now thirty-five labourers in connection with the Kabyle Mission in North Africa, and there are a few other workers, but what are these among sixteen millions of Mohammedans, nearly half a million of whom are every year passing into eternity?

Anyone wishing for full particulars with regard to Algeria and Tunis will find much useful information in the new edition of Murray's handbook, price 10s., and I shall be happy to advise any who may care to consult me on the subject. I purpose in October, if God will, visiting North Africa for the fifth time, travelling from Tripoli to Tangier, and would seek the prayers of your readers that my visit may be helpful to those who are already labouring there, and lead to many more going to work there.—Yours heartily in Christ EDWARD H. GLENNY.

WORK AMONGST CORNISH SEAMEN.

ON Thursday, last week, at the Aldersgate-street Noon Prayer-meeting, Mrs. Hill, of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, gave a very interesting account of work undertaken by the committee on that dangerous portion of the coast of Cornwall extending from the Rame Head to the Dodman. She said it was a Cornishman, Mr. G. Smith, of Penzance, a swearing boatswain, who, after his conversion, was instrumental in building the Sailors' Home in Well-street, and in founding the Seamen's Christian Friendly Society, and other useful work for sailors; yet, strange to say, his native country has been largely untouched by seamen's societies.

A missionary employed by the society was, at the beginning of the season, sent round the South Coast. In due course he reached Cornwall. He found the port of Fowey not only full of shipping, but also surrounded by seven or eight other ports, to one of which alone, Mevagissey, 5000 fishermen belonged. In response to his appeal for the founding of a mission in this extensive sphere, Mr. and Mrs. Hill visited Fowey. They were heartily welcomed by the Vicar and many Christian friends. The former had long been praying that the Lord would lay it on the hearts of some Christian people to take up Gospel work amongst the numerous and spiritually needy men who throng the ports.

Fowey is the seat of the trade in China clay; there are, as a rule, as many as seventy vessels loading in the harbour. While many of the resident captains and seamen are earnest Christians, mostly Methodists, the skippers and crews of strange vessels, calling at and trading with the port, are generally far otherwise. These have at present no resort but the public-house. The need is urgent for a Seamen's Christian Home, with a mission hall and library attached. The Lord has set his seal on the work by giving his servants favour with the Christian residents. They have contributed upwards of one hundred pounds towards the probable cost of five or six hundred pounds; and a lady has promised a further twenty-five pounds, if seven others will give the same.

In addition to this, a Christian gentleman, during a recent cruise round the Cornish coast, hearing of the needs of the work (the visits made to the fishing fleet in all kinds of weather, and the visitation of the various ports dangerous to navigate) first determined to lend his steam-launch to the mission, and eventually gave it outright. Another gentleman, who is dismantling his yacht, has given the hull to the mission for use as a Bethel and reading-room in the port of Par. A sum of £20 is required to fit this for immediate use.

Mrs. Hill gave some very graphic accounts of her experiences of the rough nature of the work, even in summer. That the coast is dangerous, and the need of the faithful preaching of the Gospel urgent, is emphasised by the fact that last year nine vessels belonging to the port went out but never came back. To interest the seamen and fishermen during the long winter evenings, the missionary is most anxious to secure a good magic-lantern, with Gospel and temperance slides.

During their brief evangelistic mission, Mr. and Mrs. Hill were visited by two members of the committee, Mr. H. W. Maynard and Mr. M. H. Hodder. Concerning the work of the mission generally, it was reported that last year 2000 visits were paid to ships in port, and "one hundredweight" of scriptures and tracts were distributed week by week.

CHRISTIAN EVIDENCES.—The Y.M.C.A. Aldergate-street (City), and Savile-row (West Branch), have secured the services of Rev. T. T. Waterman, B.A. (one of the Secretaries of the Christian Evidence Society), for the delivery of class lectures on Row's "Manual of Christian Evidences," on Tuesdays and Fridays respectively, commencing Oct. 18 and 21. Young men who are not members of the Association are invited and at Savile-row young women also.

There are 367,000 Railway Men in the United Kingdom.

Among these "THE RAILWAY MISSION" is endeavouring to spread the Gospel and advocate Temperance, &c. Thus far we are greatly encouraged; but, to go on with the work and enter scores of open doors, we want money. May I appeal to the friends of Railway Men who read this paper to send £500 NEEDED JUST NOW.

Will you give a Thank-offering by making a collection in your family, or house of business, for Journeying Mercies by Rail this summer? Gladly will I send a Box or Card to any who will use it, and a report of the work.

THE GOSPEL IN CHINA.

A SPECIAL PLEA.

SINCE the great recent developments of Mission work in China, and the FREE ACCESS of the Missionary to every part, there has been presented a far wider opportunity for the distribution of CHRISTIAN LITERATURE.

Thousands now receive and read the Tracts telling of SALVATION THROUGH CHRIST, where formerly only a few would accept them.

MISS GORDON CUMMING, in her "Wanderings in China," tells the story taken from the North China Tract Society's Report of the "CHINESE CORNELIUS," to whom the light came through reading a Chinese version of "The Peep of Day." This is a sample of what is going on in various parts of the world.

In many directions the people of this great country are first made familiar with Christian Truth through reading the publications issued from the MISSION PRESSES.

A voice has often been raised in Missionary gatherings, crying, "CHINA FOR CHRIST!" Will the friends of the RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY help to realise this grand result by additional contributions to enable the Missionaries at the different chief centres to spread much more widely the knowledge of the wonderful love of God in Christ, by means of specially adapted publications?

Thus CHINA'S MILLIONS will be familiarised with the truth concerning the ONE LIVING AND TRUE GOD, who will have "all men to be saved, and to come to a knowledge of the truth."

Contributions should be addressed to the SECRETARIES, RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY, 56, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

A NEW SERVICE OF SONG.

By REV. MARK GUY PEARSE.

ARRANGED AS A

MUSICALLY ILLUSTRATED SERVICE by FREDERICK BRETT.

With both Old Notation and Tonic Sol-Fa in One Book.

There are many persons who are acquainted with Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's quaint and striking tract of "THE MAN WHO SPOILED THE MUSIC." By the Author's kind permission, the story has now been produced as in which form it is expected to prove both acceptable and profitable. It is hoped that many who—like "Jack," of whom this story speaks—have been too long accustomed to spoil the music in their own hearts and their own homes, and to spoil the music also in the lives of others, may experience the same change of thought, feeling, and purpose through which "Jack" passed; and then like him, having learned the NEW SONG, set themselves to work to bring back both music and sunshine into the hearts and lives of all around.

The WORDS of the Hymns of this SERVICE OF SONG may be had SEPARATELY on a Sheet. PRICE ONE PENNY.

Fifty Copies of either Music or Words will be supplied direct from the Publishers at half-price.

✣ AN EXCELLENT GIFT-BOOK FOR THE COMING SEASON. ✣

"We can give 'The Herald of Mercy' an unqualified, hearty recommendation as an attractive book, likely to do great good in 'humble homes,' for which it is designed. It is full of Gospel truth, its contents are varied and cheerful in character, and the plentiful illustrations at once strike the eye."
King's Highway.

"As bright and attractive as could be desired. Full of good matter, and effective illustrations. Abundantly worthy of a wide distribution in the homes of the people."—Divine Life.

"If any of our readers are on the look-out for a thoroughly good book, suitable for presentation to some humble friend, we can confidently recommend to them 'The Herald of Mercy,' the annual volume of which is before us. Ninety-six pages of interesting and profitable matter, hundreds of illustrations admirably executed."—Work and Worship.

"Very good, cannot be better. The very thing for distribution in its monthly form; and not less suitable for a present when bound up."
Sword and Trowel.

THE HERALD OF MERCY

1/- ANNUAL VOLUME. 1/-

EIGHTY-SIX ILLUSTRATIONS.

"Twelve months' numbers in nice binding, a very cheap shilling's work; every page full of plain Gospel, abounding in picture illustrations. It would be a welcome messenger to humble homes."
Baptist Messenger.

"'The Herald of Mercy' has proved one of the most useful of all evangelistic agencies of our time, an invaluable ally to pastors, town and city missionaries, and Christian workers of all classes."
Baptist Magazine.

"Here is a volume with numerous excellent illustrations, and a great variety of profitable and interesting reading, attractively bound in pictorial cover, and published at one shilling."—Christian Age.

"This Herald ought to be specially welcome. The illustrations that abound on every page will make Gospel truth attractive to the eye as well as to the heart, and the simple poetry by different writers ought to help many weary souls. We most heartily wish 'God speed' to 'The Herald of Mercy.'"—Congregational Magazine.

COLPORTEUR-EVANGELISM in INDIA.

THE system works excellently. Our colporteur-evangelist goes from station to station, and from house to house, with his books and testimony. In about a month he has visited eight stations and sold 200 rupees' worth of books, tracts, and papers. As many of these are small tracts and pamphlets, and many tracts are given free, this represents a wide distribution of printed Gospel. But this is only a half of his mission. He is an evangelist. Personal work with souls is a great aim in this new mission toil. Meetings are also held whereever practicable.

Our first worker is an American, who has had good experience in the States. Ministers and laymen welcome him here, and write of the good done. But we want more such workers. Our pioneer writes of taking bread and native sweets in the bazaar, when not invited to a more civilised table. At times he sleeps at the railway waiting rooms. The work of carrying a "cartridge-box" of books several hours a day in India is not the most pleasant exercise! Those who are willing almost literally to obey the command to "bear the cross daily," may find an opportunity of doing so here. This is a self-supporting work. The colporteur evangelist is expected to get his living and railway fare among the people as he goes. The small percentage on book sales is more than devoured by carriage, advertisements, &c. The only way to reach thousands scattered throughout India is by some such aggressive, self-denying Pauline work as this.

An excellent worker has offered. He is in comfortable government employ, and a pension ahead. He wants to leave all that, and go out into this cross-bearing, but soul-winning work. Only one thing hinders. His mother in England needs his help, and he must send her two pounds per month. If anyone would assume that care, this brother would be released, and would go to spread the Gospel of his Saviour from house to house, and from heart to heart, expecting only a bare living as he goes.

This evangelism has opened among the large and widely-scattered English population, but reaches many natives, and will prove a most useful example for native colporteurs. We need a large quantity of tracts on salvation, holiness, infidelity, total abstinence, Sabbath observance, &c. They may be despatched direct to the writer. THE MANAGER, The India Watchman.

Bombay.

CUBA, being under the government of Spain, evangelical light has with difficulty penetrated there. A Protestant Church is, however, now being formed there. Some Cuban refugees in the United States, dissatisfied with the part the Roman Catholic clergy took in the late insurrection, put themselves in communication with some Christians, who supplied them with 20,000 copies of the Holy Scriptures, which were sent to Cuba. Since then a pastor from Jamaica has settled in the island, and in two months 137 members have joined the Church. Their life and conduct testify that the movement is much more than a political one.—Témoin de la Vérité.

ST. GEORGE'S CHURCH, NEW YORK.—A lady in New York city sends to us a pleasing account of the "fresh-air" work carried on by this thriving church, of which Rev. W. S. Rainsford is pastor. A cottage at Rockaway Beach, Long Island, an hour's run from the city, has been acquired and accommodates from eighteen to twenty guests who each have the benefit of a week, or in special cases, two weeks, at the seaside. During the summer season, there are a number of day excursions every week, when mothers, girls, and boys are in turn transplanted for a few hours from the city to the healthful breezes and bathing facilities at this marine resort. In caring for the souls of the people, the St. George's workers evidently do not forget the needs of their bodies.

THE PAPACY, if it loses ground in Italy, is working hard to regain it in other countries. Its many agents were never more active than at this moment. In Bulgaria the Latin missionaries have received the Pope's special permission to use the Bulgarian language in the Mass, and conduct the ritual according to Bulgarian usage. The Agostiani Fathers have established three missions in the country, having their headquarters at Constantinople, where they have an Apostolic School, which is to develop into an Oriental Seminary without distinction of nationality. The students will have a free education, and this with the hope of gaining many proselytes in the East, and circumventing Russian influence, which, the Roman Catholic organs declare, is spreading in Palestine.—Record.

The Book World.

A NEW BOOK.[*]

WHEN "The Prince of the House of David" appeared, some years ago, the reading public was at first charmed, then startled—charmed by the beautiful Eastern picture; startled into fear lest that picture, revealing the every-day life of the Christ of God, should minimise the Almighty power of that Christ in the hearts of his people who should read it.

Of a kind similar to the before-named work is this new book, the production of an American author, Rev. Dr. A. Stewart Walsh. It has met with unstinted praise, and many testimonials in its favour, but very little real criticism, in the land of its birth, and, from its fascinating character, it is likely to be popular with the reading world everywhere.

"Mary, the Queen of the House of David; the story of her life," is a story and a story. On the one hand we get a vivid picture of a crusading knight, who is sworn by his vows of "chastity, temperance, courtesy," to defend and to exalt all women. In Palestine he meets with a beautiful Jewess, the daughter of a priest, and after a time of secret love-making, he steals her from her home and weds her. She is about to become a mother—her fears are morbid—her taunts sting him, and chivalry gradually dies. Her child is born—she must be brought up in a creed—Whose is it to be? Neither will yield—the knight abandons his wife, and the child is taught in the Jewish faith. She grows into beautiful womanhood—meets one of the Christian fathers, and from him learns, in manuscript, the story of Mary and her Son.

This story is beautifully told; Mary is depicted as one of the most noble, exalted, and virtuous among women. Her life is a grand one—she stands on the very pinnacle of all womanhood, and in unique language we learn the story of the conception. Joseph's feelings—the conflict between love and the Jewish law—his noble resolve to put her away privily that no disgrace come upon her—the angel's message to him—his joy that he is chosen of God to shield the mother of the world's Saviour, and the sublime grandeur of Mary's daily life, are told with a skill and reality that will help to clear away many of the popular unbeliefs in reference to the Incarnation. There is not a touch of Mariolatry in the book—the mother of Jesus is represented as a grand, ideal woman; not the Queen of Heaven, who is worshipped by the Romish Church, but a tender, loving, human mother, whose life should form the standard of every true woman.

There are peculiarities of expression in the work which strike an English reader. Some of the expressions, in the mouth of a Crusading knight, are very New Yorkish and absurd, whilst the abbreviations are in bad taste, especially as they were not used in the days when the story is supposed to have been enacted, e.g., "I'm," "I'd," "I'll," "He'll." Then the account of Mary's espousal cannot be in accordance with fact. But its whole tone is lofty, its conception masterly, and its execution spiritual and devout.

PRESENT DAY TRACTS on the Non-Christian Religions of the World. By Sir WILLIAM MUIR, Prof. LEGGE, LL.D., Revs. J. MURRAY MITCHELL, LL.D., and H. R. REYNOLDS, D.D. Religious Tract Society. In this volume are bound up the six tracts of the admirable Present Day Series, which deal with the non-Christian religions of the world. Each writer speaks with the authority of personal knowledge, and has the art of putting much information into little space. The book cannot fail to be useful in strengthening the revived interest in missionary effort. (2s. 6d.)

THE BI-METALLIC QUESTION. By SAMUEL SMITH, M.P. Effingham Wilson. The author treats this subject very much in its social aspect, as one nearly concerning the well-being of the people. He maintains that "the depreciation of silver, brought about by bad laws, has artificially enhanced the value of gold, and justice demands the restoration of both metals to the relationship they held until a few years ago." He attributes the depression in trade very largely to the large imports from silver standard countries, whose cost, for instance, of growing wheat is paid in that metal, whereas the home farmer has to pay by our standard-gold; so that he is thus handicapped 27 per cent. The treatise is ably written, and with the best intentions, and so deserves careful study.

THE DISEASES OF THE BIBLE. By Sir RISDON BENNETT, M.D. Religious Tract Society. Here we have an ex-President of the Royal College of Physicians bringing all his medical knowledge to the illumination of Bible diseases. His words must carry weight. In simple yet vigorous language he discusses such topics as leprosy, the plagues, nervous diseases, and the physical cause of the death of Christ. The result is a treatise which every Bible student should hasten to buy. Dr. Bennett's tone is as reverent as his method of treatment is interesting. (2s. 6d.)

THE ENCHIRIDION OF AUGUSTINE. (Christian Classics Series, No. ii.) Religious Tract Society. Time cannot take away from the greatness of Augustine as a theologian; his massive grasp of the doctrines of grace and his high intellectual qualities give perennial freshness to his writings. He is at his best in "Enchiridion." It is a handbook of Christian doctrine, in which theological problems are discussed in the spirit of faith, hope, and love. In it God is glorified, and grace magnified. The publishers have done a real service to the faith by issuing an edition so carefully edited and beautifully printed as the one which lies before us. Letters to the Editor.

THE CHURCHES AND THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Sir,—Permit me to draw attention to the noble and outspoken utterance on this subject of the Rev. J. J. Mackay, of Glasgow, at the annual meeting of the Scottish Permissive Bill and Temperance Association in that city, on the 27th ult. Speaking on the growth of temperance sentiment, he said (see Scottish Leader, Sept. 28): "Three years ago I stated to the General Assembly that I had resolved to refuse the admission of any publican to my church, and, if I was compelled to do so, that I would resign my ministry, and work with a free hand elsewhere. A publican and his wife subsequently presented a certificate from another church, and applied for admission. They were most respectable and moral, but a point-blank refusal was made. The result is that since that time the publican has cleared out of the business. I believe that, if the Church took up her proper position, the drink traffic could not live a single year."

I think, Sir, that this testimony deserves the most prominent place and the largest type you can give it in your paper. I write from the north of Scotland, and could not help contrasting it with the conduct of the Established Church minister of Dufftown and the Free Church minister of Aberlour, as reported in the local papers, the former accepting from a distiller a gift of an organ costing £500 for his church, and the latter at a Sunday-school treat in the grounds of another manufacturer of strong drink, joining in "three cheers" for their "benefactor." Such union of the Church and the distillery is, I am afraid, far from uncommon. I remember hearing Mr. Moody once say, in Glasgow, "One of the curses of the churches of Scotland is that they make men elders because they are rich, and perhaps they have made their money by distilling whisky."

Such a testimony then as that of Mr. Mackay rejoices the heart. May the record of it lead not a few to follow his example, and cut all connection with such a soul-destroying traffic.

Yours in Christ, A Plain Christian.

EARTHLY AND HEAVENLY.

Sir,—The address of Rev. Dr. Macfadyen at the Dublin Convention was well reported in last week's Christian, though necessarily somewhat abbreviated. But the tone and unction which accompanied its delivery could not be transferred to paper. All that was taught was true, but I confess that I find it difficult to connect the title given to the address, "The Earthly Side of Regeneration, and the Heavenly Side of Redemption," with the text quoted, "If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things?" (John iii. 12).

This verse seems clearly and sufficiently explained by John the Baptist (ver. 31, 32) when he says of himself, "He that is of the earth is earthly, and speaketh of the earth;" and adds concerning Jesus, "He that cometh from heaven is above all. And what He hath seen and heard, that He testifieth, and no man receiveth his testimony."

John was the last prophet of the Law which came by Moses. He spoke of "laws from heaven for life on earth," as when he told the people who had two coats to impart to him who had none; and the tax-gatherers not to exact more than was appointed; and the soldiers not to do violence nor accuse falsely, and to be content with their wages. But Jesus, full of grace and truth, came from heaven, from the bosom of the Father, and spake of heavenly things: as when He said to Nathanael, "Ye shall see the heavens opened, and the angels of God ascending and descending on the Son of Man." And to the Pharisees: "The bread of God is that which cometh down out of heaven, and giveth life unto the world."

So that when in John iii. 11 Jesus says, "We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen, and ye receive not our witness," He seems to be speaking of Himself and his herald and forerunner, John the Baptist. And then He adds, "If I [by John] have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I [in my own person] tell you heavenly things?"

If the above attempted explanation be inadmissible, its correction will much oblige

One who was Present.

"LADY VISITORS IN WORKHOUSES."

Sir,—The letter of "J. S." in your issue of Sept. 30 reveals a sad state of things with respect to the religious visitation of some of our large infirmaries. If the institution referred to by "J. S." is a parish workhouse infirmary the remedy lies chiefly with the ratepayers, who, on the next election of Guardians, should seek to elect men who will study better the spiritual interests of the sick poor committed to their care.

I believe that the legal right of admitting religious visitors to workhouse infirmaries rests entirely with the Guardians, and to them any appeal with respect to unfairness of treatment should be made.

My own experience of workhouse visitation is a very different one; it is seventeen years since I first began to visit some of the sick wards of our large Parish Workhouse Infirmary, and I can truly say that my work there has been rendered most pleasant by the kindness and cordial sympathy I have received from the various officials and nurses. Some of my happiest hours have been spent in thus ministering to some of our sick poor. No doubt there are others who could bear a similar testimony.—Your obedient servant,

Observer.

EVOLUTION.

Dear Sir,—I wish respectfully to protest against the confusion of the scientific doctrine of organic evolution with the unscientific and atheistical speculations of "Haeckel and others," to which Mr. Heber Evans refers in his recent letter. It is, indeed, hard to believe that any naturalist should, in face of the overwhelming evidence on the subject, teach the spontaneous generation of any form of life, not to mention that of so highly organised an animal as a worm. But as Mr. Evans seems to think that this altogether discredited theory is an essential part of the evolutionist's creed, I would remind him that Darwin speaks of "life with its several powers having been originally breathed by the Creator into a few forms or into one" ("Origin of Species," chap. xv.); whilst Huxley informs us that "there is not a shadow of direct trustworthy evidence that abiogenesis does take place or has taken place within the period during which the existence of life on the globe is recorded" (Biology in Enc. Brit., 9th ed.).

But whilst the theory of spontaneous generation has become utterly discredited, it is an undeniable fact that the doctrine of organic evolution has been steadily gaining ground among naturalists for the last thirty years. This doctrine is held to-day by multitudes of Christians, simply because they believe that the works of God tell them that evolution is his method of working. And they find nothing in his Word to contradict the evidence of his works.

In the third paragraph of Mr. Evans' letter there is a very small weight of argument against evolution generally. The Duke of Argyll's opinion about coral reefs is rather beside the point. The "infinite ages" denied by Sir W. Thomson are not demanded by evolutionists. Prof. Max Müller deals only with the special question of man's origin. So does Prof. Owen in the second quotation; whilst his first has really no bearing on the subject, for no evolutionist supposes that a transmutation of species could be observed by man. The thirteen words of Prof. Virchow which Mr. Evans quotes form part of a sentence in "Science in the Modern State," in which the Professor declares that he is awaiting as a probable event the proof of the theory, but that, until that proof is produced, the theory must not be taught as a fact. Humboldt, Brewster, and Agassiz can hardly be cited as modern authorities. So we only have Dr. Carruthers left. His opinion is, indeed, of great weight, but he is almost alone among modern botanists in holding it. I need only instance Sir J. D. Hooker and Mr. S. H. Vines on the other side.

If numerous scientists, undoubtedly earnest Christians, are evolutionists, and if the great majority of those who really study God's works believe evolution to be the method of his working, is it not at least very unwise to proclaim belief in this doctrine to be impossible to those who have faith in Christ, and to brand evolutionists as atheists?

Perhaps it is also unwise for bishops to commend evolution in sermons. Indeed, I object to the commendation of anything in sermons except the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. But I would remind those who believe in the direct creation of every species that their theory is as much "unproved" as evolution, and they have no right to insist on it as an article of religious faith.—Yours faithfully,

G. Herbert Carpenter.

THE SALVATION ARMY IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—In your paper of August 12, there appears an extract from a conversation with Mr. Tucker, of the Salvation Army. The tone of the remarks therein made seems to reflect unfavourably on the work of missionaries in India; will you kindly allow me space for justification? I begin by quoting the extract referred to. I give the whole of it:—

"We are bridging the chasm that has hitherto yawned between the English and the natives in India. The English look down upon the natives; the natives detest the English. The English despise the native habits; the native resents English arrogance. Thus it is that between the two there is no bond of union. We are creating that bond. The natives are learning with amazement to recognise the fact that there are English who, for sheer love of their souls, are ready to cease to be English, in order to meet them as brethren on common ground, and to most of the natives it is a revelation indeed. They think we are a different kind of English to the others."

Let me preface my comments by the statement that I have no bias against the work of the Salvation Army per se. I have seen its work at home. Some whom I count friends are amongst its most energetic workers. Of its work in India I have not seen anything. I most heartily wish well to the "Army" in India. We are here to win India for Jesus, and He is acknowledging our presence in the conversion of India's sons. But for my full belief that we are in our methods earnestly and intelligently seeking to carry out his will, I would hold my peace.

We, Christ's messengers to India, whether we be called American or English, are first Christ's and then India's for Christ's sake. I challenge Mr. Tucker to prove the contrary in regard to the mass of missionaries. I appeal to India's sons, both Hindu and Christian, in support of my assertion. In good report and in evil report we have laboured amongst them. Suffer us if we speak for ourselves, lest by our silence we discredit our cause. We have the confidence of the people. By the grace of God we have won it. We have visited them in times of dire plague. In time of quiet we have taught them. We have put into the hands of India's sons the power which is making a nation out of scattered fragments. We fearlessly criticise the Government of our fellow-countrymen when it is in danger of being unjust. We have preached Christ in the cities, bazaars, streets, villages, and houses of India until his name is known throughout the land, and it has become possible for the Salvation Army to work, and yet we are said to be detested.

I cannot for one moment suppose that Mr. Tucker wilfully misrepresents his brethren. He cannot know either the men or the methods which he condemns.

Our method is the very opposite of that which is pursued by the Salvation Army. We have each a fixed field, say 3000 to 5000 square miles, and about 750,000 to 1,000,000 of people. We preach over this, assisted by evangelists. We get to know many of its inhabitants intimately. We visit them, and they us. We stay, usually, all our life in the same charge—have direct and constant intercourse. We speak to them pointedly and personally, and we know only one subject of personal importance—Christ crucified, the Son of God, and the Saviour of men.

Mr. Tucker says "there is no bond of union. We are creating that bond." Now I deny in toto that the Salvation Army either has created, or is creating, this bond. It was in existence before ever the Salvation Army began to work in India. The fact that there have been for many years thousands of Hindoos, members with us of the body of Christ, disproves the assertion. From this spiritual union has sprung a social union which, though not marked by similarity of food and dress, is marked by unity of faith, thought, and purpose.

But perhaps the statement is limited to non-Christian India. Perhaps it may mean that our English habits, dress, and sympathies separate us from Hindus, and make it impossible to preach Christ to them. Here again I join issue with Mr. Tucker. There is no yawning chasm between us and the natives. The chasm, so far as it can be bridged by the pariah Englishman, was bridged by Christian Englishmen years ago. We come and go all over our field; we are welcomed in most places; we are confided in, both in regard to private and public matters, by Hindus of all ranks and castes. I doubt whether Mr. Tucker, with his world-wide fame, could give many more instances of the confidence placed in him by Hindus than could many a missionary unknown beyond his own limited circle.

But perhaps Mr. Tucker may refer entirely to the social chasm which exists between the rich and the poor. We missionaries are not rich; we are poor in the estimation of our fellow-countrymen, as, also, we are in that of very many Hindus. Still we are not poor to many of the poorest; we may even be regarded comparatively as rich, as, indeed, is the case at home, where many a worker is in more comfortable circumstances than those are amongst whom he works. But while such a chasm exists here as exists at home, it is not so wide as are class distinctions either at home or out here, and in our case the grace of God has shown us how to bridge it, and the freedom of manners common to the Hindu has led him to force it by his naive way of breaking through any reserve there might be left in the missionary's manner.

Did Mr. Tucker have in his thought the superiority of evangelisation by Christian Fakirs over our method when he made this statement? Now I admit that such men may do a great work in India. We have room for a large band of such men. There are instances of our own Christian people taking up this work with success. I do not think that it would be possible for every missionary to work in this manner. But let us not forget that the example of a Christ life in the home is the testimony which India needs. India knows the Fakir, and does not love him, though she may fear him. It is Christ as realised in the family, viewed as the germ of the nation, who alone can regenerate the Hindu social fabric. We claim to reveal Him by our very life, man and wife—working, waiting suffering, trusting, loving in the power of a Christ-given manhood and womanhood. By this very exhibition of the tone of our family relations we, as Christians, have, in spite of the lamentable testimony given by some of our fellow-countrymen, gained the confidence of India to such an extent as to have confided to us the education of her wives and daughters. This would of itself be a sufficient reason for our pursuing our present method of evangelisation, in opposition of the method of the Fakir.

Will the Salvation Army hear a word of exhortation? Send out to India only your best men. All have not knowledge. By "best" I mean those who can discern between that which is local and that which is universal. Methods that will answer at home, with the senses steeped in Bible knowledge, and brought up in a Christian environment, will not answer with the Hindu. The Hindu is by nature a mystic and a metaphysician, and these two qualities must be recognised before we preach Christ to him with effect. We have to create the environment. There are many ways of doing this, one of which is that adopted by Mr. Tucker. Some of us who are willing to adopt that method, if the Lord shows that it is the more fruitful, believe that our present one is found to yield more lasting results than is the method put forward to its utter exclusion by Mr. Tucker.

I may have altogether missed the mark. The "we" may include all missionaries. If so, then will Mr. Tucker let the fact that the Editor of The Christian misunderstood him, be my apology for writing this letter.

J. Redmond Bacon, Missionary L. M. S.
Cuddapah, South India, Sept. 9.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For decided improvement in the health of Miss Marsh.

PRAYER.—For a fortnight's mission in City Hall, Dunkeld, by Mr. J. W. Moodie, from Oct. 29 to Nov. 14.——For Colton, that the Lord may lead many, young and old, to Christ.——For Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire, that God's work may be quickened and revived.——For awakening in Dudhope Mission District, Dundee; special effort begins Oct. 23.——For a mission in Jersey, in October, by Rev. Walter Bradbury.——For blessing on special services for children and young people, by Mr. H. W. Pewtress, in the Centenary Memorial School, Mansion House-street, Kennington, from Oct. 18 to 28.——For blessing on a Gospel Temperance Mission, to be held at Swansea, on Oct. 30.——For blessing on meetings at Wick, N.B., commencing Oct. 16, to be conducted by Mr. J. A. Smith.——For a mission, to be held in Union Tabernacle, Battersea, from Nov. 6 to 21, by Mr. John McAuliffe.——For blessing on services to be conducted in the Methodist Free Church, St. Columb, by Miss North, of Axminster.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Rev. J. and Mrs. Mountain.—Owing to an illness which laid Mr. Mountain aside for two months, and also to numerous evangelistic engagements in New Zealand, these evangelists have been compelled to postpone their visit to India till next year.

Mr. E. J. Parker, who for the last four years has laboured with Mr. J. T. Mateer in evangelistic work in England and on a tour round the world, started from London on Friday last for a few months' work in the United States, with his sister, Miss Emma Parker. He requests prayer that much blessing may attend their labours.

Mr. W. Mapstone will spend the autumn and winter months evangelising in Crowborough and neighbourhood, Sussex. He commenced work at Jarvis Brook on Sunday, October 2, with manifest signs of blessing. Prayer is earnestly desired for a rich blessing, and a large ingathering of souls. Mr. Mapstone's address is Ferndale Cottage, Rotherfield, Sussex.

Harrogate.—For several months Mr. and Mrs. Woodhouse, of the United Christian Mission, have been conducting open-air services on the Stray in this beautiful inland watering-place. Hundreds coming and going have listened to the earnest message of salvation by address and song, and many have testified to the blessing received. Mrs. Bower, of Doncaster, has concluded a four days' mission at St. James's Hall.

Sion Mills, Co. Tyrone, Ireland.—It has seldom been our happy lot to engage in a more blessed revival than we have witnessed in this village for the past few weeks. From night to night the tent has been crowded, and the deep anxiety after salvation which we see in the after-meetings is proof that the old Gospel has not lost any of its power. The esteemed Presbyterian pastor of the village (Rev. Mr. Neill) has joined most heartily in the work. J. T.

Mr. W. Spencer Walton's recent mission at Wakefield continues to bear fruit. Already the Y.W.C.A., launched during the mission, has 100 members, and forty-four new members have joined the Y.M.C.A., while the spiritual awakening continues in the town. We understand Mr. Walton purposed going to India for six months' undenominational work, but owing to the continued severe illness of his mother, the door for the present seems closed. Missions are arranged for at Leamington, Wimbledon, Eastbourne, and other places.

Brighton.—We have three mission stations in connection with London-road Chapel, and very often we feel anxious about the work. The indifference shown by many for the truth, the many excuses for non-attendance on the means of grace, and the difficulty in getting the people to feel their need of a Saviour—these things have led our workers to prayer. For several months we have seen a marked difference in their attention and earnestness on the part of the people. One of our friends, now a student at Cliffe College, lately held an eight days' mission, assisted by the workers. Some decided for Christ, and others are under deep conviction. J. Mansfield.

Tatsfield, Surrey.—Two or three estates in this village (about four miles from Westerham) have been of late years cut up into freehold plots. Several houses have been put up, mostly of corrugated iron or wood, and not only has the population been considerably increased, but quite a new class of occupiers have been grafted on to the old agricultural stock. To follow up some open-air services, held on the village green on Sundays by Mr. Fegan and others, a tent was put up about a month ago, and the meetings have been continued in it. The permanence of this effort was so earnestly desired by many of the inhabitants that a freehold site has been bought, and a neat mission-hall is being put up.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken will conduct a mission in the Parish Church, Luton, October 16 to 31.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT, 8a, Red Lion-square, W.C.—A series of most interesting meetings are being held weekly, at midnight, at 28, Foubert's-place, Regent's-street. Large numbers of the more fashionable fallen women have attended, and been received with great kindness by the Christian friends who have provided tea, music, short addresses, and earnest personal dealing to get them to lead a new life. Many have gone away deeply impressed.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Mr. S. Sims held recently successful temperance meetings at the Military Barracks, Belfast.

The temperance journals urge that now is the time to begin earnest temperance work for the winter.

The London School Board are trying to stimulate the teachers to ground their scholars in the principles of temperance.

Mr. Frederick Sherlock has resigned the honorary editorial secretaryship of the Church of England Temperance Society.

Twelve M.P.'s are announced to speak at the annual meeting of the United Kingdom Alliance at Manchester on Tuesday, October 11.

The annual meetings of the Scottish Temperance League, held at Glasgow, appear to have been unusually enthusiastic and successful.

Rev. William Motham, a zealous temperance worker, is to succeed the lamented Rev. G. M. Murphy at Borough-road Congregational Church.

Dr. Langdon Down and Dr. Fletcher Beach have recently stated that "habitual intoxication in a parent is a common cause of idiocy in children."

Mr. William Forbes, who has been giving addresses at Hampstead-road, Highbury, Holloway, Ilford, and Stepney, goes to the West of England next week.

The Western Temperance League recently held their fiftieth anniversary at Street, Somerset. There are four hundred societies now in affiliation with the league.

Some Manchester drink-sellers have protested in the local papers against the continuance of the Exhibition beyond the time originally fixed. They say it has seriously affected their trade.

England contributes 652,328 gallons, and America 921,412 gallons, of rum annually towards the Christianisation of Africa. The natives are thus enabled to smile on the work of the missionaries.

An officer in the Royal Navy suggests that long-voyage merchant seamen should, as in the Navy, be paid their wages in small instalments. When paid in bulk, the whole is often spent on shore in a single day.

We would remind our readers that the "World's Temperance Week of Prayer" is fixed for November 7—13 inclusive. The Churches are urged to make November 12 and 13 national days of prayer for the triumph of the temperance cause.

FOREIGN.

The sale of intoxicating drinks to children is forbidden in Bengal.

The North Sea Drink Traffic Conference is expected to be held this month.

In America there are now about thirty successful hospitals for inebriates.

Rev. J. G. Gregson, in The Temperance Record, argues the Indian Excise system tends directly to increase the consumption of intoxicants.

In connection with the City Mission in Sydney, New South Wales, during the past year 2,500 persons are said to have signed the pledge.

At St. Petersburg beer and spirituous liquors cannot now be sold at places of public entertainment, and the students are forbidden to enter spirit shops.

A French sensational commission has arrived at the conclusion that certain districts in France are threatened with physical degeneracy owing to alcoholism.

Arizona, Kansas, has a lady for Mayor, a liquor-seller proposed her as a joke, but the temperance people took him in earnest and placed her at the head of the poll.

The recent Congress at Zurich, after much serious deliberation, agreed that alcoholic liquors should be confined to the same category as ether, chloroform, &c.

Dr. Richardson's temperance lesson book, "revised and adapted to Canadian circumstances," is now used under the authorisation of Government in the Canadian schools.

Mr. Dering, of the British Embassy, has sent home an official report in which he refers to professional pauperism in Russia, and of which drunkenness is said to be one of the main causes.

Dr. Talmage attributes the present great immigration of well-to-do families to Kansas and Ohio to the fact that owing to prohibition those States are safer places for the training of young people.

The Royal Niger Company have prohibited the importation of spirituous liquors into one-third of their territories. The Marquis of Salisbury "considers the action of the company most praiseworthy in the interests of civilisation."

Many prohibitionists in the United States are confident that at the Presidential election of 1892, at the furthest, their cause will triumph, and they will elect a man to the highest office in the Republic on the prohibition "ticket."

A drug clerk in Kansas has been sentenced to seventeen years and four months' imprisonment and to pay a fine of over 20,000 dollars for violation of the liquor law. This is the kind of sentence to drive the druggists out of the saloon business.

Prohibition in Kansas prohibits more and more as the years pass. It is safe to say (remarks a resident) that the law is enforced about as thoroughly as any of our criminal statutes, and is likely to remain unchanged for all coming time. Multitudes who drink, and who will evade the law when possible to get intoxicating liquors, are friendly to it for the sake of their families.

A commission, headed by M. Léon Say, has been appointed to report on alcohol legislation in France. A Senatorial Committee came to the conclusion last year that certain parts of France were threatened with physical degeneracy by the spread of alcoholism, and recommended a State monopoly. Not only has the number of spirit shops multiplied, but the spirits are of noxious quality, and to a great extent defraud the revenue.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 16.—ISAIAH LII.

1.—Awake, awake! put on thy strength, O Zion!—"The fulness of the promise, and the order in the vision, confirm the application to a time, still future, when Jerusalem shall cease to be 'trodden down of the Gentiles,' and to a deliverance of which the return from Babylon was a pledge and partial earnest only."—Birks.

2.—Shake thyself from the dust; arise.—Mark the contrast to the sentence on Babylon (xlvii. 1, 2), "Come down and sit in the dust."

3.—Ye shall be redeemed without money.—Birks renders this more literally, "Not with silver shall ye be redeemed," and adds, "The folly of their sin is placed here in contrast with the freeness of that grace by which they will be delivered. One truth is expressed, that Zion would pay nothing for her own redemption. Another is implied (the subject of the next chapter), that it would be by the precious blood of the sin-offering of her own Messiah." He adds, that the allusion to this passage in 1 Pet. i. 18 is distinct.

6.—Behold, it is I.—Delitzsch translates this, "That I am He who saith, Here am I," meaning thereby, "that He who has promised redemption is now present as the true and omnipotent One to carry it into effect."

11.—Depart ye, depart ye, go ye out from thence. The New Testament parallel is 2 Cor. vi. 17—vii. 1.

13.—Behold, my servant shall deal prudently.—This is the beginning of the following great prophecy of "the sufferings of Christ," and in its very commencement it anticipates "the glory that should follow," in the words, "He shall be exalted, and extolled, and be very high."

15.—He shall sprinkle many nations.—"Moses sprinkled the people (Israel) with the blood of the sacrifice, which ratified the first covenant. Christ sprinkles not one, but many nations with the blood, not of oxen or rams, but of his own perfect sacrifice."—Birks.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 17.—ISAIAH LIII.

"This clear prediction of the sufferings of Christ forms the centre and heart of these later prophecies. It reveals the Divine method for accomplishing the second part of the opening promise to Zion, 'that her iniquity is pardoned,' while it sets before the Church in plainest outlines the great sacrifice and Divine sin-offering of the Incarnate Son of God."—Birks.

1.—Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?—Mark the two aspects of truth. The human, believing the report: the Divine, a revelation of God's work to the soul. See for the latter Gal. i. 16.

3.—We hid as it were our faces from Him.—The marginal reading of both A.V. and R.V. is to be preferred: "He hid, as it were, his face from us." Hengstenberg renders it, "like one hiding his face from us," and thinks it alludes to Lev. xiii. 45, where the leper covers part of his face. But this is very unsatisfactory. It is much more probable that the allusion is to the veiling of his Divine glory in becoming man.

6.—All we like sheep have gone astray…the iniquity of us all.—A striking case of conversion once resulted from an evangelist giving this verse to an inquirer, and telling him to go in at the first "all" and come out at the last "all." This illustrates the importance of not taking the privilege of the last clause apart from the penitence implied in the first. Repentance should never be dissevered from faith. See Acts xx. 21.

7.—He was oppressed, and He was afflicted.—The late Dr. Tregelles rendered this, "It was exacted, and He was made to answer."

8.—For the transgression of my people was He stricken.—The Hebrew of the last clause is literally "the stroke was theirs." So in margin R.V., "to whom the stroke was due."

9.—And with the rich in his death.—Better as in Birks, "with the rich man after He was slain."

11.—By his knowledge.—It is disputed whether this means by the knowledge of Him (i.e., by knowing Him), or by his knowing God. Both are true (see John xvii. 3, 25), but the latter is more in keeping with the construction, and with our Lord's appeal to the Righteous Father (John xvii. 25) as having known Him, in contrast to the world who knew Him not. For He shall bear their iniquities.—R.V. gives the exact Hebrew, "And He shall bear."

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 18.—ISAIAH LIV.

1.—Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear.—St. Paul's quotation and explanation of this verse in Gal. iv. 27 give us its true meaning. The result of Christ's death (the subject of the last chapter) is at once set forth in the enlargement of the spiritual Church, which in the days of Israel after the flesh had been comparatively barren; the call of the Gentiles (ver. 3), and the safety and security of the Church of God, are set forth to the end of the chapter in language of great beauty. The allusion in the first verse is to the allegory (Gal. iv. 24) of Abraham's two wives: Hagar, the type of Israel after the flesh in bondage through the Sinai covenant; Sarah, the type of the spiritual Church of God—the "Jerusalem that is above, the mother of us all," free through "the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free" (Gal. v. 1).

5.—The God of the whole earth shall He be called.—The New Testament parallel is Rom. iii. 29: "Is He the God of the Jews only?" &c.

6.—A woman forsaken and grieved in spirit.—The case of Sarah before the birth of Isaac, and of Hannah (1 Sam. i.), throw light upon this expression. Such was the state of the true Church of God when Israel after the flesh was apparently in favour, and the spiritual Church seemed to be disowned.

11.—O thou afflicted, &c.—"The figure here changes from a wife restored to favour and blessed with children, to a city after storms and ruin, rebuilt in magnificence and beauty."—Ibid. The allusion to precious stones does not refer to the earthly, but to the heavenly Jerusalem. See Rev. xxi. 19, &c.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 19.—ISAIAH LV.

After the description, in the last chapter, of the covenant security and everlasting salvation of the Church of God, another aspect of Gospel salvation is now presented in the free, gratuitous offer of salvation to a lost world. The very covenant of peace described in liv. 10 as made with the Church is here offered to the world, for it is by this free Gospel invitation that souls are brought from the world into the Church.

3.—Incline your ear and come unto Me.—This personal application to a personal Saviour is ever set forth by our Lord as the essential element of salvation. "All that the Father giveth Me shall come to Me" (John vi. 37). The invitation is not to come to his Apostles, nor to his Church or Sacraments, but to Himself. The sure mercies of David.—Without excluding the mercies promised to David, or those made good to his seed (Rom. i. 3), one chief reference in the word "David" seems to be to its meaning "beloved," as pointing to "The Beloved" (Eph. i. 6). See also Acts xiii. 34—37.

5.—A nation that Thou knowest not.—The "holy nation" of 1 Pet. ii. 9.

10.—As the rain cometh down, &c.—Two things appear in the illustration, rain descending and seed fructified thereby. The two things which answer to these are the word, corresponding to the seed, and the fructifying influence of the Spirit, corresponding to the rain.

13.—It shall be to the Lord for a name.—The ultimate object of God's salvation is his being glorified in the fruitfulness of his people.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 20.—ISAIAH LVI.

The bright array of Messianic promises which occupied the few preceding chapters is now followed by a portion of less interest, seeing that not Christ, but Israel, is the subject. Birks calls this section "The Middle Ages of Delay," and says: "This new section of advice and warning belongs to the whole period from Isaiah to Christ. The like message applies now to the Church of Christ, and its prospect of the Second Advent."

2.—Blessed is the man that doeth this, &c.—The reason why such prominence is here given to the Sabbath is the fact of its being the only ceremonial command in the moral law of the Ten Commandments. The Captivity brought the Temple service virtually to an end, for though the outward form lingered till Christ's time, the glory had departed (Ezek. x. 8). The second Temple lacked the essential features of the first. It had no ark, no Shekinah (or visible presence), no "urim and thummim." In view of Isaiah i. 11—13, the whole ritual was, from Israel's abuse of it, repulsive to God. But the Sabbath remained as a special sign (Exod. xxxi. 13—17; Ezek. xx. 12) of God's connection with Israel (Deut. v. 15), and as a type and pledge of redemption rest soon to be brought in and perfected by Christ's finished work (Heb. iv. 9, 10). It is interesting to observe that, during our Lord's ministry on earth, the mere ceremonialism of their Sabbath observance was a frequent subject of controversy with the Pharisees.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 21.—ISAIAH LVII.

1.—The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart.—"The word 'righteous' may refer to some one eminent person, or be distributive. The past tense (Heb.) is often rendered by the present, which turns the passage into a kind of moral proverb. But the word refers more naturally to a fact realised in prophetic vision. Thus it points naturally in the first place to Hezekiah. The picture that follows corresponds in every point to known features of Manasseh's reign."—Birks. Granting a primary reference to Hezekiah, there seems to be a deeper meaning behind this. Coming as this does so soon after chap. liii., can we doubt a reference to "the righteous one," whose death is there described, and concerning whom it is the great charge against both unbelieving Israel and the world in general, that "no man layeth it to heart"? Merciful men.—"Or 'gracious men,' who, having felt the lovingkindness of God, deal kindly with their fellow-men."—Kay. The Hebrew word for "taken away" is literally "gathered," and the whole passage reminds one of John xi. 52.

2.—They shall rest in their beds.—"Resting from their heavy toil (Rev. xiv. 13)."—Kay.

3.—Ye sons of the sorceress.—"Of that idolatrous, soothsaying Jerusalem."—Kay. Comp. Isa. i. 21, and Rev. xvii. of the counterpart in Christendom. If the first two verses point to Christ and his people, the following eleven describe in contrast the professing Church of Israel in apostasy.

18.—I have seen his ways, and will heal him—A word of hope for Israel in the latter day, but none for the wicked (ver. 21).

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 22.—ISAIAH LVIII.

1.—Shew my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins.—Here commences the third section of xl.—lxvi., in which the office and work of the Holy Spirit is specially dwelt on, first convincing of sin, and secondly revealing the glories of the coming kingdom, unfolding the expression used in xl. 2 to describe this section. "That she receives of the Lord's hand double for all her sins." First, the sins are exposed; and then (lxi. 7) "the double" is displayed, "everlasting joy shall be unto them."

6.—Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, &c.—This was the special work of Messiah Himself (lxi. 1). The "bands," "burdens," and "yoke" spoken of are not merely those of secular oppression, but the far greater ones of spiritual bondage (see Matt. xi. 28; Acts xxvi. 18; 2 Tim. ii. 26). This was his fast when upon earth, and now that the Bridegroom is taken from them, his people should fulfil the word, "then shall they fast" (Matt. ix. 15).

8.—Then shall thy light break forth as the morning.—The previous condition of blessing (vers. 6, 7) having been fulfilled by one who represented in his own person the Israel of God, the future blessing of the nation depends upon their acceptance of Him in this character.

13.—If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath.—Appreciation of God's deeper object in giving them the Sabbath as a type of redemption rest (John v. 17) is a step towards the rest of faith (Heb. iv. 3—10).

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Canon Wilberforce is going to Spain for the winter for the benefit of his health.

Mr. A. M. Mackay has just sent home the completed translation of St. Matthew's Gospel in the Uganda language.

Canon Trotter, for eighteen years Vicar of Alnwick, sails for North West Canada this month to undertake missionary work in the diocese of Qu'Appelle.

At the Oxford Diocesan Conference last week it was resolved that a missionary association should form part of the ordinary machinery of the church in every parish.

A son of Rev. Canon Westcott, having offered himself as a missionary for India and Japan, a special valedictory service was held in the chapel of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, the Canon himself giving the address to the missionaries.

By refusing to institute a highly Ritualistic clergyman to a living near Fakenham, the Bishop of Norwich has shown more firmness than many expected, and has vindicated his reputation as the most thoroughly Protestant bishop on the Bench, except, perhaps, the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Frances C. Jenkins, U.S.A., has been "liberated" for service in London and Dublin.

The Friends of Australasia, feeling the need of more cohesion in so big a country, have started a quarterly journal, The Australian Friend.

The location of Gertrudes G. G. de Uresti, a female preacher, at Victoria, a strong centre of Romanism in Mexico, was a bold, but is turning out to be a successful and wise, step.

Elizabeth L. Comstock, who was incited to emulation by the late Elizabeth Fry, says, in an American paper, "During the last thirty years I have visited more than 120,000 prisoners, some in England and Ireland, but chiefly in this land; 195,000 sick and wounded soldiers in military hospitals; 85,000 inmates of poor houses; and many private asylums for the blind, insane and afflicted.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Dr. A. C. Murphy, of Crouch-hill, is to succeed Dr. Moore in Elmwood Church, Belfast.

The Christian Leader says every eighth pulpit in the Canadian Presbyterian Church is vacant.

The new church at Highgate was opened on Friday last, when Dr. Oswald Dykes occupied the pulpit.

The Presbyterians of Liverpool, says The British Weekly, have hitherto declined to join the Nonconformists' Vigilance Committee, which has been formed in that city.

Professor Charteris is appealing for £1000 to carry out a scheme, approved by last Assembly, for a home for training women workers for service in the home and foreign fields.

In memory of her father, the late Dr. Thomas Chalmers, Miss H. J. Chalmers has added a hall and class rooms to Fountainbridge Free Church, Edinburgh, at a cost of between £500 and £600.

In the funeral sermon of the late Rev. Wm. Fraser at Brighton, Dr. Monro Gibson gave touching testimony to the loving character of his friend as it had been brought out in their journeying to Palestine last year.

Rev. David Eades, of Ashton Tyrrold, is carrying the good news into the surrounding villages. With a few friends he holds open-air services every Sunday afternoon. Barns and cottages are to be utilised during the winter.

"No lottery or raffling" is an announcement very commonly made now in advertisements of Presbyterian Church bazaars. It is further significant that the word "bazaar" itself is being dropped in favour of the more modest "sale of work."

Rev. J. Reid Howatt, of Camberwell Presbyterian Church, announces a series of monthly Sunday evening lectures to young men on "The Spirit of Lives." Mr. Howatt also announces a course of lectures on Wednesday evenings, on "Lessons from the Life of Christ."

The Committee of the Ladies' Association for Foreign Missions, in connection with the Church of Scotland, have appointed two new missionaries—Miss Agnes S. Cuthbert, Madras, and Miss Anna J. Mitchell—to accompany Miss Bernard as a Zenana missionary to Poona.

Miss Lilias Graham has offered her services to the Women's Missionary Association of the English Presbyterian Church, and goes out, at her own charges, to China. Miss Graham is a member of Regent-square Church, and is a young lady of high culture. She is to be located at Amoy.

Revs. George Campbell and Andrew Anderson experienced a remarkable baptism of the Spirit, in answer to importunate prayer, in the manse at Cowdenbeath, Fifeshire, on February 26 last. Mr. Campbell does not think he has preached on a single occasion since without conversions as the result.

Rev. Dr. Alex. Whyte resumed his ministry in Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh, on Sunday week. Preaching from Isa. xlix. 1—12 he said:—"God knows I would like to be a comforter to his people; but may I never preach rose-water sermons to lost men. I would rather sting my hearers till they turned on me."

A Congress on Church life and work was held last week at Hamilton, N.B. Mrs. Houldsworth, of Coltness, presided at a ladies' meeting on female missions; and at a conversazione in the town hall Lord Balfour, of Burleigh, gave an address on the privileges and duties of Church membership. Dr. Marshall Lang spoke on "Healthy Literature."

SALVATION ARMY.

In the Paris and Zurich Training Homes there are now over seventy cadets in training for officers.

On arrival at Bombay Commissioner Tucker found a letter awaiting him from Mr. C. T. Studd, of Tai-yuen-fu, beseeching the Army to commence work in China.

The fifth anniversary of work in Edinburgh was recently celebrated. The work has met with much opposition there, but there have been encouraging results.

Work was commenced in Rotherhithe in August last year; since that time much good has been accomplished, and hundreds of souls have been led to the Saviour's feet.

Colonel Fawcett, late of Birmingham, and for many years a faithful and devoted officer of the Salvation Army, has been compelled to resign his position as an officer through failing health.

Colonel Thurman, of South Africa, accompanied by several native soldiers, sailed on Wednesday, September 28, for this country. There are now fifty-seven corps and 150 officers in South Africa.

Six of the Army soldiers were recently sentenced to seven days' imprisonment at Wigston, near Leicester, on a charge of wilfully obstructing the public highways. There has recently been a great revival here.

A universal exhibition of thankofferings is to be held at Clapton Congress Hall, November 12 to 17, in connection with the anniversary of the Training Home. The object of the exhibition is "to give every corps, officer, soldier, and friend an opportunity of presenting a portion of their goods as a token of their thankfulness for raising up the Salvation Army."

BAPTIST.

Rev. W. T. Float has left Foxton to undertake the secretaryship of the African Baptist Mission.

The Baptist Magazine for October gives a life-like portrait, with a sketch of his career, of Rev. Richard Glover, of Bristol.

Interesting services have recently been held at South Norwood. On Sunday, September 25, a special service was held, when twenty-four persons confessed Christ by baptism.

Mr. Spurgeon has had another attack of rheumatic gout in the right hand and knee, which confined him to his house on Sunday last. The rev. gentleman's place at the Metropolitan Tabernacle was taken by Rev. J. Burton.

Rev. T. Lardner, of Battersea-park Tabernacle, has met with a serious accident, necessitating the amputation of his left arm. Mr. Lardner was only just recovering from a severe dislocation of the shoulder two years ago. The latest accounts are favourable.

Twenty new students have been received into Mr. Spurgeon's Pastors' College this session, bringing the number up to between eighty and ninety. During the past year ten students have left the college for foreign work. There are now in the college two men who leave England in a few weeks, and twelve who are studying with a view to foreign mission work.

Mr. William Bilborough, a recently deceased member of Mr. Spurgeon's church, who kept a second-hand furniture shop in a back street, had this notice always exposed in his window, "Any poor and unfortunate sister that requires a good home, will she kindly inquire within?" He was the means of rescuing many from a life of shame, and he preserved a record of 148 who had stood fast, and were now honest women.

METHODIST.

An all-day Conference for consecration and prayer was held on Friday week in Belfast. Addresses were delivered on the subject of Consecration.

Two young men have arrived from Sierra Leone, and entered Crescent Range College, Manchester, to prepare for work among their own people in Africa.

The Methodist Mission tent services at Church Hill, near Enniskillen, have proved fruitful of much good; 294 persons, of from fifteen to thirty years of age, have given in their names as new converts, and of these 201 have signed the total abstinence pledge.

Rev. T. Truscott, of the United Methodist Free Churches Mission, Sierra Leone, having suffered severely through an attack of fever, has been invited by the Bishop of Sierra Leone to spend two or three weeks with him in order to gain additional strength.

A large Soldiers' Home, containing about twenty rooms, is being erected by the Primitive Methodist Society at Aldershot, where Rev. G. Litton and his assistants are carrying on a successful work among the soldiers. The Home will soon be ready for opening.

A writer in The Methodist Recorder tells of a new mission to Upper Burma:—"We have now fixed the site for our headquarters in Mandalay, and are gradually establishing ourselves. The six months we have spent here have been usefully employed in considering the question of a site, in looking all round for the most desirable locality, learning the language, fraternising with the people, and otherwise preparing for entering upon work for the Burmans."

Intelligence has been received of the death of Rev. Arthur Hall, Wesleyan missionary, at Belize, British Honduras. He succumbed to an attack of yellow fever. Mr. Hall was sent out eighteen months ago to take charge of the English work at Belize. During his ministry there he was greatly beloved by the people, and his premature death will be mourned by many. This makes the fourth Richmond student who has died upon the mission field during the past two years.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. W. Courtnall has concluded a well-attended Gospel mission at Stansfield, Suffolk. He commences an eight-day mission at Southwold on 16th inst.

A new Guild for young men was formed at the Clapham Congregational Church on Monday week. The Guild is already provided with a good programme for the winter.

A Young Men's Guild has been opened in connection with Bond-street Chapel, Leicester. Its object is to bring into closer contact with the church the young men for whose general welfare it will exist.

A farewell meeting was recently held at the Congregational House, Boston, U.S., to take leave of no fewer than fifty eight men and women for various missionary fields in connection with the American Board.

The seventh season of the special Sunday night free services for the people, conducted by Rev. W. Evans Hurndall (of Harley-street Chapel), in the large hall of the Bow and Bromley Institute, Bow-road, E., commenced on Sunday last.

At the Canning Town Church, of which Rev. F. W. Newland is pastor, on Sunday week, the first of the special monthly addresses to working men for the present session was delivered by Alderman Phillips, of West Ham, to a large congregation of artisans and others.

Mr. William Rossiter, author of some articles on "Artisan Atheism" in The Nineteenth Century, delivered two addresses in Commercial-street Chapel, Northampton, on the 25th ult, on "Man 200,000 Years Ago," and "Free Thought and Freethinkers." Large numbers attended, including Secularists, Socialists, and others, and questions were freely asked at the close of each lecture.

After a sermon preached by Rev. S. Pearson, at the harvest festival in Doddington-square Chapel, Whitchurch, on Monday week, a collection was taken to reduce the debt on the new schoolroom, and amounted to £100. In an agricultural district, at a week-day service, and actually collected from the assembled congregation, this, says The Nonconformist, is somewhat extraordinary.

Rev. Dr. Macfadyen, preaching on behalf of the London Missionary Society at Manchester, on Tuesday week, said Christians could point to 870,000 converts, making, with their families and adherents, 3,000,000 persons, who had been brought into communion with the Church of Christ as the result of Protestant missionary labour. A hard task is still before them, for, while the Christian Church has added 3,000,000 converts to its numbers, the heathen, Mahomedans, and Buddhists have increased by 200,000,000.

Rev. A. Vine Hall was recently ordained pastor of the South Cliff Church, Scarborough. The young pastor's father, Rev. Arthur Hall, of Craven Chapel, offered the "Ordination Prayer." His uncle, Rev. Newman Hall, in giving "the Charge," reminded his nephew that his great-grandfather had preached the Gospel, during sixty-two years, as pastor of one church; that his grandfather, by his tract, "The Sinner's Friend," translated into thirty languages, had made Christ known to millions in many lands; and that his own father and uncle, after many years, continued to prize and preach the old Gospel as the "power of God unto salvation."

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

It has been decided to hold a representative Conference in Dublin next month, on the question of the Sunday closing of public-houses in Ireland.

The Irish Temperance League has secured the services of Mr. and Mrs. Ripley for a six weeks' tour through various towns in Ulster, in the interests of temperance reform.

The Convention for the Promotion of Practical Holiness, held in the Exhibition Hall, Belfast, last week, was a great success. It has undoubtedly been the means of much blessing to many believers.

Evangelistic services were held during the past week in the Methodist Church, East Wall, Londonderry, by Rev. Charles Inwood, assisted by Rev. James Donnelly, and others. The meetings were largely attended, and were times of much special power and blessing.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Peter Dow, of Penicuick, N.B.—Mr. Laidlaw, Parish minister, of Wanlockhead.—Mr. Sharp, Parish minister, of Aberdalgie, Perth.—Rev. Angus Macintyre, for forty-one years minister of Kinlochspelvie, Mull.—Mr. James Wilson, of Airdrie.—Captain Martin Munro, a devoted elder of the Free Church at Inverary.—Provost James Downie, of Kirkintilloch, a staunch supporter of the temperance movement, and a warm sympathiser with evangelistic work.—Rev. James Izzett, of the Free Church, Westruther.—Mr. Alex. Berry, one of the elders of Dr. Goold's church, Edinburgh.—Rev. William Thomson, of the U. P. Church, Alloa.—Rev. Jagadiswar Bhuttacharjea, one of Dr. Duff's converts and a valued missionary of the Free Church of Scotland in Calcutta.—Mr. Samuel Berry, an eminent surgeon, for many years one of the deacons of Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham.—Rev. Wm. Moody Blake, well-known in many parts of the country for his work in behalf of the London Missionary Society.—Rev. Robert Harvey, late of Kenninghall, at the patriarchal age of 95; the deceased was the oldest Baptist minister in England, having commenced his ministry in 1814.—Mr. A. Duncan, Athy, Ireland, an earnest leader and local preacher in the Methodist Church.—Madame Bouvier, wife of Professor Bouvier, of Geneva, and daughter of the late Adolphe Monod, at the age of 54.

RUSSIAN JEWS.—In consequence of the Russian ukase prohibiting the admission of Jewish youths into the higher schools, many conversions are taking place. At the Gymnase in Charkov a considerable number have gone over to the Greek Church.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

THE FISK JUBILEE SINGERS are meeting with much success in their tour through the Antipodes.

PROFESSOR CHRISTLIEB, it is said, is just finishing an exhaustive work on the history of preaching.

A GENERAL CONFERENCE of all Evangelical missions in Mexico is to be held January 31 to February 3, 1888, in the City of Mexico.

NEUCHATEL.—With much regret we learn that Professor Godet resigns the Theological Chair through weak health; but it is hoped he may long be able to render good service to theological truth by his pen.

A CHRISTIAN LADY in Richmond, Va., has rented her fine home and moved into cheaper quarters that she might be able to give 1000 dollars a year more to charity than she otherwise could have done.

WOMEN IN GERMANY.—The most recent act of official male rule in Germany, says The Christian Leader, is the exclusion of women from all voice in Christian associations. They are still permitted to pay their fees, but are deprived of votes.

THE BAPTISTS in Sweden are increasing rapidly. At the beginning of the present year they had 460 churches and 31,000 members. Of the members 335 went to America. The Conference is hereafter to meet annually instead of triennially.

BORDEAUX.—Friends in Great Britain who helped some years ago to build the pretty Eglise Evangélique Libre, in Bordeaux, will be glad to know that all the debt on the building has been cleared off by the members of the church. The basement serves not only for the Sunday-school, but for the lodging of the Bible woman and her husband, an excellent colporteur. Pastor Fuster, 77, Rue la Grange, will gladly show the church, and give information about the work to any friends passing through.

NEW HEBRIDES.—Rev. Dr. Macdonald, of Efaté, reports that two French missionaries have recently been settled on the island by a French war vessel, thus making a total of four missionaries among a population somewhat less than two thousand, most of whom are already Christianised. It is reported that one of these French missionaries was formerly a soldier of the Pope. There were only twenty-five soldiers at Havannah Harbour, Efaté; the priests left at Fila Harbour had been ill all the time, and some of the French settlers had died.

BRITTANY.—The work under the direction of Pastor Trémel has roused the priests who write in the clerical Press, that the movement which has been set on foot by the Protestants must be arrested. They suggested that the copies of the New Testament in the Breton dialect be destroyed, whereupon some of the inhabitants of Kerriea, Côtes du Nord, brought their New Testaments and threw them into the fire on the fête day in honour of Saint John. Yet the Gospel has been received by this people, and the Breton once converted becomes a decided and valiant soldier for the Lord Christ.

A RANGOON PAPER unearths a vile traffic in the heart of Her Majesty's Indian empire:—"People of both sexes are shipped from Nagapatam to the care of certain individuals here. On arrival they are taken charge of by the partners here, who march them off to their depôts, where they are detained, and released only when the money expended has been paid by some of their friends or anyone interested in them. The women, especially when they happen to be young, are readily redeemed, generally by men who are in no way connected with them and who are invariably of a different caste. In a word they are sold to the highest bidder." "We have no doubt," says The Indian Witness, "that Calcutta could report still darker things than these. We have known a girl of eleven years to be taken out of school and sold for five hundred pieces of silver."

Appeals.

NORTH LONDON HOMES FOR AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND MEN AND WOMEN.—Thankfully the Committee acknowledge the practical sympathy hitherto received, and now that they have extended the work by opening a Home for Blind Men, they ask that the needs of the forty-four blind inmates may be met. Rev. H. and Mrs. BRIGHT, Hanley-road, N.

HOWARD-STREET MISSION (New-road, Wandsworth-road, S.W.).—We are in great need of £50 to commence our building, which cannot be proceeded with till this amount is forthcoming. A piece of ground has been secured at a small rental, and we are desirous of erecting thereon an infants' class-room, a room for young men and women, also a soup kitchen for the poor of the district, which is greatly needed. Our work is growing, and is greatly impeded for want of more room. We are anxious to get the building started before the winter season sets in, and before we begin giving our free meals, which is an important branch of the work.—JOHN SOAMES, Superintendent.

Forthcoming Meetings.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

THE IRISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY will send evangelists to any part of Ireland on due notice. Apply to Mr. J. Barton, Hon. Sec., Dundalk, Ireland.

THE CHURCH ARMY will send evangelists (working-men) to any clergyman on due notice, for short or long missions. Hon. Sec., 128 and 130, Edgware-road, W.

THE METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE EVANGELISTS' ASSOCIATION will send lay preachers and evangelists to any chapel or hall of any evangelical denomination in London. Hon. Sec., 121, Camberwell New-road, S.E.

Y.M.C.A., NEW METAL EXCHANGE, Whittington-avenue, E.C.—Daily prayer-meeting, St. Peter's Vestry, Cornhill, 1.15 p.m. Oct. 17, 24, and 31, Mr. Reader Harris; 18, Dr. Thain Davidson; 23, Rev. E. A. Stuart. Mission work nightly.

Subscriptions Received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Monday, October 10, 1887.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION

(Instituted 1844).

Results of work cannot be measured, and many souls have been rescued.

Extract from Missionary's report:—"I had a most interesting time with the men on board the Contest; at the close of my address, four sailors signed the pledge-book. An officer on board a trader heard the message of salvation from the missionary's lips, and it went home to his heart. Shortly afterwards he joined another vessel, which was wrecked; and as he stood watching the men struggling to get into the boats he bade them look to Jesus Christ, who could alone save them from perishing eternally."

ASYLUM for FATHERLESS CHILDREN, Reedham, near Caterham Junction, Surrey. This unsectarian Institution is entirely dependent upon public benevolence. It is open to fatherless children of either sex from all parts of the kingdom. They are received as early as three months old, and are retained and cared for in every way until they are 15 years of age.

Since the foundation of the Charity in 1844, 1,500 children have been admitted to its benefits and 310 are now in the Asylum. Their maintenance entails an expenditure of at least £8,000 per annum, but of that sum only £2,500 is provided by annual subscriptions.

The large balance is dependent upon donations and legacies. FUNDS are urgently NEEDED.

The Secretary will be pleased to give any further information.

FORBIDDEN FRUIT FOR YOUNG MEN.

By MAJOR SETON CHURCHILL,

Author of "Stepping Stones to Higher Things," "Church Ordinances from the Layman's Standpoint," &c.

CONTENTS.

Forbidden Fruit: Its Raison d'Etre—Benefits of Temptation—The Moral Nature of Man—Self-Control—Human Responsibility—True to Nature—Accumulative Power of Sin—Promiscuous Intercourse—Polygamy—Marriage—Prostitution—Responsibilities of Parents—Influence of Medical Men in Questions of Morality—Impure Thoughts—Impure Pictures—Causes Exciting to Impurity—Aids to Purity—Treatment of the Fallen—Religion as an Aid to Purity.

FAMILY CHURCHMAN.—"This book is a model of the manner in which the Purity Question ought to be discussed with young men. The tone of the book is manly, straightforward, and simple, and we could wish it in the hands of every young man."

CHRISTIAN.—"The writer's wide experience in different parts of the world, combined with his knowledge of the Scriptures and deep spiritual experience, peculiarly fits him to be the author of such a book as this. We trust that every Young Men's Christian Association Librarian will order copies."

MORNING POST.—"The writer feels earnestly the importance of the work he has undertaken, and there is about his style a manliness and a healthy tone which can hardly fail to impress those to whom he addresses himself—young men."

YOUNG MEN'S MONTHLY REVIEW.—"This book supplies a need the age; for on every hand we are meeting with parents guardians, and friends who are seeking a volume that deals with a subject that they are too timid and unwilling to mention to their youthful charges."

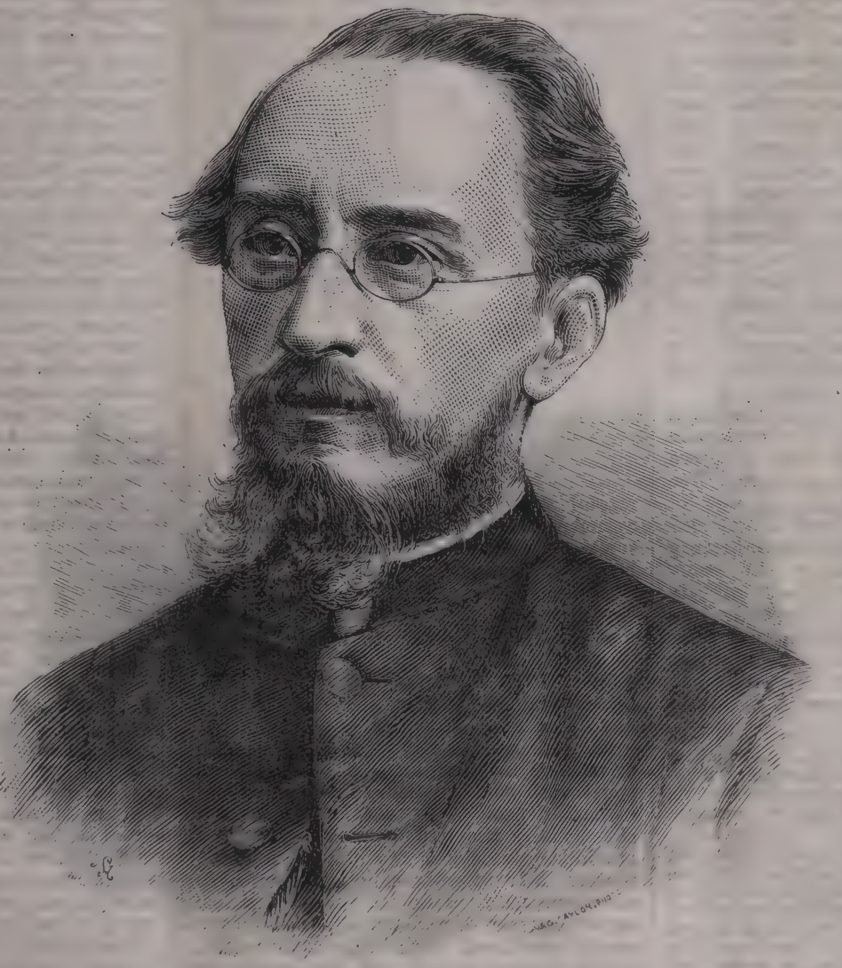
REV. ROBERT TUCK, B.A.

UNDAY - SCHOOL teachers at the) present day enjoy advantages which ere altogether unknown to their prede- ssors of the last generation. Not only are ble lessons carefully and wisely arranged, t most valuable assistance is furnished busy teachers as they ndeavour to prepare emselves for making ese lessons interesting nd instructive. Among ose who have been ngaged in this most elpful work no one has ndered nobler service an the subject of our resent sketch. Week y week thousands of achers turn to the ages of The Sunday chool Chronicle, sure of nding the assistance ey need; and all to hom the name of Rev. OBERT TUCK has thus ecome familiar will wel- me some particulars of s history.

His father was a adesman in the market lace of Bath. Like imothy, he was much debted to the sacred fluence of a pious other and grandmother. is parents and grand- arents were connected ith the Argyle Chapel, nd were associated with ev. William Jay during most the entire length his ministry.

As a boy Robert Tuck as unusually thought- l, and while enjoying ours of play as ener- etically as any of his hoolfellows, he had a ind continually awake nd eager in the acqui- tion of knowledge. He ad looked forward to e enjoyment of a pro- nged period of educational training, but this he was disappointed. Family cir- umstances led to his removal from the ectory School when thirteen years of age. hat seemed like a calamity, however, was rt of the Master's training for the work the future. Nine years were spent in e intense activity of business life, part of e time amidst the strain and pressure of large wholesale house in London. This g interval between school and college as of the most vital importance in the way of discipline and training. It quickened energy, enterprise, activity, resource; it trained in business habits of accuracy, punctuality, despatch; and above all it gave an intimate knowledge of the special dangers and temptations of business life which proved of the utmost value when, from week to week, he had to speak as a messenger from God to those immersed in all the cares and activities of toil and commerce.



(From Photograph by Messrs. A. & G. Taylor, London.)

Our friend owed much to the influence of the Sunday-school; hence the living interest he has always taken in this department of the Church's work. His religious decision was the result of the influence of a much-loved teacher. While in London Mr. Tuck joined the church at Surrey Chapel, during the first year of the ministry of Rev. Newman Hall, and immediately afterwards became a teacher at Castle-yard Sunday-school, Holland-street, Southwark, instituted in 1802. Here he was so thoroughly devoted to the good work that he has ever since taken the deepest interest in its welfare and is now the treasurer of Castle-yard, which has developed into an important children's mission.

The desire to be a minister of Jesus Christ was awakened in his mind in very early life. The way to the fulfilment of his life-desire, however, was not made plain until he was twenty-two years of age, when he became a student at Spring Hill College. There, in due time, he took the Bachelor of Arts degree of the London University. Under the wise and able guidance of the resident Professor, Rev. Richard Barker, who gave lectures in Hebrew and Greek exegesis, he learned the art of bringing out the meaning of the sacred text. This faculty, joined with rare spiritual insight, has not only rendered his preaching eminently instructive, but has enabled him so suggestively to indicate to teachers the lines upon which exposition of the Sunday-school lessons should proceed.

In 1862 Mr. Tuck was invited to the pastorate of the Congregational Church at Bromsgrove. After three years' ministry he accepted a call to Lister Hills, Bradford. It was while residing here that he first engaged in Sunday-school literary work in conjunction with Rev. James Comper Gray. This proved to be the sphere of life service to which his strength was afterwards to be devoted. About this time also he began to be a regular contributor to the magazines published by the Sunday-school Union, as well as other publications. Our friend was also the first to provide the lesson preparations known as "Lesson Helps for Busy Teachers," which are a characteristic feature of The Sunday School Chronicle, and which have found such universal acceptance. His aim has been not to save teachers the trouble of thinking for themselves, by supplying them with lessons ready to their hand, but rather to assist by way of showing how or where materials may be found, and on what lines of investigation thought should travel. The first method would only be to provide crutches, the use of which would but enfeeble; the second furnishes, so to speak, a plan of the field to be traversed, and tends to stimulate and strengthen the power of independent thought.

After nearly seven years of ministerial work at Lister Hills, the serious illness of Mrs. Tuck compelled removal to the more genial climate of the South of England, and Mr. Tuck accepted an invitation to the pastorate of the Congregational Church at Bromley, Kent. It was at this time, in 1872, that he sent forth his first volume from the press, a selection of sermons entitled, "The More Excellent Way." The testimony received as to the usefulness of this publication encouraged him to publish a handbook for young Christians entitled, "Within the Wicket Gate." This volume is so wisely suggestive on the conditions of Christian growth and fruitfulness, that it is to be regretted it is now out of print. Then followed several helpful volumes; the latest is "A Handbook of Scripture Difficulties," being reasonable solutions of perplexing things in Sacred Scripture. This is a volume of 560 pages, the result of twenty years of careful consideration of such passages of Holy Writ as seem to present special difficulty. It should have a place in the library of every preacher and teacher of the Word of Life. We are glad to know that Mr. Tuck is now engaged on a second volume, dealing with the literary and scientific difficulties of the Bible.

For ten years Mr. Tuck continued his pastoral work at Bromley. But his health gave way, and a serious form of nerve weakness led to his retirement from active ministerial work. Happily, a rest of eighteen months so far restored health and energy that preaching the word and literary labour once more became a joy. For many years he has now devoted himself entirely to Sunday-school and pulpit literature, and to the interests of the Kent Congregational Association, of which he has been for twelve years the secretary.

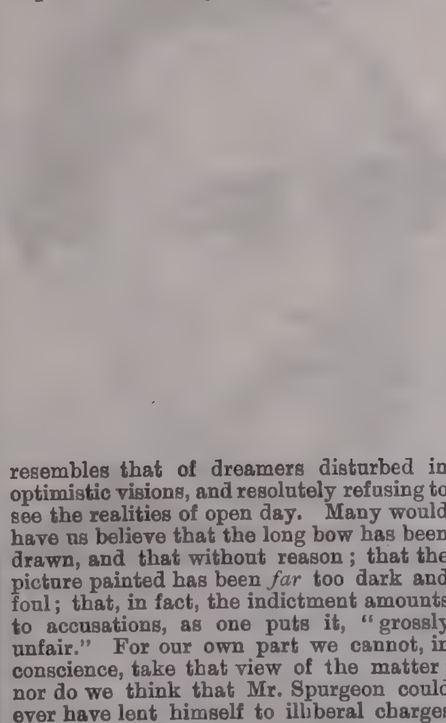
CHRISTIAN UNION.—The address delivered by the Most Rev. Lord Plunket, D.D., Archbishop of Dublin, upon this subject, at the recent convention in that city, is now published in pamphlet form by Messrs. Hodges, Figgis & Co., 104, Grafton-street, Dublin. Price 2d.

ORPHANS IN INDIA.—Our brethren labouring in connection with the Wesleyan Mission, Mysore, India, seem to have found the right solution of this difficult problem. In their report for 1886 we read that "the Orphanage has acquired a large amount of land, which has been divided into farms. To each boy, as he comes of proper age, is entrusted one of these farms, with house, stock, and all necessary farming implements, and the seed for the first year's sowing. Thus 'set up,' he has nothing to do but to work. Hitherto the settlements have proved most satisfactory. The outlay at the beginning is serious; but so far the money necessary has been provided, and the results have abundantly justified the policy. For eight years past the Tumkur Orphanage has been under the immediate care of Rev. George W. Sawday. He has worked with unwearying energy, and it is chiefly through him that it has been possible to initiate this policy, and that thus far its outcome has been so satisfactory." Mr. Sawday is now at 5, Hobart-street, Leicester, and will be glad to give further information about this most interesting work.

THE "DOWN-GRADE" AGITATION.

A REVIEW.

Our readers are doubtless in some degree aware of the widespread, and, at times, acrimonious correspondence to which Mr. Spurgeon's articles on the Down-Grade movement in Theology have given rise. The whole question has been ventilated in the columns of The British Weekly, The Christian World, The Nonconformist and Independent, The Baptist, and Word and Work; as might be expected, it has taken in the main the tone and colouring of the journals named. Both The Baptist and Word and Work heartily approve of the stand Mr. Spurgeon has made, while for opposite reasons the other organs are strongly dissentient in utterance and temper. In this inquiry we hope to give our readers a résumé of the whole controversy, with a dispassionate summing up of the leading facts and issues involved.



So far as we can gather, upon the great mass of the professing Christian public, who have been wont to think that all was well, Mr. Spurgeon's papers in The Sword and Trowel have fallen with a shock of surprise. In many cases the response resembles that of dreamers disturbed in optimistic visions, and resolutely refusing to see the realities of open day. Many would have us believe that the long bow has been drawn, and that without reason; that the picture painted has been far too dark and foul; that, in fact, the indictment amounts to accusations, as one puts it, "grossly unfair." For our own part we cannot, in conscience, take that view of the matter; nor do we think that Mr. Spurgeon could ever have lent himself to illiberal charges or unfounded aspersions. He is—and we speak with some intimacy of knowledge—a man of peculiarly generous mould, constitutionally the soul of charity, the last one in the world to try to magnify a small matter into something portentous. We are convinced that the Down-Grade articles, or, as they may be called, fulminations, never would have burst forth had not necessity, which knows no law, left the writer no option. It was a case of the action of what Emmanuel Kant calls the moral imperative, the Karman of the Easterns, answering to what, in the days of the prophets, would have been produced as the burden of Jehovah. Hence, despite the cries of exasperation, denial, recrimination, and worse, which Mr. Spurgeon's solemn and solid indictment has occasioned, our entire conviction is that his words were timely and just. He has bearded the lion in his den, and shown that the name "Progressive Evangelical" is a mere sheep-skin's wrapping, having no organic connection with the creature that would conceal for a time its real character thereby. And we cannot but think that the value of the controversy, and the service Mr. Spurgeon has rendered to the cause of the Christian faith, are to be adjudged largely in terms of this fact. He has disclosed the anti-Christianity of the new lights. He has torn the sheep's skin off, and compelled the declaration of foreign extraction. No one now need fail to perceive the total incompatibility of the old Gospel with its modern counterfeit. It is as when, in Spenser's Fairy Queen, the false Duessa was stripped of her scarlet robe:—

> Whom when the knights beheld amazed they were,
> And wondered at so fowle deformèd wight.
> "Such then (said Una), as she seemeth here,
> Such is the face of falsehood; such the sight
> Of fowle Duessa, when her borrowed light
> Is laid aside, and counterfesaunce known."

It is needful in this preliminary paper that we submit briefly the terms of the impeachment which Mr. Spurgeon has lodged against the Broad School of Dissent: the more so that by sundry critics, notably the Editor of The British Weekly, the charges made are described as vague. Our readers can form their own opinions. Judge, then, of the vagueness, or otherwise, of the following (we quote from Mr. Spurgeon's first article):—"The atonement is scouted, the inspiration of Scripture is derided, the Holy Spirit is degraded into an influence, the punishment of sin is turned into a fiction, and the resurrection into a myth, and yet these enemies expect us to call them brethren, and maintain a confederacy with them." If such charges as these are vague, we are at a loss to imagine what form plain-speaking can take. Mr. Spurgeon next expatiates on the social aspects of the question, citing questionable amusements, and a weariness of devotional meetings, affirming "many would like to unite Church and stage, cards and prayer, dancing and sacraments." Then follow words than which nothing could be more timely and momentous:—

"Dissent as mere political partisanship is a degradation and travesty of religion. Dissent for truth's sake, carried out by the force of the life within, is noble, praiseworthy, and fraught with the highest benefits to the race. Are we to have the genuine living thing, or are we to have that corruption of the best from which the worst is produced? Conformity or nonconformity per se is nothing; but a new creature is everything; and the truth upon which alone that new creature can live is worth dying a thousand deaths to conserve. It is not the shell which is so precious, but the kernel which it contains; when the kernel is gone, what is there left which is worth a thought? Our non-conformity is beyond measure precious as a vital spiritual force, but only while it remains such will it justify its own existence."

In estimating aright Mr. Spurgeon's indictment against the Broad School o Dissent, it ought to be noted that it does not attempt to specify how far the mischie has gone. And the reason is obvious. Mr Spurgeon's object was by no means to involve the great bulk of the Dissenting ministry in suspicion, but rather to soun the alarm and call general attention to th heterodox trend that has ministerially an otherwise set in, and which, unless vigorously counteracted, must eventuate i sweeping disaster. We are sorry that thi point should have been so largely missed All that Mr. Spurgeon ventured to alle was that the evil was considerable, that was a growing evil, that it affected the Congregationalists in his judgment more than the Baptists, and that the case was such as called for remedial measures without delay. There is no sweeping impeachment of any sect or party in Mr. Spurgeon's Down-Grade manifestoes; and we cannot understand why any true man of God should feel affronted thereby. And yet many of the critics, who themselves pose as orthodox, put on an injured air as if they had been beaten without cause. Instead of joining in the alarm sounded, and doing their utmost to counteract the deadly mischief which stealthily and somewhat extensively is at work, they have wrought their hardest to stifle the alarm and to show that it is the old cry of "Wolf!" "Wolf!" without ground or reason. We are the more surprised at this aspect of things in the case of The British Weekly, since the raison d'être of that able journal was the appalling fact of the growing dimensions in Nonconformist literature of that very evil upon which Mr. Spurgeon so forcibly comments.

Howbeit to the end The British Weekly maintains this rôle. Mr. Spurgeon, according to that journal, is vague; he is pessimistic; his charges are random; they, in effect, vilify and traduce the Baptist and Congregational ministry, more particularly the latter. Along the same lines run many of the contributions that appear in the pages of that organ. Some write in high dudgeon at the aspersions cast on the order to which they belong, as if the whole thing were libellous. Others put the subject far from them—the charges requiring, to quote from Principal Fairbairn—"more omniscience" than he can lay claim to. Others, again, expatiate on the pessimism of the charges, as if for a charge to be gloomy was synonymous with its being false; while there are not wanting writers, men who lay claim to exceptional range of experience, who write as if this were now the Millennium in limine. The deliberate conviction of Principal Cave is, "that evangelical doctrine is more appreciated and demanded in our churches than ever." Rev. J. T. Wigner is emphatically of the same mind, the outlook being so serene and blessed as to gladden his heart in the evening of his life's work. With almost equal serenity Dr. Trestrail can survey the scene. Voices per contra, however, make themselves audible. And among the chief is that of Dr. Bruce, chairman-elect of the Congregational Union. His description of the character of the mischief surpasses anything we have ever read.

"There are," he says, "some of our ministers, and laymen, too, to whom the very word 'Evangelical' is as distasteful as the terms 'Protestant' and 'Reformers' are to the Ritualist section of the Established Church....They have abjured well-nigh all the phraseology of orthodoxy as hateful cant, or the fossil remains of extinct species of opinions belonging to a benighted period when there was no higher criticism, no larger hope, no advanced thought...The more honest and self-confident leaders of the party would scout the idea that they were simply coining new phrases, and finding new forms for the old beliefs. They publicly exult in a change so radical and vital in their faith that it is nothing short of a theological revolution, and that it has arisen on the Christian world of to-day as a new revelation. They can no longer use, in their plain, grammatical sense, the words of Luther and Wesley, nor even of St. Paul and St. Peter. In their opinion we are at the beginning of a new era, as much in advance of the Apostolic as the New Testament Dispensation was of the Old."

Afterward follows an enumeration of the authorities which by the Broad School are taken in lieu of the inspired writers—namely, Darwin, Huxley, Spencer, Arnold, Martineau, Macdonald, Harrison, &c., &c. And later on in his letter Dr. Bruce thus sets forth the new dogmatic teaching: "The Fatherhood of God and the solidarity of the human race are the two pole-stars of the new theology, which will surely rectify and reform every church......The blood of Jesus Christ must never be mentioned, and is accounted as an unclean thing. Culture takes the place of conversion, and charity the place of faith. We are by birth and not by regeneration the children of God. The writings of the Old and New Testament have no special inspiration, no special authority. The spirit of the age is the Spirit of God—all men will be saved here or hereafter." We forbear further quotation. If Dr. Bruce is rightly informed, then a more impious caricature of Christianity than the New Theology has never appeared on earth. It is only just to add that, notwithstanding his graphic description of the mischief, Dr. Bruce rejoices to think the tide is turning.

We can only now briefly refer to the action of The Christian World in taking up the gauntlet; but a glance thereat is sufficient to show that the impeachment of the new school by Mr. Spurgeon was both justly levelled and came not an hour too soon. While concurring in effect with Mr. Spurgeon's charge of moral dishonesty against the new system, saying that "an analysis of many a modern sermon would, we fear, show a good deal of trimming and a balancing of opposite opinions in a way that is confusing and unsatisfactory to the hearer," The Christian World thinks that the time is ripe for an open and full declaration: "We are now at the parting of the ways, and the younger ministers especially must decide whether or not they will embrace and undisguisedly proclaim this 'modern thought' which in Mr. Spurgeon's eyes is a deadly cobra, while in ours it is the glory of the century."

In another issue we hope to consider some of the results of this call to full declaration, and also to institute an inquiry into the causes of modern departure from the Faith.

OUTCASTS AND HOMELESS POOR.

For the fourth season the all-night rescue work of the Christian Community was commenced with the beginning of this month, in the mission-hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. It was soon evident that the work was as much needed as in former years, as a raid upon the streets at midnight resulted in the ingathering of ninety poor destitute men. On the second night 172 were secured. All these men were homeless, and without a penny to obtain a lodging in the cheapest shelters. They were truly a motley group. All were sheltered during the night in the upper hall, where they rested upon the floor, benches, and other ways as they found best, grateful enough for this poor accommodation.

At 7 a.m. they all willingly enough came down to the lower hall, and were served with a good breakfast. To say that they enjoyed it, is to say little; they almost devoured it, and it was evident that many of them were in a starving condition. After the meal they joined heartily in the singing during the religious service that followed, and listened attentively to the addresses that were delivered. The continuance of the work this season must depend upon the help of the benevolent public.

TEMPTED YOUNG MEN.

Thanks are due to our enterprising contemporary, The British Weekly, for the valuable papers on "Tempted London"—of which the third instalment appears this week. Young men are first treated of; young women will follow. The condition of multitudes of our young men and maidens in business establishments is so perilous that "there are annually 12,000 young men who fall. Often the fall is but a momentary aberration, but it is sufficient to exclude from employment, and oftentimes from recovery." In some neighbourhoods, where the higher class of young men seek lodgings, "there are houses where, with the most devilish ingenuity, provision is made for the ruining of young men and young women under the most respectable external appearances," while there are in many business houses agents paid to tempt and introduce, at their convenience, young men engaged in the City." Yet, notwithstanding this, "perhaps there are not a hundred pulpits in the land from which has been denounced the evil [of crime, beginning with drinking, gambling, or impurity] which threatens to eat out the heart of the nation."

Information is given, valuable to young men and to their parents, as to the routine of life in a wholesale drapery house, from first to last: dietary rules and salaries; domestic and sleeping arrangements, moral and religious agencies, examples favourable and unfavourable, and the great causes of temptation—viz., the freedom from home restraint, the want of public opinion in London, the monotony of the life, the influence of bad companions, the great obstacles to marriage. Bad as many lodgings are, and good as are the surroundings in some business houses, on the whole life therein is distinctly less favourable to morality than life in lodgings; "in fact, many large business houses are 'hot-beds of hell.'"

In the face of facts like these, is it not the most wanton carelessness and cruelty to their own boys and girls, for parents and guardians to neglect the encouragement and support of the Young Men's, Young Women's, and all the other Christian Associations which are set on foot and maintained by a few lovers of souls, at the cost of ease, comfort, and home enjoyment, time, money, and personal effort, for the sons and daughters of other people?

In the account given of a firm of upholsterers, it is said that "they were not professedly religious, nor did they encourage religion, but they were kind, just, more fair in dealing with their employés than many who professed religion." There is one slight mistake here: if this firm does not profess religion, it certainly does encourage religion. "For what, O man, doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" He who does not this, however he may profess religion, is not a religious man.

THE COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—On Saturday week a quarterly conference of this Association was held at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. Mr. G. W. Dodds presided. An address was given by Mr. J. Jackson, in which he said that Christian commercial travellers were not only representatives of their employers but of Jesus Christ. In their journeyings up and down the country, opportunities were continually presented for doing good work. Their influence should be felt in the commercial room. The Chairman, Messrs. Whitaker, Hull, King, Haines, Macqueen, and Verry, also took part.

THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

For the third time this assembly has visited Leeds. Last week its autumn sessions were held there, and attracted a full muster of pastors and others connected with the denomination, the local friends showing the visitors much hospitality. As the custom is, the proceedings were inaugurated by a sermon, preached on this occasion by Dr. Clifford, of Westbourne-park Baptist Church, and Vice-President of the Baptist Union. The keynote of his able discourse was the Apostolic utterance, "The world by wisdom knew not God." He showed by incontestable proof that all the discoveries and researches of science, most valuable in themselves, have but revealed the utter inability of man to unveil the being and character of God. What man has failed to do, God has Himself done, in the manifestation of his thoughts and purposes through Jesus Christ. It is for the preachers of the everlasting Gospel so to represent Christ as the Reconciler of the world to God, and the Saviour of men, that the spiritual needs of each succeeding generation shall be met.

At the denominational temperance meeting in the evening some strong advocacy of abstinence on the part of Gospel ministers was put forward. Rev. T. Eynon Davies, in his address, delivered with true Welsh fire, said:—

> According to Mr. Giffen, England in fifty years has spent all the capitalised wealth of Great Britain, plus seven hundred millions sterling. The custom of drinking has destroyed fifteen years' bread supplies. This is a terrible total, and it ought to be reduced. He was glad to see that the churches are moving in this direction. All the three hundred Bible Christian ministers are abstainers. Would to God they could say the same of Congregationalists! Amongst the Primitive Methodists nine out of every ten ministers are teetotalers. Nearly all the Methodist ministers are abstainers. There is much reason to complain of the legislative shortcomings. He would suggest that no new licences should be granted, that lapsed licences should not be renewed, and that when licences were given at all, they should be put up by auction, and the proceeds go into the coffers of the State. He wished also that the grocers' licences were abolished. If they could stop the payment for strong drink in Great Britain each week of five millions sterling they would be going a long way to realise peace on earth and goodwill towards men.

THE CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS.

On Tuesday morning the Chairman of the Union, Rev. Dr. Mackennal, gave his opening address, choosing for his topic "The Life of the Spirit." As the result of observation among the Congregational churches during his term of office as chairman, he declared that his faith in the spiritual soundness of the churches had been quickened and confirmed. He went on to argue that while we are passing through a period marked by the decay of theological "dogma," there is more than ever a desire to know and to live out the practical doctrines of the Christian religion, as revealed in the Scriptures. His view was that there must be, and there has been, progress in the Church's conception of truth. As opposed to the limited view of the scope of the Atonement of Christ embodied in the teachings of Calvin, the Churches generally have now adopted the doctrine of the universal scope and efficacy of that Atonement. Faith in mere dogma is giving place to a most living faith in Christ Himself, both for justification and sanctification. Some words of Athanasius concerning the Son of God were quoted as profoundly significant: "Christ takes upon Himself the human nature, in all its liability partakers of the Divine nature, in all its sanctity and in all its bliss. The Cross appears again the centre of the Christian system, and its two facts are, the Incarnation and the coming of the Holy Ghost."

One part of the Chairman's address deserves notice as a warm recognition, not very often found in official Church utterances, of the character of Christian life outside the limits of the denominations:—

> The presence of a free, frank, and joyous Christian spirit, simple in its reliance on God, and outspoken in its confessions to men, is the distinctive mark of a spiritual revival....It may be urged that this type of piety is adverse to Church organisation, and that its most prominent representatives are found outside all the churches. Would that they were found inside; have we nothing to answer for in that they are not?...Our churches were founded on the very right which spiritual men are now so largely claiming—the right of open vision, the right of confession in the assemblies of the saints. Nor is all undenominationalism a narrow, bitter thing. The piety to which I refer is catholic in sympathy and generous towards the churches. It represents a longing that the evangelical communities might form churches of a nobler type, in which all that any of them had ever learnt should be freely exemplified, and all sectarianism for ever laid aside.

Passing on to the Christian service that ought to flow from a true life of the Spirit, the speaker called for a more strenuous protest on the part of the pulpit against the outstanding evils of the time.

> The great public problems now demanding solution are social rather than political. It is not a time for religious leaders to shrink from conflict; if we are strong in the integrity of our motives, and the certainty that Christian ethics have their final application in the sphere of national and international life....We must protest not only against blacklegs in the House of Lords, but against the presence of seducers in the House of Commons; against the destructive theories by which some would make merchandise of the patient poor, but also against the crass prejudices and wanton indifference of pampered prodigals; against cruelties and dishonesties when perpetrated by a despairing peasantry, but with equal vehemence against "throned iniquity, which frameth mischief by a law."...The supreme question of the time is not whether we, as a nation, can preserve our old ruling faculty, but whether we are content to exchange imperial authority for spiritual influence; whether we are strong enough in God to give up the ambition of being "accounted to rule," for the reality of a worldwide service.

In closing his address Dr. Mackennal urged that if public life is to become as pure and simple and free as home life is, the public influence of women must make itself felt. He also paid a tribute—evidently in view of recent discussions—to the character of the younger ministers of the Church: "I am acquainted with many of them, and I affirm that they desire nothing among you, save to preach Christ, and Him crucified."

At the same session a paper was read by Rev. W. Guest on "Conferences for Revival of Faith and Piety;" we hope to give it in extenso in an early issue. In the consequent discussion Rev. A. Ramsey, of Dewsbury, testified to the good effects of the recent Devotional Conference at Hastings. Rev. J. Tinling, of Finchley, thought such gatherings would be more profitable if the recital of matured and helpful Christian experience had greater prominence. On the other hand, Rev. W. Adeney, of Acton, was fearful lest the exaltation of subjective experience should develop a spirit of Pharisaism. He would emphasise the truth that our experiences at the best are poor affairs, and men should be pointed away from their fellow-men to Christ. For our own part, we do not see any necessary conflict between the two views. Christ, of course, is to be exalted in everything, but the honest and humble narration of what Christ has been to the individual in his times of trial and in his daily Christian walk. We think a meeting for Bible-reading, illustrated by personal experience, would be more edifying than Bible-reading alone, or experience alone. Rev. R. Balgarnie referred to a coming Conference at Hammersmith, and followed the Chairman's example by putting in a plea for freedom on the part of qualified Christian women to share in these devotional deliberations.

After Dr. Clifford, on behalf of the Baptist Union, had conveyed fraternal greetings to the assembly, a lengthy and thoughtful paper was read by Rev. S. Pearson, on "Church Comprehension." It was in spirit and effect a strong protest against ecclesiastical assumptions, and a plea for the free exercise of their opportunities by all the religious organisations on a common level, and apart from privilege or proscription. Rev. R. S. Ashton, as representing the Free Churches of France, reported on the efforts being made to evangelise that country. A good deal has been done, but the evangelical branches of the Church have much to contend with, and need help from fellow-Christians in other lands.

A crowded public meeting was held in the evening for the exposition and enforcement of Free Church principles, when addresses were given by Mr. E. Crossley, M.P, Rev. W. Clarkson, of Birmingham, Rev. R. H. Lovell, of Bromley, and Principal Fairbairn. Mr. Clarkson incidentally referred to the scandal of a man like the Marquis of Ailesbury having the right to appoint pastors to "the cure of souls." He urged that the Sunday evening services in the churches should be more strictly evangelistic, and that members of congregations should lend their individual help in this direction. While touching on this point, a tribute of gratitude was given for the quickened evangelistic conscience imparted to the churches through the labours of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, and the endeavours of the Salvation Army.

On Wednesday morning deputations from several other bodies attended, and expressed cordial sentiments of Christian brotherhood. A unique and interesting incident of the meetings was the personal presentation of an address in favour of total abstinence. This year a deputation of ladies appeared on the platform on behalf of the Leeds Women's Christian Temperance Union. It was, said the Chairman, the first deputation of women that had ever addressed the united Congregationalists. A matronly Quakeress read the memorial to the assembly, which stood to receive it; she afterwards spoke in words of pathos and urgency that produced a profound impression. Temperance has had a living embodiment at these Leeds meetings. Sir Edward Baines, who was born on the first year of the century, and has been a total abstainer for fifty years, appeared on the platform day by day. There was also a deputation from the Yorkshire Quarterly Meeting of the Society of Friends. The lamentable state of Christendom in regard to military preparations and war was the burden of their appeal, and the co-operation of the Independents was sought in the endeavour to rouse the opposition of the whole Christian Church to this barbarous method of settling international disputes. At a later stage a resolution was carried on behalf of the Workmen's Peace Association, and in favour of a treaty of peace between Great Britain and the United

Rev. W. Spensley, London, read a paper on the need of closer pastoral oversight of the young. Ministers' addresses, he argued, should be plain, not burdened by philosophical deductions. He recommended that ministers should have a children's Bible-class, a Christian band, and literary or improvement societies. To find opportunity to perform these duties, he suggested that less time should be given to council meetings of political organisations and meetings of philosophical and philanthropical bodies.

Professor Wilkins, Manchester, read a paper on making systematic arrangement for the scientific study of theology. He said a danger to which those who ministered to the souls of men were liable was that they might fall into a pulpy, nerveless optimism, blind to the facts of life. If they were to avoid a stream of feeble and nebulous platitudes, it could only be as a result of the scientific study of theology; but they should sharply distinguish between theology and religion. The one was a science of man, the other a science of God. He believed there never was a time, at any rate for centuries past, when it more behoved them to test with the most critical care every single item of their creed. They ought to make provision in their colleges to encourage the study of scientific theology. Rev. Dr. Stevenson, London, held that theology was a science, and started with the great central figure of Christ. That was a veritable fact. Either the theology of the future must be scientific, or theology would die. What sort of a religion were they going to have if they did not know whether the Bible grew gradually, or dropped down from heaven like a thunderbolt, and if they did not know when the Apocalypse was written or what it meant? If they did not teach something definite to their young people they would gradually drift into agnosticism. Rev. J. Guinness Rogers said their theology might not be the same as that of Mr. Spurgeon, but he affirmed that to the central truths of theology they were as firm and devoted as he. Principal Fairbairn, Mansfield College, said the question of evolution had opened up to him the Gospels. It was gratifying that in their grammar schools and universities large numbers of young men were being trained who studied theology in a scientific way.

Mr. J. Carvell Williams read a paper on "The Necessity for Maintaining the Christian Spirit in Political Conduct." After insisting that Christianity bids men to strive for peace and justice, freedom and humanity, he contended that if the Christian Church stood aloof from modern movements for improving the condition of the people, it would lose much of its power for good. The increase of political opportunism which led men to do what was convenient rather than what was right, was a feature of the times. The promotion of social purity called for much arduous work, however repulsive it was, and besides repealing impure laws, the country had to rid itself, as far as possible, of impure lawmakers. He concluded by insisting on the necessity for an increased number of those who, with great hearts, strong minds, true faith, and willing hands, would make Christianity more aggressive, and bring its spirit to bear on all the concerns of daily life.

At night a crowded Home and Foreign Missionary Meeting was held. Rev. A. Foster, of Hankow, China, regretted that some of their ministers and deacons were not altogether friendly to missionary work. Speaking of the necessity for mission work the rev. gentleman said they saw in China heathenism at its best, yet society was corrupt, each class preying upon the other. Rev. Nundo Lal Doss, a native pastor, from Calcutta, spoke of the obstacles which missionaries meet with in India. The missionary has not only to preach the Gospel, but to educate the Hindoo mind up to it. At this moment there are about half a million Protestants in India. Rev. T. Eynon Davies (London) related the history of the foundation of the Home Missionary Society. Rev. J. Guinness Rogers said the democracy of England needed more than ever Christian leaders. He did not believe they were alienated from the churches if the churches would show that it was their intention to work with and for them. If they could present to this democracy such an ideal of Christian life as would command the homage of their faith and judgment, they would do a work for God in this generation for which the generations to come would have reason to bless them.

At the morning session of Thursday the Reference Committee submitted resolutions against the system of licensed impurity in India and other Crown dependencies and colonies, and against the wholesale demoralisation and ruin caused by the drink traffic in India. A resolution submitted by the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union, in favour of unfermented wine being used at communion services, was received.

Rev. J. Fordyce, Belfast, gave an address on the claims of Irish Congregationalism on the English churches. The Irish Evangelical Society appealed to them for help in order that they might train young men for the ministry who would be in touch with the masses. By this means they could grapple with the withering power of sacerdotalism and superstition.

Rev. J. C. Harrison, London, read a paper on the maintenance and deepening of the spiritual life of ministers, and of students during their college course. He argued that, as their work was mainly spiritual, to do it effectively they must be spiritual men. The college should be a spiritual home, in which there should exist conditions adapted to the encouragement of this life.

In the afternoon a conference of friends and supporters of the Irish Evangelical Society, on the state of Ireland, religious and social, was held. Rev. G. S. Reaney said the Irish question was still the question which puzzled our statesmen. Up to the present time it looked as if both Protestant missions and Protestant statesmanship were a failure. So far as the missions are concerned they had not won Ireland from Rome, but had only managed to keep the Protestant colony. He did not think they should go to Ireland as anti-Catholics; all they should do was to take the good news of God to the people. Rev. S. Antliff, Huddersfield, suggested that they should do more evangelistic work in the sister isle. Rev. W. Woods, London, said his personal impression, after six weeks' visit to Ireland, was that, if ever they were to succeed, they must put themselves in sympathy with the people. If they were to gain ground they must be a missionising body. He believed that the priests were saving the country, though their gospel was not enough to save the people—to our thinking, a very extraordinary creed.

In the evening a meeting of working women was held, Mrs. G. S. Reaney (London) presiding. Several addresses especially dealing with women's work were given.

WEEK OF UNITED PRAYER.

The Evangelical Alliance has issued the following invitation for the usual Week of Prayer at the opening of the year, which falls to be held on January 1—8, 1888:—

Once more it is our privilege to invite the Lord's people scattered abroad over the whole earth, to unite as in years past in a week of thanksgiving, confession, and supplication. Considerably more than the life-time of a generation has passed away since this annual concert for prayer began. Every motive which has hitherto drawn disciples of various lands and tongues around the common footstool of our Heavenly Father continues to operate with increasing force. The powers, both of good and evil, develop themselves day by day. The strife grows keener. More and more the whole world becomes one vast arena on which, beneath all eyes, two kingdoms visibly contend for mastery. And events appear to ripen for a crisis which may prove decisive.

We, on our part, have no reason to regard the issue with uneasiness. "The Lord reigneth." Not only have we the "sure word of prophecy," to "shine like a lamp in a dark place"; nor only have we the Almighty Arm to fight for us; even now we see the kingdom of our Saviour Jesus Christ making sensible inroads upon the powers of darkness. The public conscience of civilised nations grows more sensitive. More pointed attention is called to flagrant social sins. Vast regions of heathenism beyond resound with the Gospel, and every year sees a wider breadth of the earth embraced in the network of our missions.

Things like these fill us with greater hopefulness than even the prevalence of vice, error, and unbelief can inspire apprehension. But, surely, both the darker and the brighter features of our time alike fling us back in conscious feebleness on the succour of our Lord. Both of them bid us "watch unto prayer."

Many testimonies have reached us to show how "pleasant" it has proved to be when, in former years, "brethren" knelt "together in unity" from the rising to the setting of the sun; when the "precious ointment" of the Holy Spirit came down upon us from our exalted "Head" and "the Lord commanded the blessing, even life for evermore." May a similar experience be again enjoyed! The longing grows within the hearts of God's dear children to realise their brotherhood in the Lord Jesus. With this object in view let us combine even more widely this year than ever before. Let us cultivate the "communion of saints" and pray in the spirit of love as well as of devotion. When the universal Church is on its knees, emptied of human sufficiency, may we not expect God to fill it with his power, and to use it mightily for the glory of his great and holy Name?

The topics suggested for exhortation and prayer are in the customary order:—Sunday, Jan. 1, "Sermons"; Monday, "Thanksgiving"; Tuesday, "Confession"; Wednesday, "Prayer for Families"; Thursday, "Prayer for the Church of God"; Friday, "Intercession for Missions"; Saturday, "Intercession for Nations"; Sunday, Jan. 8, "Sermons."

DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.—The new mission smack Sophia Wheatly, built for the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen by Messrs. H. Fellows & Son, Great Yarmouth, was successfully launched from the builders' yard on Wednesday week. The launch was witnessed by a large concourse of smackmen and others interested in this important Mission. Before the vessel left the ways, a brief statement as to the progress of the work was made by Mr. E. J. Mather. Rev. J. S. Moore, of St. George's, Great Yarmouth, offered prayer for the Divine blessing upon the vessel, her crew, and her future work upon the high seas. The entire cost of the vessel (about £2300) is defrayed by two ladies, and she is named in memory of a beloved mother and sister. The Sophia Wheatly makes the eighth smack employed in the beneficent work in which the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen is engaged.

AMERICAN NOTES.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

It must be a great blow to the Seventh-day Adventists, a considerable religious body whose churches are chiefly located in the Western States, to have their chief leader make the following confession :—

> After keeping it [the Seventh day] twenty-eight years; after having persuaded more than a thousand others to keep it; after having read my Bible through, verse by verse, more than twenty times; after having scrutinised, to the very best of my ability, every text, line, and word in the whole Bible having the remotest bearing upon the Sabbath question; after having looked up all these, both in the original and in many translations; after having searched in lexicons, concordances, commentaries, and dictionaries; after having read armfuls of books on both sides of the question; after having read every line in all the early Church fathers upon this point; after having written several works in favour of the Seventh day, which were satisfactory to my brethren; after having debated the question for more than a dozen times; after seeing the fruits of keeping it, and after weighing all the evidence in the fear of God and of the judgment—I am fully settled in my own mind and conscience that the evidence is against the keeping of the Seventh day.

Meantime, the German Societies of Philadelphia are seeking to overthrow the Pennsylvania Sunday laws. They denounce them as an infringement upon their personal liberty. They are indignant that their liberty should be restricted in their processions, beer gardens, and general nuisances. Had they the power of legislation, they would change the Lord's Day into a seventh business day, and carry their infidel views to the greatest extremes. This disposition shown by Continental Europeans is exciting a strong feeling toward the restriction of immigration. The Lutheran Observer remarks :—

> Dr. Schultz, who examines the immigrants as they land at Castle Garden, says, of those who have arrived during the past five years, fifty per cent. is undesirable, and twenty-five per cent. is a positive burden to the country.

Perhaps our ministers and theologians will eventually discover that the German theology which they accept so unqualifiedly is even more to be dreaded than German politics. The importation of Continental rationalism has done much to eliminate Bible orthodoxy from New England preaching. Andover's "advanced views" are only advanced from the "Fatherland" to this "land of our Fathers." In a few days the American Board meets at Springfield, when the old and new schools will come together again and make the air resound with the clash of arms. Congregationalists are awaiting the meetings with suppressed excitement. Whether that great body will again split, and the agitators go over to the Unitarians, with whom they have close affinity and sympathy, or whether they will be overruled and submit to the majority with good grace, is at present an unsolved problem.

That the New Departure wing is aggrieved with the attitude of the staunch evangelicals, and whine under their opposition, as if such opposition were persecution, is glaringly inconsistent. Rev. Dr. Plumb, of Boston, a Congregational minister, well remarked in a recent paper read at the Boston ministers' meeting :—

> The responsibility for the disturbance of the peace of the churches occasioned by legitimate religious discussion lies always, of course, with those who introduce the new views. They are the controversy by controverting received opinions. They start the contention, and they must be held responsible for that "beginning of strife, which is as when one letteth out water." All others were going on peaceably and contentedly, in a quiet and orderly manner, doing their regular Christian work in accordance with approved methods, when each one was interrupted in his work, and interfered with in his endeavours. Every high-sounding claim to present important new truth which is to modify the old, is really a direct attack on those who hold the old.

It is safe to say that the position of Prof. Edward S. Morse, the retiring President of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, is not endorsed by all American scientists. Nevertheless, it is a lamentable confession that his dogma goes unchallenged and unrebuked. One of his final utterances in his official capacity receives endorsement from his unbelieving confrères :—

> It is safe enough for an intelligent man, no matter what he knows of science, to accept as true what science puts forth, and to set down as false what the Church offers in opposition.

This is the cool assertion of a professedly intelligent man. He gives no explanation, however, about scientific deductions, which are constantly changing their ground, nor does he hint which must be believed of the scientists now holding opposing views regarding many scientific facts. Science-Infallibility is not less blindly presumptuous than the Papal.

ALBERT YOUTHS' INSTITUTE.

A series of special services has lately been held for working lads, at the Albert Youths' Christian Institute, Jenkins'-yard, Eagle-street, High Holborn. On two evenings it was our joy to be present, and to see the rough young fellows, fresh from their work, listening to the old story told in their own language, many staying behind to a prayer-meeting and for personal conversation. We know full well when a lad leaves school and goes to work, it is then, more often than not, he mixes with those who will try and lead him astray; it is then that he gives up the Sunday-school, and gradually slips deeper into the world, and for such as these this Institute is opened.

It is a young work, having just issued the second report. It is carried on by earnest and self-denying young men for the good of the lads and the glory of God. It includes an athletic club, swimming, cricket, football, &c., a temperance society, classes for arithmetic, drawing, writing, &c., Bible-classes, open-air meetings, a Christian band, a savings bank, and, above all, a nightly prayer-meeting, which has been continued throughout the year.

The membership shows an average of seventy all the year round, which means seventy lads taken nightly from the streets, and homes that are no homes, and kept for at least a few hours in a pure atmosphere. By the kindness of a few friends, a party of twenty members and three workers were enabled to spend a week at Folkestone. Any visitor will be heartily welcomed any evening at the Institute. A. E. Sparrow, of 66, High Holborn, W.C., is the Hon. Sec.

PLYMOUTH.—Twelve months ago a large hall in a crowded part of this town was secured for mission work, by a number of earnest Christian men. Since that time crowded congregations every Lord's day have heard the Gospel faithfully and powerfully proclaimed. A new movement has just been inaugurated by Rev. J. Barter, a member of the School Board, and a gentleman who takes great interest in the welfare of children. It is called the "Samaritan Society." Its aim is to supply dinners to poor children at a halfpenny each during the winter; and also to supply clothing,

RECOMPENSE.

The sun, who smites with passing blight
The mortal eye that seeks his face,
Is yet the complement of sight;
And presently that eye shall trace
New forms, revealed alone by light.

The cloud that drank the stream and brook,
And left the land in drought and pain,
Will yet restore the life it took
In floods of verdure-clothing rain,
To nourish every waiting nook.

The blinding grief, the shock, and smart
That seem to crush out very life,
Are but the loving hands that part
God's chosen from the common strife,
To live and rest in Love's great heart.

There is no blight, there is no pain;
What seems so is but grace and good;
And he that on Love's breast hath lain,
And thanked the Christ who for him stood
In God's just sight, dare not complain.

MORAVIAN FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Moravian Quarterly for October is full of interesting particulars concerning the foreign mission work, of which we can only give a few items, but recommend our readers to peruse the record for themselves.

ALASKA.

The work here, though only two years old, is already bearing fruit. In the school there has been an average attendance of nine scholars: the largest number at any one time was thirteen; Mr. Kilbuck is making rapid progress with the language and has every evidence that these people are teachable, and therefore firmly believes that as soon as they can talk to them, the work of winning their souls for Christ will not be very difficult.

GREENLAND.

All accounts from the stations in Greenland are favourable. The winter had been severe and stormy and the snow was abundant, but the brave missionaries have enjoyed good health. There had been no actual want except at Lichtenfels. Special interest attaches to a man named Karinak (and his family from the east coast, who had settled at Frederiksdal the preceding summer. It was reported that the remaining heathen families on the east coast would take up their abode at Frederiksdal this summer and would ask for baptism.

SURINAM.

Messrs. A. Richter and J. T. Weese went on a visit to the heathen Djoeka negroes on the Upper Cottica and its tributaries in March, and for the most part met with a friendly reception, many of the people expressing a desire to be baptized, and asking that the visit of the missionaries might be repeated. They have quite lost confidence in their idols and their heathen priests, the idols and houses for worship bearing everywhere unmistakable signs of neglect.

MOSKITO COAST.

A new station has been opened at Twappi, close to the northern boundary between the Indian reserve and Nicaraguan territory. In June last year Rev. W. H. Peper, of Karata, went to Twappi, to fix on a suitable site for the new station, and on arrival met the chief, Tumbu, who was greatly pleased to hear that his wish for a missionary was to be fulfilled, and promised to do his utmost to help in every way. About a month after Mr. Peper's return to Karata, Tumbu himself arrived there, to say that a house had been put up, and was ready for the missionary. The new pastor reports well of his flock. He had about thirty children in his school. The daily meetings were well attended, and the neighbouring Christians of Awastara, Para, and Daukra, over the border, are right glad that there is now a station so near them; formerly they had to go to Karata, which w

A MISSION TOUR IN INDIA.—6.

ALLEPIE is a town of 30,000 inhabitants, on the sea coast, thirty-three miles south of Cochin. Nearly a fourth of the people of this part of the country are professing Christians, mostly of the Syrian Church, and the London and Church Missionary Societies; there are also many Roman Catholics. There being so many different sects makes it all the more difficult for purely Protestant missions to make headway amongst the heathen; yet God has abundantly owned the labours of the London and Church Missionary Societies.

I visited the Leper Asylum with Dr. Poonen, and Rev. W. J. Richards, of the C.M.S. The lepers occupy one long shed made of matting and bamboo; there is no attempt at any flooring, the poor sufferers lying on the sand in all heir sores. There were about fifty people ltogether, of whom fourteen were lepers. There vere some truly horrible sights—sights such as need not be were the poor creatures but in a clean place, on good floors, and using some of he ordinary alleviations. There is great need or some proper place being built for these poor eople, and I do earnestly hope that Mr. Richards nay soon be able to erect the building that he as set his heart upon. The Leper Mission has lready promised a grant of Rs.750 towards this bject. The Raja of Travancore, has given Rs.500, and a few friends in India have romised other sums, so that we may hope soon o have an asylum. The lepers will then have o be separated from the other sick, and for the uture kept to themselves.

Rev. F. E. Wigram, Hon. Sec., C.M.S., isited these poor lepers when passing through llepie, and was so struck by their misery that e at once offered a donation towards the building of an asylum for them. The Mission to epers supports a catechist, under Mr. Richards, whose business it is to teach the lepers and other nmates the Word of God. This is but one of many places where we shall have to increase our ork very largely.

In Calcutta Lady Dufferin was kind enough to rant me an interview. She asked many questions, and expressed a very great interest in the ork amongst lepers. Her interest, too, is of a eal and practical kind, for she has herself isited the Leper Hospital in Madras, and also he Asylum in Dehra Doon. She said that what truck her as so very sad was the fact that children, and others in whom the disease is still only n its incipient stage are compelled to live in the sylums with those in whom it has reached its orst form. It would indeed be a boon, if the hought which was evidently running through ady Dufferin's mind could be acted upon, and rphanages might be established for the children f lepers, so as, if possible, to save them from he horrors which surround their poor afflicted arents.

The Calcutta Asylum is very well planned, the ales being on one side and the females on the her. On each side there are three wards, one r Hindus, one for Mahommedans, and one for e Christians. But there is a great deal of ercrowding, and another large ward is very gently needed. In order to build this, more ound would be necessary, and there is a piece waste land at the back of the present emises which might be obtained. Dr. Baumann, of the C.M.S., has always taken the pest interest in the spiritual welfare of the ers, and has lately, by the aid of friends in the Mission to Lepers in India, built a neat little church for the Christians to meet in. During my stay in Calcutta I had the great privilege of partaking of the Communion with the Christian lepers in this little church, and after the service was kindly allowed an opportunity of addressing the communicants.

In writing lately, Rev. J. W. Hall, C.M.S., at present in charge of the work in the asylum, says, "I may say that the work is, in my mind, a most hopeful one, and ere long I expect two more baptisms in the asylum. Oh, to hear that our loving Christ will receive and touch them, when man drives them out, is often too much for them, and his blessed words draw tears. Pray for us in our work."

TEMPERANCE IN EAST LONDON.

A JUBILEE Temperance Mission in connection with the East London Women's Christian Temperance Union was held in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, for five nights, Oct. 3 to 7. Rev. Peter Thompson presided on Monday evening, and Canon Wilberforce opened the campaign by a never-to-be-forgotten soul-stirring appeal to the thousands who had crowded to hear his eloquent words. He claimed that true science is on the side of total abstinence, which prolongs life more than all the doctors, saves more money than all the savings banks, and prevents more crime than all the Coercion Acts that have ever been passed. He urged his hearers to become total abstainers not merely for these reasons, but because the Apostle Paul said, "We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak and not to please ourselves." One of the greatest hindrances to the spread of Gospel temperance in Great Britain he held to be the cold, selfish lives of professing Christians; and they were as much to blame for the evils wrought by the liquor trade as the brewers and distillers themselves.

Rev. J. W. Horsley presided on Tuesday, when excellent addresses were given by Mr. J. Hilton, Mr. J. Raper, and Miss Haslam. On Wednesday an interesting and instructive lecture, entitled "Beer versus Bread," was delivered by Mr. A. B. Harding, and a large family loaf was cut up before the audience, who fully appreciated his various arguments and experiments.

On Thursday the meeting was presided over by Rev. T. Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Stepney, who caused great excitement by producing from his purse the sum of £6 1s. 8d., which he said he would give to anyone present who would bring him for one year the price of half a pint of beer for dinner and half a pint for supper—viz., fourpence per diem. Rev. T. Evans followed with a very earnest address. The lady speakers were Dr. Kate Mitchell (who spoke on the medical aspect of the subject) and Mrs. Dorin, whose winning words went to many a heart.

On Friday evening, the large hall being unobtainable, the smaller hall adjoining was crowded to excess, and as many more were refused admittance. Mrs. Thomas Richardson presided, and ladies only were the speakers on this closing night. The names of Mrs. Aukland, Mrs. Piper, and Mrs. Durrant are in themselves an assurance of the earnest and glowing words which fell from their lips.

This mission will long be remembered by those who attended it, and all who helped in any way to forward this grand work will surely receive their reward in the happier homes and lives of their East-end friends and neighbours. Three hundred and forty pledges were taken, and many who had signed at Mr. R. T. Booth's mission were helped and strengthened in their

NEW GUINEA.

REV. JAMES CHALMERS will ere this have arrived at New Guinea to resume his labours amongst the numerous tribes of that vast island. Whilst passing through Australia on his way thither, he had a good reception and delivered many addresses on behalf of the work. He carried in his right hand a small mustard-tin filled with earth, from which was sprouting a tiny tea plant, and over which he watched with much fondness. He is taking this plant to New Guinea and hopes in a few years to supply all the teacups of Australia from it.

Rev. W. G. Lawes, his colleague at Port Moresby, has translated the four Gospels into the New Guinea tongue, and they have been printed and given to the natives, many of whom have been taught to read. Mr. Chalmers expects that Mr. Lawes will have the whole of the New Testament ready for the printer by the end of the year. During last year, which was a very trying season, no less than thirteen of the native teachers were smitten down owing to the climate. Mr. Chalmers was to have left Sydney on September 13, accompanied by Rev. Albert Pearse and four native teachers and their wives. We trust that he may long be spared to carry on his noble work amongst the people of New Guinea.

TOILING IN THE BAHAMAS.

DEAR SIR,—This colony is only 4000 miles from England; but, as we have no telegraph, and in summer only a monthly mail, we are far from home. This Mission to the Africans was begun in 1833, when they were utterly neglected and slaves; we now number over 4000 members, and have 5000 children in Sunday-schools, 86 preaching stations, many of which have good stone chapels. During the past eight years 15 chapels have been built or are building, and 20 others repaired; the free-will offerings of the members in this representing some £5000. As these stations are scattered in ocean waters, six hundred miles long by three hundred wide, our great trouble is the necessary oversight. Thirteen native pastors chosen by the churches, minister the word, and are assisted by about 80 evangelists and elders; while the missionary visits as often as possible in the yacht A. H. Baynes, in which vessel he has voyaged 16,000 miles since it was launched in 1880.

The Methodists have a large mission, principally on islands on which white settlements were formed. The most cordial relationships exist, and we do not enter each other's field of labour.

I might mention that all reading matter for at least 10,000 persons is what I am able to obtain. The Religious Tract Society, some kind friends at home, and others I have had the happiness of knowing in America, help in this important work, but I could use one hundred times as much as I receive. Books to help our pastors, and evangelists, and Sunday-school teachers are most urgently needed all the time. I often feel very solitary alone in this great work, but the knowledge that the beloved of the Lord are praying for all his workers, cheers me at such times. Believe me that details would excite much praise to our Saviour in all hearts, if I had time, and felt your space could be used for them.—Yours faithfully,

D. WILSHERE, Baptist Missionary Society.
Nassau, New Providence, Bahamas, West Indies.

TRACTS FOR POLICEMEN.—The Religious Tract Society has recently published two excellent tracts for policemen, Nos. 250 and 552 of the "Every Week" series. Wishing that each policeman in any town should have copies, I bought fifty each, and asked the superintendent how I could best give them, when he most courteously offered to give one to each man with his wages

For the Young.

A boy ten or twelve years old costs in Madagascar just about as much as a donkey, namely, five or six pounds; while the price of a girl of the same age is about equal to that of a small pony. Every Friday, at the great market in the capital (Antanànarivo), men, women, and children of all ages may be seen exposed for sale; and intending purchasers examine them and discuss their good and bad points, and haggle over their price, just as if they were so many horses or dogs.

This slavery is the great curse of Madagascar; for I am sorry to tell you that very few indeed, even of the Christian men and women, appear to realise what a great evil it is. Many Christian masters and mistresses are no doubt kind to their slaves, and remember that they have souls to be saved, and that for them as well as for themselves Christ has died. But very many on the other hand, treat their slaves with great cruelty, and seem to regard them as no better than so many cows or sheep. Sometimes, when the poor slaves want to go to chapel on Sunday morning, the master will say: "No, slaves do not pray; your only business is to serve your master." Many, again, who take their slaves to chapel with them, only do so because they wish to be thought well off, and because they would be ashamed to go without a number of followers.

The missionaries sometimes hear very sad stories of the cruel treatment which the slaves suffer at the hands of heartless masters; and no doubt a very great deal goes on that never comes to their knowledge at all. If a slave happens to do something displeasing to his master, he will often beat him most unmercifully, sometimes so brutally that he dies from his injuries. I heard recently of a case in which a slave who had vexed his master was bound hand and foot with ropes, and then his master and mistress and their son all set upon him together; the master thrashing him with a rope, the woman pinching and slapping him, and the son kicking him. After this had continued some time, the slave could cry no longer, but became quite insensible. Then his master carried him off and locked him up in a room in the house. After two or three hours some of the neighbours, who had heard the youth's screams, becoming suspicious, came to the house to see what had happened. When the door was opened, they found the slave nearly at his last gasp. Then the master and mistress began to be alarmed lest they should be punished by the law for murder; for some onlookers sent in haste to let the chief of police know what had happened, and soon crowds of people, hearing what had taken place, collected round the house.

Presently the word of the Queen came down, saying, "If that slave dies, then the man, woman, and boy, who beat him shall die too; and, if he lives, he shall be a slave no longer, but I will set him free, to be one of my subjects." As soon as the master heard that, he was in a terrible state of alarm, and himself went for a doctor, to try and save the slave's life. The doctor, when he arrived, applied some remedies which happily were successful in bringing the poor man round.

Sometimes when a slave is disobedient, or makes a mistake in the business his master has told him to do, he will have heavy blocks of wood put on his hands and feet, and be thrust into a vile stinking hole, more offensive than those in which the cattle are penned. Here he will be half-starved for several days, until he becomes quite weak and emaciated. No wonder that slaves who are treated in this way try to take their own life. No wonder, too, that many of them run away, preferring to risk the chance of recapture or death by starvation, rather than endure the tortures to which they are subjected.

Another terrible evil connected with slavery, which, though forbidden by law, is still only too common, is the breaking up and separation of families. Indeed, the slaves often can hardly be said to know what real family life is. Their children are not their own, but belong to the owner of the mother; and of course he can do what he likes with them. Little babies not yet able to talk, and only just learning to walk, are thus cruelly separated from their mothers and carried away never to know a mother's love and care again. This is what a native friend of mine says in describing their condition:—

"Alas! the misery of these children! Nearly every day they cease not to weep, but keep up their crying continually. Sometimes they quite faint away, and have perforce to stop for a time because they can cry no longer. When they call for their mother to take them in her arms or carry them on her back, there is no one to answer them, for she is as though dead to them. Having no nurse, the little child sits helplessly all day long by the wall of the house; and sometimes the master does not feed it, and it goes about out-of-doors picking up all kinds of garbage. Many of these children die, some from hunger, and some from eating unsuitable things, and some from constant crying, and from diseases brought on through want of proper care."

Even when the mother and child live in the same neighbourhood they are sometimes not allowed to see each other. The child's mistress will not let the little one go to its mother "for fear it should be bewitched, or lest she should run away with it"; and the mother's owner will not let her go to see her child, saying, "She is always stealing the food out of the house to take to her child, and in a very short time we shall have none left at all."

Of course, the lot of all the slaves is not equally hard. Many are fairly comfortable, and not a few live with their master's children quite like members of the family. Some are allowed to come to school and learn, though these are comparatively few. The moral condition of the slave children is almost totally neglected; and they very early learn to lie and steal, and fall into all kinds of bad ways......

But some of you ask: "Where did these slaves of the Malagasy come from? How came they to be slaves? Formerly a great many negroes used to be brought over from Africa by Arab traders, and sold to the Malagasy as slaves; but I am glad to say that the British Government have succeeded in inducing the Malagasy to set these all free; and now no more can be brought into the country. Most of the little slaves whom the Hovas now hold are children or descendants of captives whom they brought to Imèrina during the time when they were at war with the outlying tribes. Very many of these were taken captive during the reign of the heathen Queen Rànavàlona I.; and dreadful stories are told of the cruelty shown by the Hovas in those wars......

It is now only among the outlying heathen tribes that the practice of making slaves of the prisoners taken in war continues; but even in Imèrina a great deal of kidnapping constantly goes on, and many men make their living by stealing or buying children and selling or exchanging them for cattle among the Sàkalàva or other tribes. Often the children thus kidnapped are already slaves, so for them the change of masters may possibly at times be for the better; but frequently Hova children are carried off and sold into slavery, and at times even in the capital children disappear mysteriously and are never heard of again......

As I have stated, very many of even the truly Christian people do not yet seem to see the evil of holding their fellow-creatures in bondage, though there have been a few cases in which slave-holders, feeling the sinfulness of the practice, have braved the opposition and ill-will of their fellow-countrymen, and set their slaves free; and there are evidently many more whose consciences are very uneasy in this matter. Will you not pray that God will in his mercy hasten the time when this terrible hindrance to the progress of the Gospel here, shall be removed? I cannot tell you all the fearful evils connected with the slavery in Madagascar, but I hope that what I have told you will be enough to raise in your hearts feelings both of sadness and thankfulness; sadness for the sufferings of the thousands of poor children who are still held in such bondage, and thankfulness to God that your lot has been cast amidst the happy surroundings of a Christian country.

"IF I CANNOT."

If I cannot be a sunbeam,
  Shining full and far,
Lighting up the earth with radiance,
  I will be a star.

If I cannot be a lighthouse,
  Gleaming out at sea,
I will be a tiny glow-worm,
  Shining cheerily.

If I cannot be a river,
  Flowing deep and strong,
I will be a merry streamlet,
  Hastening along.

If I cannot be a song bird,
  Making music sweet,
I will be a homely sparrow,
  Chirping, "Tweet, tweet, tweet!"

If I cannot be a jewel,
  Precious, rich, and rare,
I will be a crystal dewdrop,
  Sparkling, bright, and fair.

If I cannot be a rose-tree,
  Shedding fragrance sweet,
I will be a modest daisy,
  Blooming 'neath the feet.

If I cannot be a poem,
  Thrilling all who read,
I will be a thought of comfort
  Just to one in need.

LATYMER-ROAD MISSION.—An interesting gathering of nearly 200 children who have visited the Convalescent Homes at Broadwater, Lancing, and Ramsgate during the past few years took place on Wednesday evening last week, at the mission-room, Blechynden-street, Notting Hill. A number of the parents were also present. The object of the meeting was to revive and deepen the good impressions received at the Homes, and it is hoped that the means employed may in many cases have had the desired effect.

CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL, JERUSALEM.—Dea Sir,—A useful and unpretending work among sic children in Jerusalem has for twenty years bee carried on by Dr. Sandreczka. In the report o the "Marienstift" for last year, I find that 154 in patients received the individual care of the goo doctor and his wife. This is a work that ha hitherto been carried on by the united help o English and Germans, and we must still look fo the practical sympathy of friends in England. A one who, by a five years' residence in Jerusalem has learned to love the children of Palestine dearly as the children of our own loved Englan may I ask for some much-needed help for this wor

SUBJECTS FOR CONSIDERATION :—

I. How to influence for good the Mothers of the neglected classes.
II. How to induce Domestic Servants to attach themselves to respectable Servants' Homes, so as to secure them respectable lodgings when out of situation.

Mrs. Frank Bevan will (D.V.) give an Address to Workers at the close of the Conference.

Friends attending these Conferences are most earnestly asked to take part in the discussions, in order that all may profit by the varied experiences of each other.

"Sacred Songs and Solos" will be used at each of the meetings.

This Conference is convened under the direction of the Committee of the "London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution," in the hope of increasing the effectiveness of all organisations designed to protect virtuous girls, and reclaim the erring from the paths of destruction.

SCRIPTURAL PROOFS

OF FULL SALVATION FROM SIN.

Extracts from a few of very many Letters :—

"I thank you a hundred times."——"I cannot tell you how much God has blessed them to me. It was just what my soul was longing for."——"I am doing all I can to circulate them; for they are so clear and convincing from the Word, that we possess in our Saviour, not only pardon for past sin, but cleansing from indwelling sin."——"I have had a fresh revelation of what Jesus is to me in His capacity of Saviour, and I have been able to grasp Him in a fuller and more comprehensive faith as my Deliverer from indwelling sin; and that on the truth of the living God, as shown so clearly in your little book."——"Glory be to God! it has made a new man of me. . . . . Through its instrumentality I consciously stand upon the promises as I have never done before. I used to struggle against temptation mightily, and many a time I thought I could not hold out much longer. Now I see it—I simply look to Jesus."

The book may be obtained through any bookseller; or, in case of difficulty, by writing to the under-noted address, sending 2s., or less if not able to send so much, or without money if not able to send any.

The "Letter to the Rev. Robert Dawson," 40 pages in paper cover, to which the "Scriptural Proofs" are a sequel, may also be obtained by so writing, sending fourpence, or without money. "The highest-toned piece of controversial writing it was ever our lot to read."—Divine Life.

THE ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS, EARLSWOOD, REDHILL, Surrey. Instituted October 27, 1847, for the care and education of the Idiot and Imbecile, especially in the earlier periods of life. THE AUTUMNAL ELECTION of this Charity will occur on Thursday, the 27th instant, at the Cannon-street Hotel, E.C., for the purpose of choosing thirty-five applicants for the ordinary period of five years, from a list of one hundred and forty approved candidates, without prejudice to scrutiny. The Poll will commence at 12, and close at 2 o'clock precisely. H. GERARD HOARE, Esq. (Treasurer), in the chair.

While congratulating the subscribers upon the support the Charity still continues to receive, the Board regret some falling off in the donations, and they earnestly suggest that ministers should preach and make collections in the various churches, especially in those localities where there are candidates. This would benefit the candidates, and materially increase the funds of the Charity.—JAMES DOWNING, Secretary, Offices, 36, King William-street, London-bridge, E.C.

Enlargement of
THE QUIVER.

THE EDITOR of The Quiver has much pleasure in announcing that with the First Part of the New Volume (published on October 26, 1887) a New and Permanently Enlarged Series will be commenced, the price remaining the same as heretofore, viz., Sixpence monthly. The quantity of letterpress will be increased from 64 to 80 pages per month, and the Magazine will in addition be printed on paper of improved quality, specially manufactured for the purpose, in new type selected for its clear and legible character.

The additional pages will be utilised not only to strengthen and develop the various departments which have always been included in this popular Magazine for Sunday and General reading, but to add kindred features of new and varied attractiveness. The RELIGIOUS and INSTRUCTIVE PAPERS, ever characterised by a devout yet bright and cheerful spirit; the SERIAL and COMPLETE STORIES, conveying in that form of narrative which has the highest sanction wholesome and stimulating teaching to young and old; the RECORDS of HEROIC or HUMBLE WORK done for God in every department of Christian enterprise; the GRAPHIC SKETCHES of current events of interest to all branches of the Church of Christ at home and abroad; the LESSONS and STORIES for THE YOUNG,—these and the many other features with which readers of The Quiver have been so long familiar, will be continued on a scale proportioned to the increased space which the Editor can now command.

While The Quiver will thus continue to run on "the old lines," it will advance upon those lines with a new impetus and increased energy. It will be the Editor's earnest endeavour to maintain this Magazine in every department on the same principles which have made The Quiver what it is, and what he trusts it will be in a still larger range of usefulness—a steadfast witness for the teaching and work of the Gospel, a sustaining and inspiring influence in the home, and an interesting and cheerful companion for every member of the family.

Having this object before him, the Editor confidently appeals to all those who are interested in the spread of sound and healthful literature to assist him in making The Quiver, if possible, still more widely known wherever the English language is spoken.

Prospectuses of the New and Enlarged Series of The Quiver will be sent post free, in any number desired, for distribution, on application to the publishers.

THE BIBLE FOR MAN.

In a recent circular in connection with the work of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures, Mrs. Robertson, 1, Oak Hill-park, Hampstead, writes:—

"The words of eternal life have been given to us; dare we any longer withhold them from the millions who are passing away into eternity, without ever having seen the word of God? Multitudes amongst the nations of Europe, and of the inhabitants of India, China, South America, and other countries, most gladly accept the gift of a Bible, a New Testament, or a Gospel, and we have abundant testimony that they read it and value it. Every human being needs to hear the voice of God, and unless 'The Book' is given freely, myriads will never even know of its existence. How solemn to think of the millions going down to the silence of the grave, and to the awful awakening of eternity, ignorant of the true God and of 'his Christ.'"

Among many testimonies to the value of this work of free distribution we quote the following:—

"Asia Minor.—When it was heard that I was distributing the Word of God without money, the people began to run to me as a thirsty flock of sheep run to a fountain of water. The poor men, women, and children receive it with unspeakable joy, and press it to their heart as the most precious treasure that they can ever get in the world. The fruit of this work began to appear immediately."

"Mexico.—When I was engaged in selling the Scriptures, it was a very frequent experience to lose Bibles, they being torn or otherwise destroyed. On some occasions whole boxes were burned by town authorities. But since I have been freely giving the glad message, all that has entirely ceased. The Bible as a gift escapes the ill-treatment which sold Bibles so frequently meet with. It will interest you to know that God has honoured his Word so much in one of our Indian villages, that two thirds of the whole village have been converted by your free gift Scriptures."

"Nicaragua.—After giving away a few, the demand for Bibles and Testaments was enormous. So much so, that we were quite besieged by clamorous applicants for the Word of God. In a few days we have given away nearly the whole number. At every cottage door, since the distribution, one of the inmates may be seen sitting with two or more about, reading aloud to attentive listeners." In a previous letter, a most deplorable account was given of the people in the Gold Mines here, composed of different nationalities, without any one to guide them into the way of Life.

"Russia.—At each distribution I am more and more astonished at the great numbers of people who come to ask for them. Several officers asked me for them for the soldiers, but I am always short; now that Russia is so sorely tried God has opened a way for his own Word, that it may bring into this great nation the true light. They are not allowed to hear the Gospel, and the Book is the only way of reaching these poor fellows. Your labours are greatly owned by God, and appreciated by the people of this land."

"Persia.—I can tell you that there is no such blessed work as this. I wish you could really see the heart-melting sights, the great anxiety to receive the Holy Book. I visited ten villages; many on receiving it shed tears, kissing their dear Book. Some came fifteen or sixteen miles for one book, amidst the perils of our country, notwithstanding cold and ice. Some of the copies were carried away to Russia, for many have gone there to escape hardships here."

LIVERPOOL.—In connection with the Church of England a mission among the slums of this great city is carried on under the name of "The Mission of Love." A recent quarterly report gives details of relief supplied to the poor, and of conversions met with by the workers. There are three mission

MOVEMENTS IN NORWAY.

As a very earnest religious movement is going on in some parts of Norway, I hope it may interest your readers to hear a little about it. A few years ago we had a great political struggle, during which the clergy opposed the victorious Liberal movement, and by so doing lost much of their old influence and power. After this struggle a revival of religion and a great hunger for the Gospel of Jesus manifested itself at different parts, and many souls were saved.

Together with this awakening a yearning for uniting believers has been increasingly felt. At Christiania a local Christian Alliance was formed this summer of members from all the different denominations there; the object was the salvation of sinners and the union of Christians.

Outdoor services were begun about Whitsuntide in different parts of the town, and it pleased the Lord to bless our humble labours; at almost every meeting we have been privileged to lead souls to Jesus. As the cold weather comes on our outdoor services have had to be broken up, but we have been enabled to rent a hall at one part of the town. If more means was at our disposal we would get one or two other buildings at other parts for our winter campaign.

Christiania. G. Hubert.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN.

This talented lecturer has commenced her third series of lectures on Eastern Life and Customs, her subjects being, "The Homes and Haunts of Jesus," "City Life in Jerusalem," "The Bedouins of the Desert," "The Jews in Jerusalem," and a new one—"Jacob and his Wanderings."

Particular interest attaches to the last-named on account of the very different opinion which Miss von Finkelstein holds of the patriarch to that maintained by most Bible-readers. Naturally she views his character from a purely Oriental standpoint, and many features of his career which, to a Western mind, seem incompatible with the principles of morality and godliness, to her present no difficulty whatever. Familiar as she is with the native customs, she only recognises acts of everyday Eastern life in the events with which Jacob is identified. Her explanations are certainly fresh and plausible, but their very freshness will, we fear, occasion doubts in some minds as to their credibility. But this may only arise from prejudice, which certainly should have no place in Bible-study, and we therefore advise our readers to go and listen for themselves. They cannot fail to be interested and edified, and we hope that the bold stand which the lecturer takes against sceptical and infidel objections to Bible narratives will accomplish the desired end.

As an example of her method of treating the history, we may quote in brief her remarks on the question of the barter of Esau's birthright. "And Jacob sod pottage." To us Occidentals the words convey little meaning. To the Orientals they tell quite a story. They imply that the occasion was one of a funeral, or of the anniversary of the death of one of the family. It was the elder brother's duty on that day, as priest of the family, to fast from sunrise to sunset, and then to eat only a "mess of pottage" of red lentils. It was the younger son's duty to prepare this dish, while during the day the whole family, as part of the religious ceremonies of the day, were required to take no other food. When Esau, having already desecrated the day by hunting, determined to break the rule, he was guilty of an act of profanity, of gross disrespect for a most binding custom, and Jacob's offer to assume the elder brother's place was an act of piety. The gain on his part was purely honorary, the duties he assumed were many and irksome. In thus selling his birthright, according to Eastern custom Esau sold his very name. From that moment Jacob was the elder, and was entitled even to adopt the elder brother's name.

Apart from this question of interpretation, the lecture, with its graphic and vivid presentation of Eastern life, is eminently interesting and

FOREIGN EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

This Society is doing a large work in France and other continental countries by aiding many of the evangelical missions there established. In this way last year upwards of £700 was disbursed, this beneficent stream fertilising such widely different fields of labour as Rev. R. W. McAll's mission in Paris and scattered missions in Spain, Portugal, and Belgium. The committee express their regret that the interests of God's kingdom on the Continent occupy so small a portion of the attention of the English public. Their aim is to give help where it is most needed, but many causes are left unaided for want of funds.

The many accounts of most fruitful and blessed work amongst the sick, in distributing the Scriptures, and in other forms of evangelistic effort amongst all classes of people, contained in the fourteenth annual report of the Society, make the pamphlet one of great interest, that should quicken the sympathies of Christ's people on behalf of those so near who are still without the Gospel, and of those who are striving amidst many difficulties to give to them this message from God to man. Communications should be addressed to the hon. sec , Rev. Horace Noel, Woking, Surrey.

TEMPERANCE MISSION, HIGHBURY.

A Gospel Temperance Mission has been concluded at Highbury and Lower Holloway. The meetings commenced on Saturday, Sept. 24, and continued until Tuesday, Oct. 11. Mr. William Noble conducted the mission, which produced upwards of 2000 pledges. On examining the roll it is highly satisfactory to find that in many cases whole families have signed together. In one case we find that the father of a grown-up family came on the opening night; ultimately he brought the whole of his children to the mission, and they all signed. A member of a leading church in the district and a moderate drinker, he had not seen his responsibility in the matter; but on hearing an address from Mr. Noble on "Weights and Sins," he became convinced that the drink was a "weight," and determined henceforward to run the Christian course without this impediment.

We can understand the success of the mission when we find the motive power that was at the back of it. Each day a prayer-meeting was held always led by one of the clergy or ministers of the districts. The result of this consecration to the work was shown in the evening meetings by the deep spiritual tone that pervaded them. On one of the Sunday afternoon meetings the temperance work was set aside for a season, save that any could sign the pledge, and Christ alone was preached. It was a wet afternoon, and yet the tent was nearly full. Dr. Miller and Mr. Noble addressed the meeting, and nearly all remained to the close, when a large number rose for prayer. We saw many in tears, and during the interval of silent prayer a deep solemnity pervaded the assemblage.

Special meetings for women and children were held also, and were equally successful with the nightly efforts. No children were allowed to sign unless they brought a certificate given to the parents at the nightly meetings for the purpose of being filled in.

The closing meeting was held on October 11, Mr. W. J. Palmer, J,P., of Reading, presiding. The proceedings were of the most enthuiastic character and fittingly closed the eighteen days' sterling effort. Mr. Noble pledged the audience by a vote to assist in an extended effort which is contemplated in the North of London. Mr. Noble expects to undertake several other extended misions before entering on this project. A committee has been formed for systematic visitation amongst those who have been influenced

EVANGELISATION IN GERMANY.

The strong appeal of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, referred to in your columns some time ago, urging English Christians to join Dr. Ziemann in his labours in Germany has as yet met with little response. Apart from the greater interest which—naturally perhaps—the friends of missions take in distant heathen lands, there is no denying that, as far as our own Continent is concerned, Italy, Spain, Russia, Sweden, and France occupy positions of greater importance amongst English Christians than our great German empire. We are convinced that nothing but ignorance of the real facts can be the reason of this seeming indifference. Our English friends are apt to think the "land of Luther" amply provided with the means of grace, with churches, with churchmen out of the school of Tholuck, and they are wanting in opportunities of looking deeper and learning the truth.

"Our German Christians are fast dropping back into heathendom," said a German leader of the evangelical party the other day at some Conference. "We must be up and doing before it is too late to stem the tide of indifference and socialism." These words of an earnest layman find their echo in the heart of a good many of the clergy, while the greater part of them, alas, rest satisfied with the actual state of affairs, little heeding their empty churches and the utter spiritual deadness of their congregations, or, at the most, content with their list of communicants showing a slight increase of numbers; and even a great many of the most evangelical men in the State Church are far more eager in opposing any sign of what they deem "a sectarian tendency, than in attempting to arouse the sleepers."

And yet, if only right means are used, it is still possible to reach the masses in Germany. There exists still in many parts a hunger and thirst after true Gospel food, such has been proved through the labours of Von Schluembach, Schrenck, and Dr. Ziemann. The last-named brother has just finished a four months' mission tour in Germany, and many secular papers testify to the eager attention and interest shown in such large centres of manufacturing populations, as Essen, Crefeld, Barmen, Elberfeld, and Hamburg, where thousands of listeners packed the halls night by night. We read that in Hamburg over four thousand men were present, and gave to Dr. Ziemann's appeals an enthusiastic response. What a pity that such a work should be carried on single handed. The hope for Germany is that free men will dare come out in the name of the Lord and preach the Gospel without being hampered by the decrees of Synods, or by application to the half-hearted and oft-repeated permission of church functionaries. A platform should be created for undenominational Gospel work in Germany.

There are amongst us men who could be gained for this work, but they are wanting in courage and wanting in means. Who of German-speaking English brethren will come and teach them how to overcome their timidity? Who of those to whom the Master has entrusted his gold and silver will give a little of it to the furtherance of this great cause. The following up of a mission by placing evangelists where a work is commenced, by the gift of a Bible-carriage, where the spread of God's truth is so needful—are there no English hearts warm enough towards their German brethren who would respond to their call? "Thy kingdom come" is a prayer offered for Germany surely as well as for any district in the Congo. Surgeon-Major Latchford, Medical Staff, Aldershot, would give particulars.

THE PRAYER UNION for the conversion of parents, brothers, and sisters, is now three years old. Full particulars may be obtained by enclosing stamped, directed envelope to either of the hon. secretaries, Mrs. E. W. Nottidge, Hill Lodge, Willoughby-road, Ipswich; Miss Bradshaw, Clontarf Rectory, Dublin.

LIGHT IN DARK PLACES.

Miss Sophia Burgess writes from Liévin, France, that the work of evangelisation among the coal miners there increases in interest. Meetings have been held in the cottages and mission-halls, and on every occasion have been crowded by eager listeners. The depth and reality of the work in the hearts of the men have been tested, and have not been found wanting. The pastor at Hersin (M. Ducros) and the evangelist at Liévin (M. Bion) have been enabled to "scatter the coals of fire" over the surrounding districts, and fresh mission stations are springing up over the vast plain, which lies not more than fifty miles away from our own shores, in the north of France.

A further acquaintance with this most interesting work, supported by one of the French evangelisation societies (the Société du Nord), and assisted by the Foreign Aid Society, cannot fail to interest English Christians. Miss Burgess would be glad to give full details of her recent personal observation of the work to any friends who would kindly lend their drawing-room for the purpose. Her address is 7, Christchurch-road, Hampstead, N.W.

RECRUITS for the FOREIGN FIELD.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The valedictory dismissal of twenty-six missionaries last week, says The Record, will not soon be forgotten. A careful calculation showed that the numbers present in St. James's Hall could not have been less than 1,100. Sir John Kennaway, in the chair, in a very happy sentence drew a parallel between the departure of troopships or of great liners with their passengers going out in the service of their country, or of commerce, or of pleasure, and the sending forth of the missionary band then present. The more general instructions of the committee were delivered by Rev. F. E. Wigram. Mr. Stock, in making some announcements, noticed, as a singular proof of the activity now shown in our own missionary circles, that one firm of shipping agents alone had engaged for the accommodation of missionaries seventy-seven berths in vessels outward-bound in October and November. The following is a list of the missionaries dismissed:—

The Rev. T. Harding proceeding to the Yoruba country; the Rev. F. G. and Mrs. Macartney, the Rev. H. A. and Mrs. Bren, and the Rev. W. C. Whiteside to Western India; the Rev. B. Davis, the Rev. A. I. Birkett, the Rev. H. Brown, and the Rev. E. T. Butler to North India; the Rev. H. G. Grey, the Rev. G. Papprill, the Rev. W. E. Davies, and Miss L. Ellwanger to the Punjab; the Rev. T. and Mrs. Kember, the Rev. H. W. and Mrs. Eales, the Rev. C. E. R. Romilly, the Rev. H. J. Tanner, the Rev. L. W. Jackson, and the Rev. E. S. Carr to South India; the Rev. H. and Mrs. Horsley, to Ceylon; the Rev. Ll. and Mrs. Lloyd, the Rev. A. R. Fuller, the Rev. J. S. Collins, the Rev. C. J. F. S. and Mrs. Symons, Miss M. Vaughan, and Miss E. Goldie to China.

Short and stirring addresses were delivered by Mr. Harding, Mr. Davis, Mr. Macartney, Mr. Kember, Mr. Horsley, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Grey, Mr. Romilly, Mr. Carr, Mr. Collins, and Mr. Jackson. The Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Durham, and Dublin were all represented—Cambridge sending five men. Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe dwelt with his customary eloquence and wealth of Scriptural illustration upon the principles of self-sacrifice.

SOUTH ESSEX.—On Saturday, Oct. 8, a dedication service in connection with the South Essex Children's Aid and Protection Association, was held at the New Boys' Home, Portway, West Ham, Essex. One hundred boys will be received as funds permit. The Home is open for inspection daily. Books and text-cards will be thankfully received by Mr. Dorrington, Secretary at the Home.

CASUALS AT GRAY'S YARD.

Dear Sir,—As you know, one of the most painfully interesting sights in London is the crowd of poor, broken-down, aged, or unemployed men, who flock from the casual wards or the lodging-houses, from the Thames Embankment or the parks, to the free breakfast at Gray's Yard on Sunday morning. It is now four years since we felt the absolute necessity of finding enlarged premises for the "Ragged Church," and the work among the casuals. Many friends who would have rendered efficient help have been compelled, reluctantly, to give up coming to the overcrowded and badly-ventilated rooms in which the services are held, being unable to bear the ill effects of the atmosphere; and those who still continue Sunday after Sunday to labour among these poor outcasts often suffer severely in health. The work has increased much of late, and for many weeks, although every available space has been filled, numbers have been unable to obtain admittance. Over six hundred every Sunday have the Gospel preached to them, and we have been allowed already to see much blessing resulting from it; but we look forward to the time of the ingathering of the harvest, when it will be seen that seed sown in weakness at Gray's Yard has indeed borne fruit "to the praise of his glory."

It would take too long to tell of all the schemes that have been thought of during the last four years, either for enlarging the present premises or procuring a new site, but we have worked and watched, waiting for the pillar of cloud to move, and for the direction to be given to "Go forward," and at last there is a prospect of our gaining our desire.

A freehold property, which is well suited to our purpose, has been secured at the cost of £6000, towards which £4300 has been collected. Last week the purchase-money had to be paid, and the deficiency borrowed. The sum of £1700 still is needed, and until this loan is paid the property is comparatively useless, for it will cost £2000 more (towards which £300 has been promised) to erect the required building, and it is not felt advisable to commence it until the purchase-money has been raised.

This enterprise has not been undertaken without much prayer for guidance, and we feel sure that having made our way plain, and shown that this is his will concerning the work, the Lord will also incline the hearts of his people to supply our need. The treasurer for the Building Fund is Dr. Habershon, 70, Brook-street, Grosvenor-square, W., and I should be most happy to supply any further particulars.—Yours faithfully,

(Miss) Ada R. Habershon.

70, Brook-street. W.

[All who belong to the comfortable classes, if they observe and reflect on the seething, heaving, groaning life around them, must feel that to ladies like Miss Habershon and her sister, and all the Christian men and women who follow the example of the Saviour, in going about doing good, they owe to a large extent their uninterrupted and undisturbed comfort. There are thousands on thousands to whom life is a slow martyrdom, who have no apparent reason to cling to life, except it be the fear of death. Society owes to these unhappy beings pity and kindness, love and help. Very few pay the debt in kind. All the more, therefore, are we under obligation to those who supply our lack of service. We wish there were no need of a new building, with larger accommodation; but it is clear that the words spoken to Israel apply to England, "The poor shall never cease out of the land." While, therefore, others give the personal service with ungrudging, self-devoting love, it is a small thing that the comfortable and enjoying classes should supply the building. But they won't. Those who give themselves must give their belongings also, and God will welcome them with, "Well done, good and faithful servants; ye have been faithful over a few things, I will make you rulers over many things: enter ye into the joy of your Lord." The reward will abundantly overpay the service rendered.—Ed.]

PORT SAID.—Mr. G. A. Eoll, the missonary here, writes:—The new meeting-room has on the whole been well attended since we opened it in April this year. At times the Gospel has been preached in four, five, or six languages to a listening audience. We cannot speak of any visible blessing as yet. My fellow-labourer, Mr. Francombe, succeeds very well in getting in the English sailors to our usual metings. We are still trusting to receive help towards the building, for which nothing has come in of late.

SUMMER SERVICES at the SEASIDE.

Many readers have probably been delighted during the past summer by the services held on sand and beach by the Children's Special Service Mission. Last Thursday afternoon and evening Exeter Hall (lower) was crowded by friends interested in the work, Rev. E. A. Stuart presiding at both gatherings.

In the afternoon, Mr. H. Hutchinson spoke of good work at Bridlington, where, he believed, the secret of success had been the grand prayer-meetings. Not only had many evidences been granted of blessing, but Sunday-school teachers and other workers had gone back to their respective spheres with fresh determination to seek the conversion of the children.

Mr. Josiah Spiers, in his animated and vivid style, told of experiences at Redcar and Dover, and of many tokens, both among old and young, that the labour was not in vain. At present, however, he was specially interested in the Children's Foreign Branch, which is now issuing illustrated leaflets and papers in forty-two languages, while more are in preparation. In aid of this branch a sale of work is to be held on December 7 and 8, in St. Paul's (Church House, Clareville-grove, South Kensington), and he trusted many friends would co-operate by making and sending useful and fancy articles.

Mr. George Banaster told of work at Llandudno, Rhyl, and Bournemouth. He had no novelties to announce. It was the old-fashioned Gospel they declared—only they sought so to present it that the children might be attracted.

Mr. H. M. Trickett thanked God for what he had seen at Eastbourne. Some, he believed, were inclined to inquire as to the stability of the work; well, he could tell, and other workers could tell, of many who, as children, professed in past years conversion, who were now serving the Lord in various ways at home and abroad, and not a few had helped, this year, at the seaside.

The Chairman said that, having taken Sunday duty, for a time, at Bridlington, he had exceptional opportunities of gauging the reality of the work. Since his return to London he had received many letters from various parts of the land, bearing testimony that the work was not in vain. He had rejoiced to find how heartily the clergy were co-operating, not only at Bridlington, but elsewhere. Here it may be noted that many of the speakers gave utterance to the same thankfulness—in many places the clergy, ministers, and residents have rendered valuable aid. Mr. Stuart concluded with a few pointed thoughts on the responsibilities of parents and teachers, for the mission, he urged, in no way seeks to occupy the parents' responsible place.

A delightful and cheering testimony followed by Miss Florence Ellis, one of the ladies going this week with the C.I.M. party to China. Some ten years ago, when a school girl, she attended services held by Mr. H. W. Figgis, of Dublin, on the beach at Rhyl, which, under God, were the means of leading her to the Saviour.

In the evening Mr. T. B. Bishop (hon. sec.) spoke of services conducted by a former home worker), for children at Bombay; and of a young lady who used to attend the services at Llandudno, who is now doing a good work in South America. Both at Buenos Ayres and Monte Video she has been able to start branches of the Children's Scripture Union, and at the latter place it was now proposed to build a hall for the children's meetings.

After an address by the Chairman on lessons from the rising of Jairus's daughter, interesting details were given by Messrs. E. T. M. Denness of work at Whitby, and E. Salisbury of services at Bournemouth.

Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith said he had been much stirred by what had been told of that young lady in South America. She wanted to build a hall, and he thought many would be glad to have a share in it. He would give a sovereign if nine others would do the same; and then twenty others might give a half sovereign each. pounds contributed to cheer this far-off labourer for the children.

Then came further accounts of work at Scarborough, Llandudno, Worthing, Southsea, Eastbourne, and Elie on the Fifeshire Coast, given by Messrs. Arrowsmith, C. H. Nash, Gibbard Hughes, Martin J. Hall, C. F. H. Battersby, and the Hon. W. G. Scott. The facts and incidents mentioned afforded abundant proof that God is pleased to bless these seaside services in a very marked manner.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS IN AMERICA.

The second convention of Christian Workers of the United States and Canada was opened in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, Sept. 21, and continued a week. Every form of city missionary work was represented and discussed. The work of the convention consisted of reports of missions and other Christian work, papers on plans and methods, and brief addresses by the delegates.

The music was under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. George C. Stebbins, and Mr. Sankey assisted at one of the sessions.

No comprehensive account of the conference has reached us, but the outline reports in our New York contemporaries indicate that a great many live topics bearing on Christian work were considered. In the course of a discussion on "Ministerial Training," Dr. George F. Pentecost made a short address, in which he stated that it took young ministers two or three years to unlearn what they learned in the seminaries before they could begin to learn how to do practical missionary work. He advocated more practical training in the seminaries.

Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, delivered an address on the "Ideal Church for the People." The ideal church, in his opinion, was the Evangelical Church. It should be educational also. The Church had always made a great mistake in reaching toward the higher society and leaving the lowest grade to sink still farther. The only way of reaching the lower classes was by preaching to them the simple unmixed Gospel of Jesus Christ. "We want a purer faith in the power of the Gospel. There is too great a tendency on the part of many ministers to give eloquent sermons on scientific, political, and religious subjects, but there is very little of the Gospel in those sermons." Dr. Pierson advocated free pews in the churches. He thought that the high-salaried ministers and the high-priced choir very often kept the poorer classes away from the church. A great obstacle in the way of reaching the masses is the "caste" which exists in society.

Miss Etta Clark, who is connected with the Bible and Fruit Mission in this city, gave an account of her work in reaching strange young women who come to New York City. She stated that she had tickets in the hands of the policemen and porters around the depôts. When a strange young woman inquired of these persons for a place to stop, they were handed one of these cards and they came to her. She always directed them to a reliable boarding-house or a home. She related several cases where young women were saved from ruin through the agency of the Mission.

Rev. H. A. Schauffler, of Cleveland, gave an interesting talk on "Our Foreign Mission Field at Home." He considers rum and Romanism the greatest hindrances to missionary work among the immigrant population.

RESCUE WORK AT BRIGHTON.—The thirty-second annual report of Albion Hill Home, Brighton, for young women, states that the number received last year (103) was considerably above the average, a significant fact when in almost the next paragraph we are informed that the income was nearly £800 less than in the previous year. The conduct of the inmates has generally been most satisfactory; twenty-seven have gone into service, while nineteen have been restored to their friends. Many cases of conversion and of happy lives spent after their period of probation have been reported. The chaplain and secretary is Rev. R. C. Macdonald, to whom, at the Home, communi-

GOSPEL WORK IN GREECE.

Dear Sir,—Kindly allow me to give you a short account of my work here. I am a German governess. Seven years ago, whilst engaged as a governess in a Christian family in England, I was brought to the Saviour.

I came to Greece for my health, and at Athens made the acquaintance of Dr. Kalopothakes, who asked me to take up a Christian work in Piræus amongst the sailors, which I very willingly agreed to do. In the morning I give private lessons, and in the afternoon I am at my mission work. I have been here since May last, and during that time have visited more than eighty vessels, distributed about 2000 tracts, Gospels, Bibles, and some copies of The Christian. I have an English Sunday-school with my pupils, and a Greek one is held in my room by a young Greek governess who comes every Sunday from Athens.

Any Gospel papers and tracts would be most welcome for distribution amongst the sailors.

Letters can be sent to me here or to the care of Dr. Kalopothakes, Athens.—Yours truly, Piræus, Greece. Louise Lierhammer.

GERMAN BAPTIST MISSION.

Very cheering accounts of this Mission founded by Pastor Oncken at Hamburg are given in the current Quarterly Reporter, published by the Baptist Tract Society. In Hamburg the church is flourishing, and there is abundant evidence, both in the well-attended meetings on Sundays and week days, and in the number of conversions during the year, that the Spirit of the Lord is with his people. Of the sixty-three who were baptized, twenty-three were from the ranks of the Sunday-school in which three hundred children are taught every Lord's day, and the value of which is thus demonstrated. Happily, the work now has the sanction of the authorities, whereas the labours of its first founders were rewarded with imprisonment. In Hamburg, also, there has for some years been a Pastors' College, and to mark the erection of a permanent building for which a suitable site has been secured, and various churches have contributed £2000.

The field for labour covered by this Mission is a remarkably extended one. Its missionaries and colporteurs are to be found, not only in many places in Germany, but in Austria, Hungary, and Bohemia, in Russia, even to the Crimea, and in Bulgaria. In this vast field there are 165 churches and 1273 stations, with about 34,000 members, and 19,000 Sunday scholars. The amount contributed last year for benevolent objects was £19,000.

Besides satisfactory reports of the work in Hanover and Königsberg, an interesting account is given of a missionary visit to Poland, and of the laying of the foundation-stone of a new church at Riga.

All information can be obtained of Rev. F. H. Newton, Secretary, 11, Bismarck-road, Highgate-hill, N.

SOUTH AMERICA.—Mrs. Carlisle, 8, Falkner-street, Liverpool, writes:—A few months ago, being in Buenos Ayres, and Monte Video, South America, my daughter and I started branches of "The Children's Scripture Union" in the two places. At the former there are now over 160 members. At Monte Video the work is spreading wonderfully, especially amongst those speaking Spanish. In Buenos Ayres, a very large and important city, with many English residents, there are churches and chapels, with halls or schools attached, in which the meetings for the children and their friends can be held. Monte Video is a small town, with only two Protestant places of worship, and there is absolutely no public room or hall available. My daughter, who is still there, is most anxious to have, if possible, a hall built, to be used principally for work in connection with the "Scripture Union" and "Children's Special

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Miss C. Mason, of the Kilburn House of Rest.

We hope our correspondents will keep their pens from the now fashionable barbarism of dividing the infinitive mood with an adverb, and writing, e.g., "to properly consider," "to fairly use," "to entirely misinterpret," instead of "properly to consider," "fairly to use," "entirely to misinterpret." Or the adverb may be placed after the verb; but it is not "English undefiled" to dislocate the verb and to interpose the adverb between its severed members.

In connection with the newly-published volume of Thackeray's letters, we may refer to one of a very interesting kind which is to be found in full in a book not now frequently met with, the Life of Rev. J. Sortain, of Brighton, the then minister of the chapel where at present Rev. J. B. Figgis officiates. In the course of the letter the novelist says:—

> I want to say in my way that love and truth are the greatest of Heaven's commandments and blessings to us: that the best of us, especially those who pride themselves on their virtues most, are wretchedly weak, vain, and selfish. . . . I hope men of my profession do no harm who talk this doctrine out of doors to people in drawing-rooms and in the world. Your duty in church takes them a step higher, that awful step beyond Ethics, which leads you up to God's revealed truth. What a tremendous responsibility his who has that mystery to explain! What a boon the faith which makes it clear to him!

It does not appear that Mr. Thackeray and Mr. Sortain were acquainted, but it is recorded that he occasionally attended Lady Huntingdon's Chapel in Brighton.

A very lively little branch of the Y.M.C.A. was formed about a year ago at Westbourne (a suburb of Bournemouth). It prospers under the leadership of its hon. sec, Mr. A. W. Ostler, and a likeminded committee. A tent was obtained during the summer, in which nightly meetings were held, with good results, until the wind and weather rose up against it. At the meeting for the inauguration of the winter campaign, the hon. sec. gave the following pithy and compact account of the Gospel tent: "We prayed for it, purchased, and paid for it; pitched it, packed it, and preached in it; patched it when torn, and when blown down picked it up; praised God for it, and put it away."

England may well go into sackcloth and ashes on account of the bestial lives of some of her representatives on either side of each of the Houses of Legislature, and their hideous equality in pollution. Last year's lower depth on one side of the House of Commons has not been outfathomed by the recent horror on the other. Any institution is in evil case when a journalist, apologising for one of its members, can exclaim—"What absurd nonsense it is to demand the elimination of a man from such a House, for a moral peccadillo!"

To blast the life of a dead wife's stepdaughter is, according to a Conservative Society journal, "a moral peccadillo,"—according to a Radical ditto ditto, "a domestic peccadillo"—in either case a little doubtless describe the embezzlement of money not as a peccadillo, but a crime. We need not go farther than Shakspere for a sounder conception of morality:

> Who steals my purse steals trash:
> But he that filches from me my good name,
> Robs me of that which not enriches him,
> But makes me poor indeed.

We commend the following passage from Dr. Parker's People's Bible (vol. vii., just issued) to The Pall Mall Gazette and some of its correspondents:—

> We fear that some are making distinctions which in the long run will be found to be not only foolish, but immoral and destructive. Do we not hear now and then some persons making a distinction between what they term abstract right and practical right? When the abstract right is trifled with, the practical right must sooner or later be thrown down. If any scheme of politics, education, government, social regeneration, is not metaphysically right, it never can be practically right in the long run. It may be expedient; it may be apparently right; it may do a little useful work for the time being; but if we are wrong at the centre, wrong in the highest metaphysical thinking, the outcome of our work will prove itself a failure.

"The moral revival of to-day," however, is said to be setting up "a standard for public life which is not one of absolute and stainless purity...We are not all spotless, but neither are we all quite vile." Accordingly a line is drawn below "ordinary immorality," but above profligacy "plus deception and cruelty." This is like telling a man who has fallen half-way down a precipice to hang on by his nails and teeth and eyelids to the lichen upon the rock. "Deception and cruelty" are essential accompaniments of vice. No man can stand in the middle of the incline, at the half-way house of "ordinary immorality." He is never safe from the opportunity which may rush him down to the depths of extraordinary wickedness, and make him a "conspicuously bad example."

One of the subtlest perils of the time is a humanitarianism without Christ, a philanthropy without God, a spurious morality sufficient to enable society to move on comfortably, with no fear of God before their eyes. It will not do. God will blow upon it. "My soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly mine honour be not thou united." How different is God's philanthropy! When the kindness of God our Saviour and his love towards man (lit. his philanthropy) appeared, not by works done in righteousness which we did ourselves, but according to his mercy He saved us, through the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost, which He poured on us richly through Jesus Christ our Saviour" (Titus iii. 4—6).

The Divorce Bill lately passed by the New South Wales legislature has, owing to the principle involved, an interest on this side of the water. Our own law (hitherto identical with that of Australia) does not err on the side of stringency, but the measure in question seems to aim at removing even the present limited safeguards. The sting of the Bill lies in the clause making mere desertion by either party for three years a sufficient ground for divorce, which practically dissolves the marriage of, and sets free, any couple who may by mutual consent or collusion live apart for the required period. This is surely divorce made easy. What is bad nation. Any legislation such as this, which tampers with the sacred character of marriage, and which facilitates the sundering of family ties and the shaking off of home responsibilities, cannot be too strongly condemned. It is therefore hoped, in the interests of religion and morality, that the Royal power of veto, which is not yet obsolete in the case of Colonial Bills, will be exercised on this mischievous measure.

Dr. Drysdale, the senior physician of the Metropolitan Free Hospital, who attended the recent Alcoholic Congress at Zurich, in a letter to one of the daily papers, gives some interesting particulars respecting the Liquor question. The Federal Government of Switzerland, it appears, has lately made an exhaustive inquiry into the consumption of alcohol, and the laws relating thereto, in the various States of Europe and in America. The information thus collected has been embodied in a valuable report, which shows (inter alia) that the inhabitants of Canada, Norway, and Finland, are very temperate indeed—almost total abstainers—as compared with those of Sweden, Belgium (which has free trade in liquor), Holland, and Denmark; which last State consumes five times as much spirits per man as any of the three first-named cold countries. The United States consume rather less spirits per man than Great Britain, but more than twice as much beer. In France, which uses far more spirits than England—to say nothing of a prodigious quantity of wine—deaths from drinking are on the increase. A very careful examination which was also made of the Gothenburg system, shows it to have been a failure.

The authors of this report, whilst speaking in terms of great admiration of the successes achieved by the temperance movement in the United Kingdom and in America, which now contain respectively five and eight millions of total abstainers, despair of any such great results in France, Germany, or Switzerland. The Swiss have, therefore, on their recommendation, passed a law which gives the Government a monopoly of the sale of all spirits, whether made at home or abroad. We are not sanguine, however, as to the result of this experiment, for, as Dr. Drysdale suggests, it is not easy to see how a Government can either prevent or reduce the consumption of liquors by converting themselves into publicans. The first step in any real reform must be taken by the people. Let a strong public feeling be aroused in favour either of progressive restriction or total prohibition, and then let the Government be called upon to give it legislative force.

The recent "turf-scandal," following close upon the disgraceful riot at Lillie Bridge, has again forcibly drawn attention to the plague of gambling which now permeates almost every form of sport and pastime. As for the race-course, whatever its apologists may say, it is from first to last a mere legalised medium for betting. Abolish the latter, and the former would not long survive. To expel a noble offender here and there is but to trifle with the disease: the knife must go to the root of the sore. So long as the newspapers, even the most eminent and respectable, contain daily details of current "odds," and columns of sporting news, all attempts to purify English pastimes are useless. N.

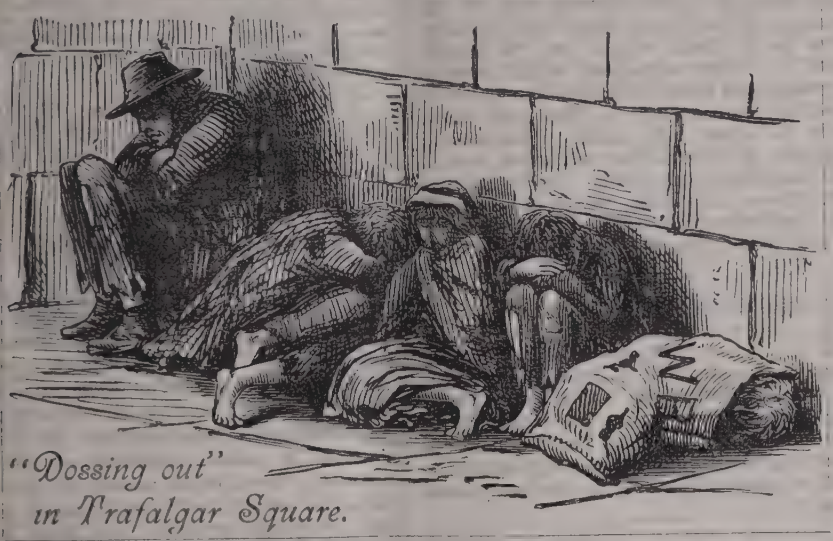
short of making it a penal offence to publish or circulate racing and betting intelligence in any form whatever.

But there is another aspect of this question, which may here be touched upon without treading on the forbidden ground of politics. Is it not a serious blot upon our boasted Constitution, that a man who has been adjudged unfit even for the society of "the turf," or who has become notorious for his frequent appearances in the Divorce Court, should nevertheless, by the mere accident of his birth, be entitled to legislate upon questions affecting morality and religion? That the single vote of some profligate scion of nobility should be able, for instance, to defeat a measure for the suppression of vice or the protection of children, is a flagrant anomaly of which, even on the lowest grounds, the House of Lords will do well to purge itself.

It is a painful and humiliating reflection that whenever "the white man" penetrates a new region he demoralises its original inhabitants. Scarcely a month passes without furnishing evidence of the havoc wrought among native races by the liquor trade. At a recent meeting in London the Honourable Mr. Hutton, of Cape Colony, who has lived on the Kaffir frontier upwards of forty years, denounced the attempts now being made to open up the native territories of that colony to this degrading traffic. He emphasised the fact, so abundantly testified to by missionaries in South Africa and on the frontiers, that the great hindrance to Christian progress is not the barbarism of the natives, but the evil habits introduced by Europeans, and that nine tenths of the vice of the Colonies arises from the undue use of spirituous liquors. Lord De La Warr has undertaken to bring forward this question next Session, but it is a far cry from now to February, and, unless the native tribes of Cape Colony are to be "civilised" off the face of the earth, the sluggish pulse of the Imperial Government must be quickened up in the meantime.

The ominous refrain, "We must have work or bread," is being heard in our London streets and squares, chorussed by many voices. There have been processions through the crowded city thoroughfares, and collisions with the police—boding still worse things in the coming winter days. How far the element of pure rowdyism and thievery enters into the composition of these disaffected crowds it is hard to determine. But there is clearly some justification for the uprising of the hungry and the unemployed; and we trust that, with the determination to conserve order, there will also be, on the part of the authorities, an earnest endeavour to satisfy every genuine desire for some honest occupation that will keep the wolf from the door.

Trafalgar-square is earning a strange notoriety in connection with the shady side of our social life. For some months it has been the nightly haunt of hundreds of those who had not, or professed to have not, the means of securing a shelter for the night under cover. Making all allowances for cases of vagrancy and deception, a considerable modicum of real destitution and distress has been found. An artist has depicted, in the accompanying picture, a sample of the scenes that have become familiar to the midnight visitors to this open space in the heart of London. One night last week, a member of our staff went the midnight rounds, in company with Mr. J. J. Jones, of the London Samaritan Society, who has lately been distributing tickets for the night's lodging to those who are manifestly the victims of misfortune.



"Dossing out" in Trafalgar Square.

Next to the real and widespread character of this distress, our representative was struck with the sympathetic kindness shown by the police. Familiarity with such scenes is apt to make the bluecoats callous and unfeeling; but, on this occasion at any rate, they showed an eager readiness to assist in placing the relief tickets where they were most needed.

Preaching recently on behalf of the London Hospital Fund, Archdeacon Farrar said that there are scores of men in the metropolis who, almost without feeling it, could save the hospitals from anxiety. After calling attention to the facts of £2000 having not long ago been given for a dessert service, £3000 for a chimney ornament, £10,000 for a couple of rose-coloured vases, of £300 being the price charged for a lady's dress, and £1000 paid for flowers for a ball, he asked, "Why should the runnel of charity dribble on as it does, while the full tide of

In the face of statements of this kind, and of other no less striking evidences of wasteful misuse of wealth, there is little good in the endeavour to persuade the starving operatives and needlewomen that the increase in the national wealth is of any advantage to the bulk of the people. Socialism may have its delusions, but the platform upon which it is based is built upon a wretched misuse of wealth. When it has become necessary to discuss the possibilities of providing "halfpenny dinners," so as to extend the benefits of charity to as large a number as possible, and now that banners with the pitiful sentence, "we want work or bread," are again being carried in advance of processions of the "unemployed," the fallacy of trying to stave off by a few platitudes the rapidly coming evil day is clearly evident. It becomes every follower of Christ to do something to bring about a change in the present unhappy condition of things.

Something in the shape of a broad and liberal scheme of emigration is needed. Perhaps it would not be out of place to consider very thoughtfully the remark made by the Dean of Gloucester at the recent Church Congress, that re-migration of people from the large towns to the country would help to solve the pressing question with regard to our "surplus population." Coming from a parish with a population of only four hundred upon an acreage of three thousand, including a large extent of "pasture land filled with thistles," the Dean spoke with some knowledge of the subject; if only other good Christians will take it up, and study it in the light of God's Word and will, something may result from the suggestion.

Our Irish contemporary, Brotherhood, has some comments upon the recent Convention in Belfast for the promotion of practical holiness. Whilst speaking favourably of the practical and helpful character of the addresses, it suggests that at some of these conferences a day might be set apart for the consideration of holiness "in relation to manufacture and commerce," and to the complexity of present day problems of duty. How Christians are to disassociate themselves from the competitive system which is starving and slaying its victims in every large town is undoubtedly a difficult question; but, as our contemporary says, "if people are in earnest, and commit their way unto the Lord, there shall surely be light showing 'a plain path.'"

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel have declined to receive any money from a fancy fair held in a cathedral city on the ground that the money so raised is not fit to be used "for the propagation of the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." Unfortunately, too much of the money made use of in Christian effort and in church building is raised in a manner which is far from satisfactory to those who regard consistency. Yet it is not impossible to avoid these shoals and quicksands. Only the other day we saw a statement in regard to the affairs of a church in a small and comparatively poor parish in Ireland, and the incumbent called attention to the fact that the large sum of some thousands of pounds, which had been collected for church and charitable purposes in a few years, had all been obtained "without bazaars."

What noble work becomes possible by the exercise of self-denial. In the town of Leeds "the Workpeople's Medical Charities Committee" have, during this year, paid to the treasurer of the Leeds Infirmary an average of nearly £49 per week, or a total sum of £1869 17s. 11d. Surely this is an example worthy of imitation in other large centres.

The Niger Trading Company has adopted the policy of the prohibition of intoxicating liquors in all trading transactions with the African races, because it has been found that the opposite policy does not pay, the demoralisation of the natives by spirit drinking ruining trade. We wish that a similar sensible view could be taken nearer home, where the development of the drink traffic simply means the paralysing of other trades. "One missionary to every 70,000 barrels of rum" certainly is a startling estimate taken from the records of our African exports; but there are districts in England in which the disproportion between the evangelising and the demoralising element is no less painful.

"I believe in two denominations only—the Church and the world," said Rev. R. Glover, at the meeting for working men held in connection with the recent session of the Baptist Union. We trust that most of our readers will be able to re-echo them, for they breathe the spirit of our Lord's own declaration, "He that is not against us is for us." There are few greater hindrances to the spread of Christ's kingdom than that jealous sectarianism which disfigures so much our modern spiritual life. "In things essential unity, in non-essentials liberty," might with advantage be taken as the motto of all those who recognise faith in the finished work of Jesus as the one thing needful to true brotherhood.

It will interest many who have sorrowed over the somewhat wavering and uncertain treatment of the question of the effect of the death of Christ in its relation to ourselves and to God, which is evident in some of the sermons of "Robertson, of Brighton," to know that his latest biographer, Rev. Frederick Arnold, says:—

> I have been informed by one who speaks with authority on the subject, and who would be most anxious to speak with perfect accuracy, that Robertson's difficulties on the subject of the Atonement passed away. One phrase that Robertson used was constantly remembered and repeated: "I see it all. It is Christ, and only Christ."

In another place the author remarks:—"There is reason to believe that in his latest days he returned to the simplicity of his earliest belief."

The Secretary of a very useful Society tells us that many wealthy subscribers have died, whose subscriptions have not been continued by their heirs and successors. Neither the grace of living nor of giving for Christ goes by blood, though both often do go with it. The British Weekly is right in saying:—

> We must hark back to the New Testament. We must set up in the midst the Cross of Jesus—the atonement, the example, the hope, and the centre for the world. There must be a complete end of our comfortable, worldly Christianity. We may have to sacrifice much more than money—but certainly that will have to be sacrificed on a scale hardly yet understood.

We can only regret that the article from which we quote should have contained the unworthy and ungenerous remark, that when the Baptists met they "did not trouble much about the absence and the accusations of their most famous minister." Yet that outspoken paragraph about "the Cross of Jesus," with many another recent utterance, may have owed its origin to Mr. Spurgeon's clarion cry. Good soldiers sometimes wake up cross at the sharp sound of the bugle, but they hurry to their right place under the banner of their King.

Among the many valuable utterances at the recent Church Congress and the Baptist and Congregational Union meetings, no secondary place is due to the address by Dr. Landels, on Christian fellowship. It is so timely and so admirable, that we propose to give it in our next issue, as far as our space will allow. Meanwhile, it may be obtained from Messrs. Alexander & Shepheard, together with a previous paper on the same subject, by Rev. E. Medley, M.A., of Nottingham, in pamphlet form, for threepence.

With all that was so admirable in the Congregational Union meetings it grieves us to utter a word of regret. Why should the local committee have advertised, as we learn from The Leeds Mercury, that on the premises of the chapel, where the meetings were held, there would be "a smoke room"? Those acquainted with the ways of young men know well that the habit of smoking, bad enough in itself, too often leads to other evil habits. Ministerial example, of course, has enormous weight with the rising generation. In the utmost friendliness, therefore, we would suggest that the intimation to which we refer may be kept out of future programmes.

Disestablishment is a somewhat sore subject; it was therefore gratifying to find that Mr. Carvell Williams, whose name is so closely connected with it, should have taken as his subject, at Leeds, "The Necessity for maintaining the Christian Spirit in Political Conduct." His remarks on the need of purifying the personnel of the legislature, as well as promoting purity by law, were most timely.

During the last week the improvement recently observed in Mr. Denham Smith's condition has been steadily maintained, aided, no doubt, humanly speaking, by the peace and calm which have throughout characterised his illness, and that, too, notwithstanding the great prostration in which he even now lies, and which is still a source of much anxiety. So great, however, is his desire to be removed to his London residence, that arrangements have been made, with all due care for his comfort and well-being, to carry out his wish, and it is hoped that should his strength permit and the weather allow, this will shortly be accomplished.

"Woe unto you when all men speak well of you." Rev. Edward White, in replying to Mr. Spurgeon's Down-Grade papers, took occasion to make reference to us in these uncompromising words:—

> The last unwholesome influence which has, I am persuaded, told heavily among the Nonconformists in favour of violent reactionary thinking in theology, is the unreasoning, uncritical dogmatism of the school in which Mr. Spurgeon has so many humbler and less worthy imitators, notably in The Christian.

We wrote to Mr. White, asking him to be good enough to refer us to some of the passages in our columns which had led him thus to write. We received a reply headed, "Private and Confidential," in which he gave us no answer to our letter. He named, however, a writer, of whom he disapproves, but who is not one of our contributors. We informed him of this, and repeated our inquiry, but to this no reply has been vouchsafed. We make no comment. If Mr. White is satisfied, we are.

A correspondent sent our issue containing Mr. Groves' letter to one of the "strict brethren" who had been trying to win him over to "come out and be separate." The following is a copy of the correspondence:—

F. G. to D.

My Dear Mr. D.,—Will you kindly favour me by reading this "Prophetic Letter" in my little paper, The Christian.—Yours affectionately in the Lord,

F. G.

D. to F. G.

My Dear Mr. G.,—At your request I have read Mr. Groves's letter in The Christian. Why don't the editor have the honesty to publish Mr. Darby's reply? My dear Mr. G., I am surprised you read such a paper as The Christian. What would Mr. Groves think of this letter thrust forth into Christendom in such a paper? This paper is a nut without any kernel, husks and no wheat. It is Antichrist to read such a paper. I do not wonder, my dear Mr. G., that your opinion of us is the same as Mr. Groves. "Come out, and be separate." Everywhere this sect ("the Brethren") is spoken against.—Your servant in Christ,

D.

If Mr. D. is satisfied, we are. But is this really the kind of thing with respect to which God commands us to "come out, and be separate"?

FAINT, YET PURSUING.

Our readers will be sorry to hear of the serious illness of our occasional correspondent, Mr. George Brealey, of Clayhidon, Wellington, Somersetshire. "Blackdown tracts" give a good idea of the people on those hills, as he found them, and as they have become under his indefatigable evangelisation. He went to work in a moral wilderness of degraded humanity, the débris of convict life (for many unhanged convicts had formerly settled there); and the Gospel preached and lived by the Brealey family and others, supplemented by George Müller's schools, has made the desert rejoice and blossom and bear fruit. There are few places where a more evident change has been wrought in the past thirty years than on this ridge of hills on the dividing line between Somerset and Devon. Our brother is now unable to preach, or even speak without difficulty. The attack has been brought on by hard work and pressure of mind. This Jubilee year has been anything but a prosperous year for many missions. Funds have been diverted, and this, added to the death of many former liberal givers, has been the cause of George Brealey's breakdown. Will our readers pray and help toward his recovery, and for his son who has been for many years his father's right hand.

Another unwearied worker during a similar period, George Fuller, of Sermon-lane Mission, Islington, is, we deeply regret to say, also seriously ill, with rheumatic fever and another constitutional trouble. He has been one of God's faithful, plodding, quiet workers. No man in London has more bravely fought against difficulties in the endeavour to pull sinners of all sorts out of the fire, to rescue the perishing, and to relieve and raise the poor. We affectionately commend him also to the love and prayer of God's elect.

MR. CHEYNE BRADY writes:—Kindly give our address, Les Avelines, Cannes, France, to any Christians coming this way. We shall have a Bible-reading every week, and are glad to see

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

VALEDICTORY MEETING.

HE meeting held in Exeter (Lower) Hall on onday evening to take leave of the party of issionaries who, under the auspices of the land Mission, started en route for China yester- ay, is one that will not be soon forgotten. esides being a valedictory service, it was an hibition of the varied and manifold ways in hich the Lord calls his servants to labour in his neyard. The chair was occupied by that thusiastic friend of the Mission, Mr. T. A. enny; there was a large attendance.

Mr. BROOMHALL, secretary, stated that the umber of candidates who had been accepted for ork this year now numbered ninety-three. A ood number of these have already gone out, and ie others, with the exception of one or two, ill leave before the end of the year. It is uite clear, said Mr. Broomhall, that more than ne hundred for which many have been praying, ill be sent out during this year, and we have ratefully to thank God that the funds received ave been equal to the need.

Mr. DENNY observed that it seemed China ormed a special attraction to our young men nd young women who make up their minds to ive themselves to the Lord for the purpose of dvancing his kingdom in the land of heathen- om. They were all sorry to part with so many right young workers, for whom there is plenty o do at home; but when they thought of poor hina, with its teeming millions, and with its undreds dying every hour without a knowledge f the Saviour, they could not but wish them all lessing and success. He reminded the mis- ionaries that they must be prepared to meet the eproach cast on the name of England by the rightful opium traffic. Never was a greater rime committed by one nation upon another, han Christian England, for the sake of gain, ad committed upon heathen China by this bominable trade.

The departing missionaries shortly addressed he gathering in succession, telling in simple yet earnest and impressive words, how they had een led to consecrate themselves to the service of the Lord in the distant land for which they were bound. They spoke in the following rder: Miss Florence Ellis, Miss Clara Ellis (sisters), Miss Williamson, Miss M. Mitchell, Miss Palmer, Miss Ramsay, Miss E. Hainge, Miss E. Marchbank, Miss Hanbury, Miss Campbell, and Miss Fanny Boyd. In each case the Lord had sent his summons in a different way. All, however, answered the question, "Why do you leave home and friends to go to China?" in practically the same words, "I go there because I love Jesus better even than my friends, because it is the grandest and the noblest thing in this world to live and labour for God and the good of my fellow-creatures, and because I am taking with me to spread abroad that which China lacks—the light and love of Christ." Each closed with an appeal to Christian friends to remember them in prayer.

Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR delighted the meeting with a succinct address on the achievements of the Mission, which was interspersed with stirring incidents, illustrative of the power of the mighty Saviour in the land of idolatry. Those ladies who have spoken to you to-night, said Mr. Taylor, are fellow-workers with you who are our praying friends, our giving friends, and our sympathising friends. The reason we have brought you together to-night is that we want you to know one another. We want you at home to sustain these workers by daily, constant prayer, for in that way only can they be made really happy and successful workers for Christ in heathendom. God never fails us. He has answered the prayer as to the hundred missionaries. We who first offered that prayer in China were then satisfied within our inmost souls that God would answer it. Oh, it is a joy! cried Mr. Taylor, to know that when you are dealing with God you are dealing with certainty. These dear workers are going to China to strive for Jesus and speak the word that never returns void.

Special prayer, commending the party to the care of the Lord, and asking that they might ever be kept in touch with Christ, full of the Holy Ghost, and of the power of God, was offered by Revs. C. A. Fox, E. W. Moore, and Mr. Taylor.

ORPHANS IN CALCUTTA.

MISS S. GARDNER, of the American Zenana Mission, to whose work we recently made reference, writes from 39, Elliot-road, Calcutta:—

I have been in Calcutta nearly a year in charge of an orphanage for girls, in connection with which I have started a school for the higher education of native girls. In the orphanage are 120 children. They, together with my school, make time seem short, and Calcutta is a busy part of the world to live in, especially for a missionary. So much presents itself to be done —much more than each or all can possibly do. I sometimes wish we could all leave off doing for awhile, and just give ourselves up to praying. Calcutta needs the power of the Holy Ghost to sweep over it; individuals and churches need the awakening that can only come with his presence. I believe that the Lord means us to see the fruit of our labour in the conversion of souls. That souls are not converted is very often from lack of faith on our part.

I was much discouraged over my own work for some months, but now the tone of my Orphanage is greatly changed, and I feel that the Spirit is brooding over us. Many of the girls are serious, and many who were rebellious and ungovernable have become gentle and quiet. We depend upon these young people to go out with us by and by into the homes of the heathen around us, to teach the way of life, and it is, of course, very necessary that they should themselves first be taught by the Spirit.

MR. JOHN N. FORMAN, who, with his fellow-student at Princeton, Mr. Wilder, has been the instrument of such a marvellous revival of missionary zeal in America, has arrived in England. He proposes to visit the British universities for the purpose of appealing to the students in behalf of the heathen world before going to India to enter upon his work there. On the Sabbath before he sailed for Britain the Philadelphian society of Princeton decided to raise 700 dols. a year for his support. This decision was reached at mid-day, and before nine o'clock that night 1,000 dols. had been pledged by the College alone.—Christian Leader.

BOYS' HOME, SOUTHWARK.—Mr. J. W. C. Fegan says in a recent circular:—"This is the sixteenth winter of our Christian rescue-work amongst waifs and strays. In addition to our four Homes, in which 270 boys will, during the approaching inclement season, be dependent upon us, under God, for all they need in life, we have a yearly increasing emigration work. My faith has been much tried all through the long summer, and during the last few weeks we have been in acute straits." A sale of useful and fancy articles in aid of these Institutions will be held in the large schoolroom of the Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, on Tuesday and Wednesday, Dec. 6 and 7.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—Rev. G. J. Hill writes:—I thank you heartily for the kind notice of Mrs. Hill's address on our work among Cornish seamen and fishermen in last week's CHRISTIAN, but I regret to say it contains two or three errors. There have been at times between sixty and seventy vessels in Fowey Harbour—but not all loading. There are about 5000 fishermen engaged in the Cornish fisheries, off the South Cornish Coast, but they do not all belong to Mevagissey. Good work is being done by other societies at Falmouth, &c., but nothing had been done on the part of the coast that we are now working. The late G. C. Smith was a minister in Cornwall (Penzance), but he was not a Cornishman.

AT WORK IN TRAVANCORE.

VAKKAM is a town situated on the Backwater, the long stretch of canals, natural and artificial, which run parallel to the coast line, and at a short distance from the shore, along very many miles of the Malabar Coast. Its inhabitants are chiefly Ilavars, a people who get their living mainly by the cultivation of the cocoanut palm, but who also do a good deal in the way of hand-weaving. They are intelligent and interesting people, but demon-worship takes the place in their hearts which should be given to Christ alone.

At Vakkam, more than thirty years ago, an effort was made to rear the Gospel standard amongst the people, and, as a good number of them professed willingness to give up idolatry and to come and learn what Christianity meant, a chapel was built in their midst. But, alas! their motives appear principally to have been derived from ideas of worldly advantage. The native government in those days oppressed sadly the poorer classes, and it may be these people thought that to be nominal Christians would be to gain protectors in the missionaries, who would fight their battles and shield them from oppression. Whatever it was, in a very short time they all relapsed again into heathenism, and for many years the empty chapel has stood in their midst, a record of the day of salvation which was once brought nigh unto them, but which, not seeing its value, they cast rudely from their grasp.

However, Rev. S. Mateer, missionary of the London Missionary Society at Trevandrum, has long been seeking by occasional visits to rouse again the interest of the people in Divine things, and last month (August) a concentrated effort was put forth there. Two or three Bible-women and five or six catechists were sent round some days previously, announcing that a doctor with English medicines would shortly visit them, and all who were sick were welcome to come. While thus spreading the news of an earthly physician's hasty visit, these Christian workers had many opportunities of telling their hearers of Christ the Sinners' Friend, and of the loving welcome which awaited them if they would only come to Him. On Saturday morning the real work began, and Mr. Mateer and Dr. E. Sargood Fry were kept well employed for the next few days. The first day comparatively few patients came: for the people did not quite know what to make of this novel method of attack. But when the medicine chest was opened and the bottles were spread out on a form in the chapel verandah, the temptation was too strong to be resisted and crowds came pouring in, bringing with them all kinds of sick and infirm for healing of their bodily diseases. While this was attempted, as far as might be the glorious truths of the Gospel were also made known to them. The native assistants were occupied all day in preaching and speaking to the people, thousands of Malayalim and Tamil hand bills were distributed, and many Scripture portions and Testaments were sold.

In these secluded hamlets, far from European medical aid, such a visit as that described could not but be welcomed and will certainly be remembered. The seed has been liberally scattered, and the great harvest home alone will reveal the number of garnered sheaves.

HOME TEACHING SOCIETY FOR THE BLIND.—The Secretary of this Society (31, New Bridge-street, E.C.) writes:—I spent a day recently with one of our seventeen blind teachers, and called at several houses containing blind persons. We visited one woman who, in particular, gave unqualified testimony of the real joy she derives from the ministrations of the Society. "I do not know what I would have done," she said, "without Dr. Moon's books. I can read by myself. I am never alone, for I can walk about this room, and feel that Jesus is beside me!" This shows the kind of work that this Society is sustaining amongst those who are afflicted with the loss of sight.

Letters to the Editor.

"A PROPHETIC LETTER."

Dear Sir,—The question implied by the republication of Mr. A. Groves's letter is: Have the predictions therein contained been fulfilled? Though admitting that question, "Adelphos" really ignores it, and maintains that the letter is "strikingly prophetical of the state of things which has forced this company of earnest and godly Christians…into a path of separation from the modern developments of Christendom." As a fact, Mr. Groves's well-known letter is almost entirely confined to the consideration of tendencies working in the midst of the undivided company of Brethren fifty years ago.

None will dispute that "what is going on around" is extremely sad. "A great tide of evil"—"a great sea of difficulty and perplexity" it is indeed. But in this present controversy, to dwell upon that is to be altogether away from the point. Does Adelphos wish his readers to understand that those who have escaped from that sea of difficulty—that tide of evil—to the "Exclusive Brethren," have really found a haven of rest for their souls?

One feels constrained to deny, in passing, the parallel sought to be instituted between the attitude of St. Paul towards Judaism with "its deadness and hypocrisy," and the attitude of Brethren towards the prevailing systems. Had Judaism in Apostolic days been never so living and pure, St. Paul could not have remained in it. But in the Epistle to the Hebrews, it is not the corruptions of Judaism that are dwelt upon, but the fact that it was "old and ready to vanish away." It was "a shadow," and had served its turn. The same want of discernment (I would say in all kindness) spoils Adelphos's other historical parallels.

Still more emphatically must we deny that any ecclesiastical position, no matter how closely it may conform to God's Word, will of itself constitute the man who holds it a "Friend of God." Lot was not another Abraham when he journeyed with the "Friend of God"; his heart was in the pleasant plains. That title and blessing can only result from personal holiness and walk with God.

But to come more closely to my point: Have the predictions been fulfilled? As "Allos Adelphos," I must sadly admit that much has been strikingly fulfilled. Will "Adelphos" deny it? Can he be ignorant that the "sea of difficulty" and the "tide of evil" have flowed in upon even the Exclusives? Sir, it would be an easy, but saddening, task to put together a catena of quotations from printed and published documents, which would show what a path of trial and difficulty is trodden by the feet of those who form this "earnest and godly" body of Christians, or (to adopt your correspondent's metaphor) what a tempestuous sea has tossed them of late. Our divisions are notorious, and have made us a by-word and a reproach. Within the past few years every "gathering" has been shaken and disturbed or rent asunder by strifes and divisions! None can conceive anything more melancholy than much of the recent Brethrenistic literature—charges hurled from side to side, of heresy, schism, and sectarianism, together with high-handed "cutting-off" of individuals and gatherings, or wholesale secession and separation.

Perhaps I may be allowed to quote from one or two papers issued within recent years. One who stands high for his gifts and piety writes:—"That the hand of God is upon us is but too evident. Our shame is public. It requires no spirituality to see that exactly in that which we have professedly sought we have failed most signally. The unity of the spirit in the bond of peace is just, most surely, what we have not kept ..It is not possible to escape the reproach which God has permitted to be against us all—the reproach not of here and there some local divisions, but of division from end to end; and not where separation from manifest evil has been a Divine necessity, but upon points of ecclesiastical discipline, or of doctrine confessedly in no wise fundamental—too minute, in fact, to be made a ground of division by the narrowest and most sectarian of sects around us! Yet we all disclaim as injurious the accusation of being sects" (F. W. Grant).

Another, Lord A. P. Cecil, writing upon the occasion of the publication of a book which might well make us blush ("The Brethren: their Origin, Progress, and Testimony," A. Miller), said:—"At the very moment when we are calling ourselves 'The Brethren,' and speaking of our origin, progress, and testimony, the Lord is shaking us to our very centre. (This was written while the "'81 division" was impending.) I am afraid that many of us have no higher thought, corporately, than that we belong to the Brethren, who began fifty years ago…a wretched, sectarian thought."

Another, writing during the "'85 division" (alas! alas! that they need to be so described), says:—"Our pride, our worldliness, our arrogance, are being dealt with by the living God, who loves us too well to allow the general and individual state of his beloved saints to pass unchecked." (W. Scott.)

But of still greater interest is the last I will cite, Mr. J. N. Darby himself. Without doubt, Adelphos has heard of "Cluffism," and of the New Lump movement, which really led to the division of '81. Those who adopted New Lump views believed that the whole company of Brethren was "leavened," and that nothing remained but to "separate" and become a new lump. Others regarded themselves as Philadelphia in the midst of a Brethrenistic Laodicea. As to "Cluffism," Mr. Darby strongly defined it as "a principle of extra excellence…which professed, and still [about 1880—81] holds its ground…Its origin was a filthy mysticism, not unfolded to all. Yet these views prevailed to so great an extent that the author of the article "Plymouth Brethren," in Schaff's "Religious Encyclopædia" sets the Cluffites in a party by themselves, as forming one of the three sections into which "the (Exclusive) Brethren," have resolved themselves ("Rel. Enc." iii. p. 1858). In the paper from which I quote ("New Lump," published by Morrish) Mr. Darby refers to the "low state of things" which existed among Brethren, and the remedies which had been proposed: "the first, some 'silly women' plan of a new lump, clean contrary to the whole sense of the passage; secondly, conscience justly at work, but faith failing as to trusting Christ's faithfulness in taking care of his, and his testimony; and thirdly, Cluffism, full of pretension and want of self-knowledge; though I fully admit, several dear people got among them, misled by its promises of more spirituality." All that, at least, does not look like the rosy picture of the "the Brethren" suggested rather than drawn by Adelphos.

But there is more. So "low" had the condition of Brethren become, that Mr. Darby himself thought of separating from them, as others had done. In the same paper he says: "Many thought of leaving Brethren. I had been in the deepest degree exercised by the very question. I agreed with them as to their judgment of the evil. But I did not think desertion was the remedy; it did not remedy the evil—satisfied, perhaps, the individual conscience, but left the saints to their fate. I not only felt the evil was not remedied, but could not be, humanely speaking. It was not my place to flee as a hireling. I was accounted an unfaithful person by those disposed to leave." That is, to adopt Adelphos's illustration, Mr. Darby was considered by these ardent brethren as another Lot, vexing his righteous soul in the Sodom of the "exclusive" communion.

That paper was written no great while before Mr. Darby's death. Since then another division has become an accomplished fact. "The narrower minds" which had "encircled" Mr. Darby with their bands, had no hand to keep them in check after his departure; they had their swing and sway, and the Exclusive Brethren have, beyond all question, adopted a test, different indeed from that of the Walkerites and Glassites (as Mr. Groves put it), "but as real."

"Whenever Christ has received a person," wrote Mr. Darby, three years after the date of Mr. Groves's letter, "we would receive him. . . We receive all that the Lord has received, all who have fled as poor sinners for refuge to the hope set before them. . . I repeat then, that we receive all who are on the foundation, and reject and put away all error by the Word of God and the help of His ever-blessed, ever-living Spirit." Those were the confessed principles of 1839. Will any so-called "Exclusive" Brother venture to assert that they are the basis of communion in this year 1887?—Faithfully yours,

Allos Adelphos.

My Dear Friend,—The Greek of 2 Tim. ii. 21 is literally "If a man therefore purge out himself from these." Our translation, and R.V. as well, fail to give the force of the out. It is self-purification which is enjoined, not mere separation. Nay, it is self-purification which effects the separation contemplated, which is not so much a local separation, as a separation in spirit. "Purge out himself from (being) of these."

This is well put in the "Speaker's Commentary"—"If then anyone shall have cleansed himself from these," i.e., from the "vessels to dishonour" just mentioned. This has been thought to be a precept not to hold communion with evil men in God's Church, or with those who err in fundamentals; but it is rather, perhaps, a direction to cleanse oneself out of the number and condition of those "vessels to dishonour" by personally abstaining from the evils, either of faith or practice, which defile them. This is by Dr. Jackson, the late Bishop of London.

Bengel renders it, "If a man by purging himself shall go forth from these."

Ellicott calls attention to the verb "purge out," occurring in 1 Cor. v. 7 (the only other place it occurs in the New Testament) there referring to the leaven in the house to be purged out. He and others give a caution against taking "from these" to mean "from these things." They say it plainly refers to the "vessels of dishonour" of ver. 23.

By purging out of self all that would identify one with vessels of dishonour, you show that you are a vessel to honour. I think those brethren abuse the passage who make it refer to separation from others—for first of all it is self-purification which brings about the separation contemplated, not vice versâ: and secondly, the persons alluded to are not Christians from whom one may differ, or saints like Geo. Müller, but men like Hymenæus and Alexander, who "say the resurrection is past already."—Yours very sincerely,

Henry E. Brooke.

[Several correspondents reply to Adelphos, that the condition—"if a man purge himself from these"—refers to the profane and vain babblings of ver. 16, not to the "vessels to dishonour." And although this is not the case, it is much nearer the truth than the use made of the passage by Adelphos and his party.—Ed.]

Dear Sir,—It will be acknowledged by most of your readers that the interesting letter from Mr. A. N. Groves to Mr. J. N. Darby, which you have so justly styled "prophetic," has been abundantly justified by the course of events, and that the contentions of Mr. Groves are only confirmed by the letter of "Adelphos," in your issue of October 7. The latter writer expresses himself as if all the churches of Christendom were in their death throes, a few saints only remaining within them, vainly endeavouring to stem the tide of evil by which their overthrow is threatened Surely, this is an utterly distorted picture, the conception of a mind so habituated to see the evil in other systems as to be blind to the good. Never before has the Christian Church generally been so marked by spiritual life and earnest zeal as it is to-day. True, the forces arrayed against it are as rampant as ever, and there are dissensions and errors enough within its borders, but there is probably more evangelistic earnestness, more sympathy with the wants of the people, more self-denial in the churches, of this country at least, than ever before in their history.

The endeavour to correct the evils of ecclesiastical systems by separation from them has failed ipso facto. In testifying against the sects, the Brethren have unwittingly formed a new and a very narrow sect, which again has become divided into several sub-sects. Human authority has been professedly done away with, but the strong and the masterful have inevitably, though not in name, re-established it. Again: it is well, no doubt, that

HE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

By JOHN BUNYAN.

ith Thirteen Original Illustrations, specially drawn for this work.

"By far the best of all the cheap editions of 'The Pilgrim's Progress' that we have yet seen—is one issued by Messrs. Morgan & Scott. Care has been bestowed upon the revision, the text having been closely compared and brought into harmony with the early editions—a point all the more worthy of grateful recognition when we see so many conscienceless reprints, abounding in old and new blunders, tumbled into the market. The type is new, leaded, and very readable; and the book, printed on superior paper and adorned with upwards of a dozen original illustrations, costs in its cheapest form only sixpence.

"The portability of the volume is an additional feature, worthy of note; it is so light that it may be held in the hand by the aged or invalids without exertion or causing fatigue."—Christian Leader.

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

By JOHN BUNYAN.

With Thirteen Original Illustrations, specially drawn for this work.

"It is printed on a superior, but light paper. The special features of this edition are that the book is so light it may be held in the hand by the aged or invalid without exertion or causing fatigue; it is printed from new and very readable type; it has been closely compared with the early editions, and carefully revised and edited; it has thirteen original illustrations, specially engraved for the work; while the moderate price at which the book is published places it within the reach of all. We can strongly recommend it as an elegant and useful edition for distribution."

A GOOD WORK.

There are 367,000 Railway Men in the United Kingdom.

Among these "THE RAILWAY MISSION" is endeavouring to spread the Gospel and advocate Temperance, &c. Thus far we are greatly encouraged; but, to go on with the work and enter scores of open doors, we want money. May I appeal to the friends of Railway Men who read this paper to send £500 NEEDED JUST NOW.

Will you give a Thank-offering by making a collection in your family, or house of business, for Journeying Mercies by Rail this summer? Gladly will I send a Box or Card to any who will use it, and a report of the work.

Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.

Treasurer and Chairman of General Council: THOMAS B. MILLER, Esq.
Chairman of Finance Committee: THOMAS GRAY, Esq., C.B.
Bankers: Messrs. LLOYDS, BARNETTS, & BOSANQUETS (Limited), Lombard Street, E.C.
Offices: BRIDGE HOUSE, BLACKFRIARS BRIDGE, LONDON, E.C.
Founder and Director: E. J. MATHER, Esq.

OBJECTS.

1. To carry the glad tidings of God's love, mercy, and salvation in our Lord Jesus Christ to the thousands of Fishermen employed in trawling and other modes of fishing in the North Sea and elsewhere, and in every possible way to promote and minister to their spiritual welfare.

2. To mitigate the hard lot and improve the condition of the Fishermen, physically and mentally, by all practicable means, and to meet many urgent needs for which heretofore there has been no provision, especially in supplying medicine and simple surgical appliances, books, mufflers, mittens, &c.

For the above purposes Mission vessels are already stationed with seven fishing fleets, but it is of urgent importance that more vessels should be fitted for similar service, in order that Clerical and Lay Missionaries and Agents of the Mission may visit the Smacksmen.

The Bishop of London.—"The undertaking is a blessed one, and will be accepted by our Heavenly Father as an offering of true devotion."

The Bishop of Exeter.—"It does one's heart good to watch the benefit conferred by these Mission Smacks. God bless them! They go forth in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ."

The Times.—"Ample proof has been furnished of the genuine and successful character of the Society's operations."

The Graphic.—"Founded barely six years ago, its efforts have already been crowned with wonderful success."

During the year 1886 three thousand six hundred and thirty-three cases of accident and sickness were successfully treated in the Dispensary on board the various Mission Vessels. Help is urgently needed to carry on this work.

MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY,

Bridge House, 181, Queen Victoria St., London, E.C.
Depot Entrance—BLACKFRIARS STEAMBOAT PIER STEPS.
Established 1837.

TREASURER—FRANK BEVAN, ESQ.

By means of Specially-written Tracts, sent in envelopes by post, we bring the subject of personal religion directly under the notice of the Upper and Middle Classes. In this way we seek first to win themselves, and then to enlist their POWERFUL AGENCY TO WORK AMONG THE MASSES. Many interesting cases of conversion and other blessing by means of our Tracts might be quoted, some of the leading Ministers and Christian Workers of various Churches being among the fruits of our labours.

While doing a large work at home by Evangelistic Addresses and Tract Distribution, we also reach OUR COUNTRYMEN ABROAD, where our Tracts are much valued, other means of grace being rare and sometimes nil. We also make special efforts to reach the educated classes ON THE CONTINENT, and have been able to do much at the various INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITIONS, to which the late LORD SHAFTESBURY and others have borne personal testimony.

Subscribers of 5s. per annum receive a Tract each month, and for every additional 2s. are entitled to give us the name and address of a friend, to whom we post a tract in an envelope (thus securing privacy) each month for a year. All sums not appropriated to this work are devoted to augment our Free Grants of Tracts in aid of Christian work throughout the country.

FUNDS SPECIALLY NEEDED FOR EXTENSION OF WORK ON THE CONTINENT.—Arrangements are now being made for printing our Tracts in Madrid and posting them to the Upper Classes in Spain. £1000 wanted as a Thank Offering during this, the Jubilee Year of our Society. One brother has sent £50. Who will imitate this example?

All Cheques and Postal Orders to be crossed, and made payable to

CHRIST AND THE SCRIPTURES.

The Living Word and the Written Word. By Rev. Adolph Saphir, D.D., B.A. Cloth extra, 3s.; with gilt edges, 3s. 6d. Cheap Edition, tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth, neat, 1s. 6d.

"We know of no volume that we more earnestly desire to see in the hands of persons of every age who are pondering the religious question of momentous importance, so much agitating men's minds at the present time. It is admirably adapted for the mature and thoughtful; and also peculiarly fitted to give a right direction to the lives and thoughts of the young, and to mould them into Christians of a high type of character."—The Newcastle Daily Journal.

PEARLS OF WISDOM FROM THE PARABLES.

By A.L.O.E., Author of "Rescued from Egypt," "Exiles of Babylon," "The Young Pilgrim," &c., &c. Illustrated with Twenty-four full-page Original Drawings. Handsomely bound in cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.; with gilt edges, 4s.

"These are 'Pearls' indeed. The gifted authoress has added a rare volume to her already large stock of books, and the reading public will thank her for this delightful work."—The Christian Treasury.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED.

A Sketch of the Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple. With two Chromo-lithographic Views. By Rev. J. Culross, D.D., M.A., Principal of Bristol Baptist College. Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. Special Cheap Edition, tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon says: "Preachers abound; but divines are few. The printing press pours forth a mass of matter; but a real book is a phenomenon. We count ourselves happy, for we have met with a divine in Dr. James Culross; and in his work entitled 'John, whom Jesus Loved, we have found a book.' Many writers are mere echoes of other men's voices . . . they imitate the good steward in bringing forth things old, but things new are quite out of their way. . . . One of the excellences of Dr. Culross is the freshness of his thought. The dew is on his branch; he is no withered bough of the autumn frost. His mind allows young flowers to break through its soil after their own fashion, and to blossom in their own sweet way. . . . It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."—The Sword and Trowel.

"Dr. Culross has handled his subject in such a way as to have produced the most complete as well as the most interesting biography of the Apostle John it has ever been our privilege to peruse. To his task, or rather, we should say, labour of love, he has brought a well-furnished and evenly-balanced mind, great literary skill and taste, and an unusually profound spiritual insight."—Stirling Observer.

"BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR, AND KNOCK."

Christ's Message to the Church at Laodicea. By Rev. J. Culross. D.D., M.A. With Chromo-lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Cheap Edition, tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth, limp, 1s. 6d.

"Another 'gem of purest ray serene' from the deep waters of our brother's teeming mind. He possesses a ripeness of thought and a beauty of expression which, in our judgment, are scarcely equalled, and in not one instance surpassed by those of any other living teacher known to us."
The Sword and Trowel.

"THY FIRST LOVE."

Christ's Message to the Church at Ephesus. By Rev. J. Culross, D.D., M.A. With Chromo-lithographic Frontispiece. Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"The glow, as from a golden sunset, which the imagination sheds over his style, gives it a great charm."—The British Messenger.

"We do not know higher-toned or healthier devotional literature, of the evangelical type, than is represented by this and Dr. Culross' previous works. This work is instructive, suggestive, full of spiritual force, and at the same time strong and manly; these latter adjectives we find it impossible to use concerning many of the devotional books produced in our day. Because we may honestly use them in this case, we heartily commend this book for the refreshment of our busy teachers."—The unday School Chronicle.

ISRAEL: A PRINCE WITH GOD.

The Story of Jacob Retold. By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., of Leicester. With full-page Illustration of the River Jordan and Jacob's Well. Cloth, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Bright and attractive in style, while conveying the weightiest and most important teaching."
The Record.

"We have had considerable pleasure in reading this book on the Life of Jacob. Mr. Meyer has great descriptive power. He can tell a narrative well. The subject in his hand glows with life, and the scenes and events in the history of his hero pass vividly before you, and are ever being used to force home on the reader some great and important principle. The volume is prettily got up, well bound, and embellished with frontispiece and illustrations."
Baptist Messenger.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE PRONOUNCED "HOPELESS" RESTORED.—MISS E. PRICE, OF PENSAX, WORCESTERSHIRE.

This case was brought before my notice by an old patient, Mr. C. Flello, of Rowley, Pensax. The following is his letter, dated May 14th, 1887:—

"Sir,—Having a few years ago received immense benefit from your invaluable medicine for pulmonary disease, I feel it a pleasant duty to report to you a case of singular relief afforded to a young girl, a neighbour of mine, to whom I recommended a trial of the medicine, and who gratefully acknowledged its wonderful effects in her case. This girl, Elizabeth Price, aged about 17 years, caught a violent cold, about a week after the last Christmas-day, which affected her lungs so seriously that she was quite unable to discharge her duties, and left her situation for proper medical aid at her own home. There she rapidly became worse, although every attention was paid by the doctor who had charge of her case. Continuing without relief, and visibly sinking daily under the disease, which appeared to have firmly settled upon her lungs, the advice of two other medical gentlemen was obtained, but their combined treatment affording her no relief, they candidly declared her case to be hopeless, and that they could do nothing further to save her life. Thankfully remembering the extraordinary benefit that I had received at your hands, I strongly advised her friends to send for your medicine, which I am very pleased to say soon developed its wonderful curative power upon the girl, and continuing its use, she daily began to improve in health and strength, and now, at the date of this note, she is so far recovered, as to be able, in spite of this most uncongenial season, when coughs and colds are the common lot of most of us here, to get about her daily domestic work as formerly.

"This case is so extraordinary, and so thoroughly truthful, that, as I have before remarked, I have great pleasure in laying it before you for what purpose you may please, and with sincere thanks for the benefits thus derived in both our cases, I beg to subscribe myself, your obedient servant, Charles Flello.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

dult Christians, in obedience to the dictates of onscience, should, if necessary, attach themselves this body, but what of those who are brought p in it from childhood? With them there is no truggle of conscience involved. They naturally ubscribe to the views of their seniors, and as these ccentuate the evils in other churches, and regard heir own as God's peculiar Zion, a censorious attiude is encouraged in the young, which cannot be onducive to their growth in grace.

In fact, the habit of the Brethren of regarding heir own standard of doctrine and worship as lone perfection is only too apt to develop into a endency to establish the same standard in regard o personal sanctity. They not only forget the pregant words of Jesus, in Luke ix. 50, but they are pt also to overlook these, Matt. vii. 1, and in doing o they deprive themselves of that immense source f power which lies in the generous recognition of qualities which others may possess, though in latent orm, and, perhaps, only half known even to themelves. This great principle, which is a notable ecret of all success in influencing our fellowreatures for good, has no place of operation where the separation of one believer from another on the ground of superiority in doctrinal purity or holiness, is emphasised. By separation and exclusion they have abandoned the place of power, exalting the differences that divide, instead of the agreements and sympathies which should unite them with other Christians.

The instances of Luther, Wycliffe, Wesley, and others, are hardly appropriate analogies. Each of these appeared at a great crisis, when some grand fundamental saving truth was at stake. Separation from the degenerate order was in the circumstances inevitable. Nor do we doubt that many earnest Brethren have at some period of their lives been compelled by circumstances to seek spiritual refreshment outside the existing order. But an essentially temporary separation need not be elevated into an eternal necessity, nor, if it must continue, need it alienate from sympathy with other bodies of professing Christians. The instances of William Wilberforce, Lord Teignmouth, and many others, might be cited to show the enormous influence over the general standard of religious life which may be exercised by those who, while disapproving and holding aloof from many human errors and frailties in the Church, yet retain unimpaired their sympathy with it, and their desire not merely to protest against, but to purify and edify it.—Faithfully yours,

OBSERVER.

EVOLUTION.

DEAR SIR,—I agree with Mr. Carpenter in his letter to you that the Evolution theory may be reconciled with belief in a Creator, but whether it can be reconciled with belief in the Bible is another question. It would be well if Mr. Carpenter had stated to what extent he adopts the views of the Evolutionists. With the great bulk of them, as I apprehend, the Creator, if not totally excluded from a share in the formation of the world, is at least allowed only a very small place in it.

But the question remains whether in the doctrine of evolution, as Mr. Carpenter commends it to our acceptance, we are to include the formation of man and woman: that is to say, whether Adam was formed from the dust of the ground, and Eve from one of Adam's ribs, or whether Adam and Eve were the descendants of a race of apes—not to go further back in the pedigree. If Mr. Carpenter holds the former belief, then I am afraid very few evolutionists will regard him as a true disciple of Darwin: for to believe this is to leave the Darwinist next to nothing to set against the monstrous improbabilities with which his doctrine is encumbered.

If, on the other hand, we are to regard mankind as the fruit of evolution, just like any other animal; then the obvious inference is that the history of the creation of man and woman in Genesis i. and ii. is no more a divine revelation than anything in Ovid's Metamorphoses; and we have this further conclusion, that the Lord Jesus quoted as of divine authority a passage of the Old Testament which was after all a mere myth. Christians who treat Darwinism as a harmless idea are too much like the Trojans when they opened their city gates to the wooden horse.

Apart from all testimony of Scripture, the scientific objections to Darwinism are such, that it is hard to believe that the theory could possibly have found the acceptance which it has done in the scientific world, were it not for the unwillingness of the human heart to give glory to God. To display one's ingenuity in accounting by second causes for everything that one sees, and to put the first cause as far as possible into the background and out of sight, is far more congenial to the pride of human nature than to take the attitude of humble adoration, and say: "O Lord, how manifold are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all: the earth is full of thy riches."

Of course, I am not now speaking of Mr. Carpenter, or other Christians who believe in Darwin, but of the sceptical philosophers to whom they too readily have bent the knee.—Truly yours, Woking. HORACE NOEL.

THE WESLEYAN LONDON MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—We very much appreciate the kind sympathy which you have expressed with the West-end Mission, and the invitations to help us which you spontaneously inserted in your last issue.

I write now to ask your numerous readers in all Christian communions to give us the invaluable assistance of their prayers. We want every kind of help, but that above all other. The work begins at St. James's Hall next Sunday.—I am, &c.,

HUGH PRICE HUGHES.

8, Taviton-street, Gordon-square, W.C.

HOUSE OF REST, KILBURN.—The "all-day meetings" were re-commenced on October 8. As usual, earnest prayer was offered on behalf of different phases of Christian work, not unaccompanied with thanksgiving for answers to prayer received. In the afternoon Pastor Frank White gave a helpful address on the "Abundant Entrance" (2 Pet. i. 11). In the evening Mr. Henry Varley spoke on passages in Isa. lviii., and also gave some profitable thoughts on Rom. xii.

SOLDIERS AT SHORNCLIFFE.—New colours were recently presented to a regiment here by Lady Aberdare. Rev. N. Sherbrooke, of Portman Chapel, formerly an officer in the regiment, briefly addressed the men, urging them to enrol themselves in the ranks of Christ's army. At the rev. gentleman's invitation the men were entertained to tea at the Soldiers' Institute, Sandgate, when the Gospel was again preached to them, and some professed to believe.

THE LONDON EVANGELISTIC CHOIRS.—At the half-yearly meeting of the London Evangelistic Choirs, which was held on the 13th inst. at the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Whittington-avenue, Mr. J. E. Mathieson presiding, it was decided to form a General Association of the Choirs, for mutual acquaintance, fellowship, and help. This has for some time been felt by many to be very desirable, seeing that the Evangelistic Choirs now working in London are becoming so numerous. A committee, composed of delegates from the associated choirs, will meet at short intervals to promote union and co-operation. Mr. Mathieson was elected president.

FULTON-STREET PRAYER-MEETING.—Well worthy of record is the fact that the Fulton-street Noon Prayer-meeting has reached its thirtieth anniversary. Many a man has come into the noon prayer service—invited by friends, prompted by curiosity, but no matter how—there to learn to pray. Careless about God and heaven, about eternity and his soul, thoroughly absorbed in the pursuits of business, he has seen, what to him was an astonishing sight, a congregation of business men at prayer; and these, to his surprise, have turned aside from the din of the streets and the tumult of the marts and exchanges for the quiet of a prayer-meeting. And this in the very heart of the business day. He says, "If these had time to think about God and their souls, I have time, too." So from thinking he gets to praying, and the end is conversion. Such cases have been frequent. —New York Evangelist.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a blessing on the work of the Home Teaching Society for the Blind, which has seventeen blind and one sighted teacher.——For special services by Mr Opie Rodway, at Primitive Methodist, Independent, and Baptist Chapels at Blakeney, Gloucestershire (in Forest of Dean), to commence Oct. 22.——For the Sunday afternoon evangelistic services, Shaftesbury Hall, Bournemouth, conducted by Captain Dawson.——For much blessing on Gospel work amongst Jews in Russia.——For blessing on a mission at Carshalton, Oct. 22 to 24, by Rev. John H. Haslam.——For a mighty work of the Holy Spirit among the troops now stationed at Aldershot, Chatham, Colchester, Plymouth and Manchester, that Christians may be roused and sinners saved. ——For blessing on Christian work by Messrs. H. A. Squire and H. M. Barnett, at Tunbridge Wells, Southboro', Brighton, and Lewes.——For a mission to be conducted by Rev. Wm. Haslam in St. John's Church, Tadema-road, Chelsea, from Oct. 23 to Nov. 2.——For a blessing on the mission conducted by Mr. L. Weaver, at Cradley Heath.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Cradley Heath, Staffs.—A good work of religious revival is going on here, in connection with the evangelistic labours of Mr. Leonard Weaver, of Leominster.

Margate.—Sunday services for the people have been commenced here in Foresters' Hall, and are conducted by Rev. R. Turner Sole. The opening services, we understand, have been a means of much blessing.

Messrs. Fullerton & Smith have recently held a most successful mission at Wisbech. Since the evangelists left, further meetings are being held under the direction of Rev. J. W. Campbell, who has throughout given his co-operation.

Messrs. Munhall and Towner have been meeting with much success in their Gospel mission in Toronto. The meetings for men have been seasons of special power and fruitfulness. At one of the meetings Sir Arthur Blackwood gave an address.

Mr. George Clarke in Dublin.—Immediately following the Christian Convention in Dublin, Mr. George Clarke commenced a special mission in the Christian Union Buildings, which from the first attracted crowds so great that the large and minor halls have been unable to accommodate them.

Castle Cary, Somerset.—We have reason to be very thankful, says a correspondent, for the visits of Mr. and Mrs. Hilton, of the Evangelisation Society to this town and neighbourhood. Their faithful preaching of the Gospel, and earnest efforts to lead sinners to Christ, has proved a blessing to many souls.

Sunderland.—Mr. H. Murch has been conducting evangelistic meetings the past fortnight in Bethesda Free Church. The meetings were not large as to numbers, but they were fruitful in much blessing. We have been proving in these meetings that the plain, simple, unvarnished Gospel, delivered in a simple, earnest, and loving way, is still the power of God unto salvation.

F. E. MARSH, Pastor.

Churchdown, Gloucestershire.—A good Gospel work has been done here by Mr. A. C. Champney, a Christian solicitor, for some four years. A barn has been fitted up for Gospel meetings, which have been continued in the face of active opposition from formalists and others. Recently a small mission-hall has been built in an adjacent hamlet some two miles away. During the present month Mr. John M. McAuliffe has spent a fortnight there giving readings to Christians and Gospel addresses.

Ampthill, Bedfordshire.—Rev. W. Hay Aitken commenced a mission in the Parish Church on Sunday, October 2. The meetings were largely attended. Each Sunday afternoon there were grand gatherings of men only, and a mighty influence was felt in them. The meetings for women only, conducted by Mrs. Crouch, were greatly appreciated. The after-meetings were blessed times, large numbers remaining each night. The interest caused in the town and neighbourhood was so great that Mr. Aitken continued the mission for several days longer.

Brighton.—The closing meeting of the twenty-seventh annual season of services on the beach near the lifeboat-house, in connection with the Brighton Open-air Beach Mission, was held on Sunday week, when the attendance was unusually large. The word preached during the past season has been much blessed, Christians of all denominations taking part in the meetings. Addresses were delivered by Mr. T. Thwaites, Mr. Franke and Mr. Hearne (of the London Open-air Mission), Mr. Peter Wallis, Mr. S. Billow, and others. Mr. Thwaites has been the chief mover in the work for the last twenty-seven years. His address is 47, Upper North-street, Brighton.

WE are requested to state that the Mr. Steedman mentioned in a recent issue as having conducted Gospel services at Dreghorn, Ayrshire, is not a railway evangelist as intimated, but a business man in Edinburgh who devotes his spare time to Christian work.

MR. HENRY THORNE'S ENGAGEMENTS.—Till October 24, Music Hall, Birkenhead; October 27, Burton-on-Trent; October 29 to November 7, Tottenham; November 10, Ashbourne; November 12 to 21, Newport (Mon.); November 26 to December 8, Sheffield; December 11 to 16, Bradford; December 18, Derby.

AT A CONFERENCE OF LADIES held a few days ago in the West-end of London on the subject of dress, it was decided that the plumage of small birds should no longer be considered as fashionable trimming for robes and bonnets.

The Book World.

A POPULAR HISTORY OF THE JEWS.*

This well-written and carefully-printed volume supplies a felt want. It is a popular history of the chosen nation, which will bear favourable comparison with its predecessors in the same department of literature. The author evidently knows his subject, and treats it in a spirit of commendable charity. Special interest is to be attached to his preface, because of the way in which it discusses the vexed question whether the Jews lie under the curse of God on account of the part their fathers took in crucifying Christ. Mr. Adams vigorously supports the negative view, pointing out the injustice, humanly speaking, of making a race suffer for the crime of a few, and that the vast majority of the Jews were ignorant of the name of Jesus of Nazareth at the time when their Jerusalem brethren put Him to death.

Mr. Adams is of opinion that the chequered history of the Jews is a proof of divine mercy and a fulfilment of the promise made to Abraham. In a brief but masterly manner he sketches the trials and successes of the scattered race in the countries where they found a home. He does not spare their persecutors, nor does he tone down the revolting pictures of the cruelty they themselves exercised when power was in their hands. The interest of Christians in the children of Israel must be strong, and we know of no book in which that interest is more fully satisfied than in Mr. Adams's admirable volume.

The annual volume of The National Temperance Mirror (2s. 337, Strand) is an admirable repertory of varied literature advocating the total abstinence cause. Workers in Bands of Hope ought to find it an invaluable aid in the conduct of meetings.

Messrs. Marshall Brothers (10, Paternoster-row) are selling off some of the stock of Messrs. Haughton & Co., whose business they have added to their own. Parcels of books valued at 21s. are being offered for 6s. This affords a good opportunity for replenishing village and association libraries.

The Oxford University Press, Amen Corner, and The Cambridge Press, Ave Maria-lane, have jointly issued a new edition of the Revised Version of the Bible, in ruby type, arranged in fac-simile page for page with the Pearl and Minion Editions, occupying a place intermediate between them, and intended to meet the demand for a small edition of the New Version in legible type.

The Domestic World (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton) is exactly what it professes to be—a practical guide in all the daily difficulties of the higher branches of domestic and social economy. We can scarcely imagine a subject that will arise in the varied relations of family and social life on which helpful guidance may not be gained from this remarkably cheap work of reference.

Following the good example of The Pall Mall Gazette, the conductors of our excellent contemporary, The British Weekly, have issued an "Extra," containing the papers contributed to its columns by eminent literary men on "Books which have influenced me." We advise those who did not read the papers in their original form to secure this well-printed and readable little book. (1s. 27, Paternoster-row).

The Call of God to Fellowship. By the Author of "A True Christian." C. W. Mayo, Dean-street, Fetter-lane, E.C. In this short treatise is brought out simply, concisely, and spiritually the exalted destiny of redeemed and sanctified man. By a chain of carefully chosen texts it is shown that only through Christ by the Holy Spirit's operation can sin be blotted out, and the wish and capacity for fellowship with God restored.

A New Map of London has been published by Adams & Sons, 59, Fleet-street, being the Jubilee edition of the District Railway Map of London, price 1s. paper; 1s. 6d. canvas, and 2s. 6d. in case. It is one of the most distinct and complete maps of the roads and rails of the city which is extant. A small pocket map is issued (3d. and 6d.) of the suburbs, which will be appreciated by cyclists; in which is also found a list of places of interest served by the stations of the District Railway.

Part 2 of The Congregational Church Hymnal (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton), containing the litanies, chants, and anthems, with music, is a fitting pendant to the Hymnal proper. A certain modicum of music capacity and skill will be needful for the due appreciation of the work, but the means for attaining to these are now ample, and every Christian with a fragment of voice ought to be ashamed if he cannot intelligently enter into this higher department of the service of public praise.

The Rainbow Round the Throne, and other Sermons. By the late Rev. F. Tucker. 5s. Elliot Stock. This collection of discourses, preached by the late Mr. Tucker, of Camden Town, is prefaced by a short but sufficient sketch by his son, of his active and useful life. The sermons are truly characteristic of the man, marked by a fine glow of Divine sympathy and yearning tenderness. Mr. Tucker was eminently a preacher of the beloved Apostle type; he sought to reflect the loving attractiveness of his Master, and these selected utterances are but echoes in a human voice of the Divine Lord's, "It is I, be not afraid." Fearful and timid souls will find in them a wellspring of comfort and hope.

The New Catholic Church, with thoughts on Theism. Trübner & Co. Tenth edition. 3s. 6d. The ambitious object of the anonymous authors is to form a new church with a central sanctuary "of Gothic design, with stained glass in every window, suitable paintings and statues, and a choir equal to that of St. Paul's Cathedral or Westminster Abbey." The oracles of this proposed church are, to judge by the profuse extracts, John Locke, Martineau, M. Arnold, Herbert Spencer, Tyndall, Huxley, Dean Stanley, Dr. Jowett, &c. The church will comprise "earnest thinking men of all ranks, and have a public religious service in harmony with modern science and philosophy." We cannot say that all this sounds very practical or Scriptural, but possibly the movers of the scheme will belie our fears by handsomely endowing the new Temple of Science.

John Ploughman's Almanack for 1888 (1d. Passmore & Alabaster) shows no falling off in the rich raciness of the daily mottoes and the other contents. It is par excellence the almanack for the people.

"Jehovah Rophi" is the title of a little book prepared by Dr. Pring, of the London Medical Mission, with a view to interest the young in medical mission effort among the London poor. It gives a brief account of the various branches of the work carried on from the centre in St. Giles, and will, we trust, be largely circulated in our Christian families.

MORE OCTOBER MAGAZINES.

CHURCH MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCER.

This contains a valuable map of East Africa, showing the recently arranged political boundaries resulting from the agreement arrived at by the British and German Governments in October last. It also contains a long letter written by Mr. A. M. Mackay in U-Ganda to his friend, Rev. R. P. Ashe. This is particularly interesting, as being written out of the fulness of his heart to his friend and comrade. The following paragraph is characteristic of both the letter and its author:—"What sadness and melancholy come over me at times, and I find myself shedding tears like a child! Then some of those wonderfully consoling Psalms of David and Asaph send a thrill of joy into my whole being. This all-but omnipotent reign of evil weighs one down, and then the exultant hope of its eternal destruction, and the ultimate triumph of good, cheers me up to more endurance and perseverance to the end. What is, perhaps, the saddest aspect of all is the half-hearted callousness of our many friends and supporters, who let truisms and platitudes take the place in their hearts of faith and energy in doing battle against the powers of evil. 'Prayer moves the hand that moves the world,' but the fingers of that hand are earnest men."

THE EXPOSITOR.

We are greatly interested in this number. Among the articles is an instalment from Dr. Alexander Maclaren, that prince of popular expositors, on Philemon; a continuation of Principal David Brown's "Personal Reminiscences of Edward Irving"; and a highly instructive paper on Nehemiah, by Dr. Marcus Dods. From the last-named we quote the following:—"Self-righteousness is the snare of reformers in private as in public life. Inveighing against one vice, to which they themselves have no temptation, they learn to judge all men, themselves included, by that one vice; and on the score of their own exemption from it gradually and unconsciously assume the airs of perfected persons. Unless the general and thorough reformation of the reformer himself goes hand-in-hand with social reformation, and unless he keeps a strict watch on his own character, it is at the greatest risk he assumes the function of a censor of morals. Inconsistent and imperfect morality, hardness, self-righteousness, are the certain doom of all who, in their zeal to reform the lives of others, forget that they themselves need reformation, and assume the attitude of superior beings, and not the meekness and loving humility of those who themselves also are tempted."

With the October part The Hospital concludes its second volume. It is an ably conducted paper, dealing with medical subjects from a Christian and philanthropic standpoint. The present part has a timely article, "Safe from Scarlet Fever," by Edwin Chadwick, C.B., and an interesting sketch of "First Days in Africa," by a Medical Missionary. It is published weekly, price, 1d., by A. P. Watt, 2, Paternoster-square, E.C.

EXETER HALL.—Last Sunday evening Dr. Grattan Guinness began his course of Gospel services for the winter months. There was a large concourse, and the word was with much power. On the previous Wednesday evening Dr. Guinness delivered his startling but deeply important "Medical Talk" to some 2500 brethren. A great impression was made by the speaker's faithful description of the awful results of impure thought and action.

A CONFERENCE OF MINISTERS is to be held at the Broadway Church, Hammersmith, on Tuesday and Wednesday next, October 25 and 26. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes has signified his intention of being present, and it is also expected that at one or more of the sittings there will be present Revs. Mark Guy Pearse, Newman Hall, Edward White, H. Simon, Charles New, William Guest, R. Balgarnie, and others. There will be evening meetings open to Christian workers, and Christians generally.

SHAFTESBURY MEMORIAL SCHOOL.—The new building to be know as the Jurston-street and Shaftesbury Memorial School, erected by the Southwark Sunday School Society in Charles-street, Westminster-bridge-road, was formally opened last week. The new hall, capable of receiving about four hundred persons, is lofty and airy and well-adapted for the purposes of Sunday and week-day mission work. The committee announce with satisfaction the opening of the building free from debt. They have thirteen Sunday and evening schools under their charge giving free religious instruction to 5000 children and extending social and moral benefits to their lotes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 23.—ISAIAH LIX.

HE first eight verses are occupied with a sharp buke to Israel, and (as Rom. iii. 15—19 aches) to the world through them, on account sin. From ver. 9 to 15, Israel acknowledges is charge, and professes penitence. From r. 16 to the end, the Lord Christ appears on half of his people, and by his own arm obtains eir deliverance. The Spirit of the Lord then ises up this standard of Christ's salvation gainst the enemy (Satan), and the chapter ends the prospect of the Redeemer's Second oming, and the covenant promise of the Spirit ecured to his people "from henceforth and for ver."

7.—Their feet run to evil, &c.—"St. Paul uotes from these verses to prove the common uilt of Jews and Gentiles (Rom. iii. 15)."—irks.

9.—Therefore is judgment far from us.—The anguage changes from the third person to the rst. From that of rebuke to that of confession.

15, 16.—And the Lord saw...so his own arm rought salvation unto Him. — Commentators enerally regard this as describing the Lord's ctings in judgment, but the language points nuch more naturally to God becoming man and ringing in righteousness and salvation in his wn person.

17.—Righteousness as a breastplate, and a elmet of salvation on his head.—The allusion to his in Eph. vi. 14—16 is very clear, and tends to how that the Lord's saving work is here the ubject. What He did once for all in his own erson, his people by faith appropriate to themelves. His work of vengeance at his second oming follows in the latter half of this verse, and in the next one.

21.—My Spirit that is upon thee, &c.—This ovenant promise of the Spirit and the Word onfirms the rendering of A.V. of ver. 19, for it uggests that the word written by and ministered y the Spirit is the standard which He lifts up gainst the enemy.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 24.—ISAIAH LX.

Birks heads this chapter, "The full redemption of Zion."

1.—The glory of the Lord is risen upon thee.—'He who has been so long the 'light to lighten he Gentiles' will become manifestly 'the glory of his people Israel.' The figure is that of a right sunshine. 'A morning without clouds'... 2 Sam. xxiii. 4) will then dawn on a sinful world."—Birks.

2.—Gross darkness the people.—" (Lit. peoples) the Gentiles in contrast to Zion. In spite of real progress in art and science, spiritual darkness, blindness in the things of God, will, before srael's recovery, have settled down upon the nations once more in the last days."—Ibid. We see many tokens of this darkness thickening around us.

4.—My sons shall come from far.—"The sons and daughters are not Gentile converts, but Zion's own children returning from their former dispersion, when 'He that scattered Israel shall gather him' (Jer. xxxi. 10). Their captivity in all nations, and the treading down of Jerusalem (Luke xxi. 24) began and must cease together." —Birks.

7.—They shall come up with acceptance on mine altar.— There is no reason to doubt (from Ezek. xl., &c.) that with the restoration of Israel to their own land, and with the rebuilding of the Temple, there will be a restoration of literal sacrifices. The argument of the Epistle to the Hebrews is addressed to "partakers of the heavenly calling" and not to an earthly people.

19.—The sun shall be no more thy light by day, &c.—"In the prophet's view the Jerusalem of the period of glory in this world, and the Jerusalem of the eternal glory beyond, flow into one another."—Delitzsch. See as to the latter, Rev. xxi. 23.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 25.—ISAIAH LXI.

Our Lord (Luke iv. 16—22) declares Himself to be the speaker.

1.—The Spirit of the Lord God is upon Me; because the Lord hath anointed Me to preach good tidings unto the meek.—The work of the Spirit her contemplated is not so much the anointing of the Son of God to discharge his priestly work of offering and sacrifice of Himself, as to discharge the work which follows and results therefrom, the proclamation of the good news to sinners. Hence our Lord proclaims this Scripture fulfilled when He appeared as a preacher. The LXX. render the word "meek" by the same Greek word which our Lord uses in the first beatitude in the Sermon on the Mount: "Blessed are the poor in spirit." His first blessing is for those who from their consciousness of spiritual beggary (the same word is used of Lazarus, Luke xvi. 20) are in a position to receive the good tidings.

3.—Trees of righteousness. — Lit. "Oaks of righteousness." Compare as to "the planting of the Lord," Matt. xv. 13.

7.—In their land they shall possess the double.—The "double" is both the reversal of former judgment and double blessing in proportion. Comp. Job's final blessing, which was both a reversal of his former trial and a doubling of the numbers of "his substance" (Job i. 3; xlii. 12).

8.—I hate robbery for burnt offering.—Better, as in R.V., "I hate robbery with iniquity." It refers to Gentile treatment of Jews. "They have robbed them of their goods, and even of God's promises, applying the curses to the Jews, and taking the blessings to themselves."—Birks.

9.—Their seed shall be known among the Gentiles.—"The view which makes Israel and Zion here not mean the Jewish people and Jerusalem, but the Christian Church, does violence to the natural sense of every verse, and destroys the clear contrast with the Gentiles which marks the whole."—Birks.

10.—I will greatly rejoice in the Lord.—The speaker is not Jerusalem, the Church, or the Prophet, but still Messiah, as before. Hence the figure of the Bridegroom takes the lead. The risen Saviour, the King of righteousness, crowned with glory and honour, stands in glorious priestly apparel before the Majesty on high. He is both the Bridegroom and High Priest of the Church. But the figure of the Bride, adorned with her jewels, is added; because Messiah accounts the glory promised through Him to his Church as a part of his own."—Birks.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 26.—ISAIAH LXII.

1.—For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace.—"The speaker is the same as in lxi., the Messiah."—Speaker's Commentary.

8.—I will no more give thy corn to be meat for thine enemies.—"Believers of the Gentiles have long feasted on the histories, promises, and messages of Divine grace made through Jewish prophets and apostles, while the Jews themselves have pined for ages in spiritual famine. This contrast shall now cease. The stores of heavenly nourishment in the Word of God shall henceforward be enjoyed first of all and chiefly by the people of Israel, and by Gentiles only as grafted into the stock of Abraham, to whom God's mercy overflows, after satisfying the wants of his chosen and peculiar people."—Birks.

11.—Behold thy salvation cometh. — These words are by Rev. xxii. 12 plainly applied to Christ's second coming.

12.—And they shall call them...and thou shalt be called.—The difference between these two subjects, "them" and "thou," seems to point to the distinction between the Church with which Christ comes, and Zion to which He comes.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27.—ISAIAH LXIII.

1.—Who is this that cometh from Edom?—"Edom is the people and land of him who sold his birthright, and in heart shed his brother's blood (Gen. xxvii. 41)."—Birks. As such it typifies professing Christendom, and the judgment here described is that spoken of in Rev. xiv. 18, on "the vine of the earth."

7.—I will mention the lovingkindnesses of the Lord.—"That the confession which begins here is that of the Jewish people, or of the faithful among them, or one made in their behalf, is plain, and denied by few."—Birks.

9.—In all their affliction He was afflicted.—The original Jewish written text reads (as R.V. in margin), "In all their adversity, He was no adversary." "This reading has several reasons in its favour."—S.C. It seems, too, a better contrast to ver. 10, where "He turned to be their enemy," because "they rebelled, and vexed his Holy Spirit." In the "affliction" or adversity which Israel in their early days brought upon themselves, God may have given them up to their adversaries, but He was no adversary to them. It was different, however, when they rejected his Spirit speaking through the prophets, then "He turned to be their enemy."

11.—Where is He which brought them up out of the sea?—"The facts of the Exodus, in their deeper aspect, are here brought to light, and reveal distinctly the love of the Father, of the Word (the Angel of God's presence), and of the Holy Spirit, towards the people of Israel."—Birks.

18.—Our adversaries have trodden down thy sanctuary.—See Luke xxi. 24. This is Israel's appeal when the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 28.—ISAIAH LXIV.

"The Masoretic pointing joins the first verse of this chapter to the verses before. The two passages as a whole are very closely linked together. Out of the depth of their shame rises this piercing cry."—Birks.

3.—When thou didst terrible things.—The allusion is to Sinai (Deut. iv. 32). The parallel reappears Heb. xii. 18—29.

4.—Men have not heard nor perceived by the ear, &c.—This is the language of Israel when appealing for mercy. St. Paul quotes it (1 Cor. ii. 9), but adds characteristically of Christians, "But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." It refers not to the joys of heaven, but to the mercies of Christ's salvation.

5.—Thou meetest him that rejoiceth and worketh righteousness.—This is God's rule of judgment, but a penitent cannot meet Him on that ground, "for we have sinned." Then follows their confession of sin (ver. 6, 7).

11.—Our holy and our beautiful house.—"The words will apply to the exile in Babylon. But they apply even more forcibly still to the later and longer Roman desolation in which one stone of the Temple has not been left upon another, and Jerusalem has been trodden down for long ages."—Birks.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 29.—ISAIAH LXV.

1.—I am sought of them that asked not for Me. —Just as Joseph at first "spake roughly unto his brethren" (Gen. xlii. 7), so the Lord, in answer to Israel's appeal to "come down" for their deliverance, reminds them of Gentile adhesion to Him whilst He had spread out his hands in vain to them, a rebellious people. He then recapitulates (3—7) their leading sins, especially idolatry and Pharisaism. "One prevailed most before, the other after, the captivity; and they formed together the moral ground of God's long rejection of them."—Birks.

8.—Destroy it not; for a blessing is in it.—"The contrast lies between an unripe cluster and the same when fully ripened. Even when a cluster is unripe and the grapes are sour and worthless, 'one saith, Destroy it not; for a blessing is in it.' So God would deal with his people, still beloved for their fathers' sakes. With such rich promises of future blessing in store they should be sorely chastened, but not crushed or utterly destroyed." —Ibid.

9.—A seed out of Jacob.—"The seed from Jacob and Judah who are to inherit the land once more are the ripe vine clusters of the previous figure."—Ibid.

11.—That troop...that number.—R.V. renders these words respectively "Fortune" and "Destiny." Birks takes "troop" to mean "host," and "number" to mean "multitude," and says, "the words will thus serve to describe that Christian idolatry, in which the host of heaven, angels, martyrs, and saints, became the object of forbidden worship; and, perhaps, a later, Sadducean apostasy, where military power and the voice of the multitude are held supreme and practically worshipped, while the living God is forgotten or despised."

17.—I create new heavens and new earth.—The Millennium which interposes between Christ's coming, and "the new heavens and earth" (Rev. xxi. 1) was not as yet revealed, and so the interval is not taken into account.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

NICE.—On Sunday, October 2, Divine service was held for the first time at the new American Church, Boulevard Victor Hugo, Rev. John Cornell officiating.

SUNDAY IN FRANCE.—The sellers of hardware in Lyons and the mercers of Marseilles have in great majority closed their shops and houses of business on Sundays.

MECCA.—The Mohammedan pilgrimage this year numbered not less than 350,000 pilgrims from all parts of the Mohammedan world, a larger number than ever before visited the sacred city.

AUSTRIA.—In Bukowina, where the Jews are so numerous that a railway company was obliged to stop running trains on Saturday, many sons of Israel are turning their attention to the Gospel.

AT STUTTGART a service specially adapted for the partially deaf has been successfully started and carried on. Many who have long been deprived of the privilege of public worship, eagerly avail themselves of the service.

THE HOLY LAND.—The Palestine Society of German Catholics has bought a tract of 150 acres on the northern shore of Lake Gennesaret. They are also building a church at Cana of Galilee, in honour of St. Bartholomew, a native of Cana.

BALE.—The directors of the Swiss Central Railway have forbidden the sale at its stations of a paper which is bringing out one of Zola's novels. An excellent measure, which might well be extended to other publications, and be imitated by other bodies.—Le Christianisme.

TWENTY-SIX MISSIONARIES sailed lately from New York to join Bishop Taylor in Africa. They are to be self-supporting, and they carried with them household utensils, agricultural implements, &c. They expect to reach their destination in the interior of Africa about January 1.

MR. CHARLES HERALD has accepted the charge of the Cooper Union services, which the Presbytery of New York will resume on the first Sunday of November. Mr. Herald has had experience in evangelistic work in Chicago and other cities, and his labours have been blessed of God.

SPAIN.—From the October issue of Times of Refreshing in Spain, the organ of the Spanish Evangelisation Society, we learn that the work of God is progressing in a very encouraging degree. Rev. D. R. Kilpatrick, of Glasgow, records an interesting tour amongst the churches in Andalusia.

IN NEW ZEALAND, as in Victoria, says The British Weekly, a purely secular system of education has been established. A loud protest is being made in the former colony against it. Bishop Nevill, speaking in Dunedin, gave a picture of its results in an amount of cruelty, lawlessness, and indelicacy which were appalling.

NEUCHATEL.—The fifth Swiss Agricultural Exhibition has just been held here. A Bible kiosk was placed at the entrance of the exhibition. Bibles and religious books to the value of 800 francs were sold, and 50,000 tracts gratuitously distributed among the visitors. Two hundred New Testaments were given to the employés.

DR. PRESSENSE writes of the recent Abolitionist Conference at Lausanne:—"We are greatly rejoiced at Lausanne to learn how the work of the Federation is opening out on the Continent. Its attention is no longer concentrated on one special point; but it wages war with public immorality in every phase. Never was there more urgent need for this holy crusade."

BERNE.—The Mormon Propaganda in this Canton is rousing much attention. This sect being a vast emigration agency, the Government has carefully watched its operations, and, finding that most attention is given to those poor families having young daughters who are sent off in troops to Utah, it has forbidden all foreign Mormons to settle in the country.—Le Christianisme.

MORE THAN FIVE HUNDRED SUNDAY PAPERS are published in the United States. If the whole of them (writes Dr. T. Harwood Pattison) were to be given up it would be all the better for the country. The secularisation of Sunday is physically and commercially a misfortune. On such grounds alone it needs to be resisted, as well as on other and higher grounds besides.

HUNGARY.—A young Jew, Joseph Greger, has just been accused of setting forth a religion which is not acknowledged by the State. He with some fellow-believers whom he had gathered together, have been condemned to several weeks' imprisonment. His conversion was the result of a conversation with a Christian in a train, when a New Testament was given to him.—Evan.-Kirch. Anzeiger.

MOULMEIN.—The American Baptist missionaries in Burmah are to hold a three days' prayer-meeting at Moulmein, Nov. 2—4, for a larger measure of the Holy Spirit and power upon themselves and the native brethren. It is anticipated with very lively interest. Will you kindly remember us before the throne of the heavenly grace, and request your readers to do so too?

W. F. ARMSTRONG.

PROTESTANTS IN THE CAROLINE ISLANDS.—The correspondent of The Daily News telegraphs from Madrid that the Government are so convinced the recent troubles arose in consequence of religious persecutions, that it has ordered that only those who are convicted of actually murdering any Spaniards shall be punished. The authorities will check the zeal of the monks, and allow the Protestants complete liberty. The indemnity demanded by the American Government for the missionaries will be paid.

A TERRIBLE DISCLOSURE.—A Brahmin has published a tract on infanticide. He shows that the murder of 12,542 infants has been made public during the past fifteen years. This catalogue represents only a fraction of the murders committed upon helpless Hindoos. This Brahmin gentleman charges these murders upon the enforced widowhood of Hindoo women. The Indian Witness says, regarding the disclosures of the tract, "the battle will proceed; the social earthquake must come."

RUSSIA.—The Holy Synod has ordered inquiry to be made as to the progress of heresy in South Russian provinces, from which it appears that Protestantism is rapidly increasing, and "that it will be necessary to take severe measures to put a stop to it." The Russian ideal is the same as that so disastrously followed by Louis XIV., everyone must be of the same religion as the Czar. To think otherwise is treasonable. Thus, in religious matters, Russia is two centuries behind the rest of Europe.—Journal Religieux.

PRINCETON COLLEGE enters upon the one hundred and forty-first year of its existence with flattering prospects. On the assembling of the students Dr. McCosh made his annual address to the entering class. "In the course of my nineteen years' connection with the college," he said, "it never was in a more prosperous condition. Everything in that time has doubled, the students from 264 to nearly 600. The standard of admission is more rigid, yet in advancing it we have been careful to exclude none who are worthy, but have had few advantages."

CHICAGO.—The papers say that the work inaugurated in this city by Mr. Moody last spring is going forward with excellent results. Over four thousand families have been visited by lady missionaries, who have made a careful canvass of the city, visiting the homes of the people. As soon as the Training School building is completed and a corps of thirty or forty trained workers are ready for the field, it is expected that Mr. Moody will again take personal direction of the evangelistic work. He hopes that fifty of the business men and wealthy women of Chicago will each support one of these trained workers.

THE MUNICIPAL SCHOOLS OF ST. OUEN, near Paris, have come unenviably before the public by the extraordinary books given to the boys and girls as rewards at the close of the school year. The Municipal Council purchased the most furiously atheistic and revolutionary volumes with the public money, and sent them, the evening preceding the distribution, to the school teachers; the authors being Louis Michel, Blanqui, Jules Vallès, &c. Some indignant parents tore up the books, and a tumult ensued. The Mayor, who is an M.D., and on whom the responsibility falls, has been removed by Government.

THE PROTESTANT COMMUNITY IN BULGARIA have found in Prince Ferdinand a protector and friend. Soon after his arrival in the country he invited Pastor Tonjoroff, of Philippopolis, to an official reception, and through him addressed some words of encouragement and sympathy to the Protestant congregations. The Prince approved of M. Tonjoroff's work, and urged him to do his best "to spread light on every side." During the interview the visitor brought before the Prince the case of the prisoners in Bulgaria, and evoked a promise that he would promote the necessary reforms. The freedom accorded to the Protestants in Bulgaria is a proof that religious liberty exists there in something more than name.—Daily News.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY, Mr. Doane, who was arbitrarily arrested and imprisoned, and threatened with deportation, by the Governor of Ponape—one of the Caroline Islands, lately re-occupied by Spain—has been released on the energetic representations of the United States Consul at Manilla, who has also claimed compensation on his behalf. The missionary has now, it is believed, been taken back in a Government vessel to Ponape, the scene of his meritorious labours. The Home Government, it appears, quite approve of the course pursued by the Captain-General, and are averse to the persecuting system which was put in force in the Caroline Islands at the instigation of the newly-imported priests.

INDIA.—The Government, says The Indian Witness, appears to favour the extension of the C.D. Acts. Recent statements in The Gazette and other information confirm our worst fears concerning the attitude of the Government. It is claimed that the State can reduce vice by regulating it. We doubt this, and believe that the statistics presented by our Health Society are unreliable, and promiscuously selected. But, if we grant a fractional sanitary advantage, which the most careful statistics gathered in England disprove, are we to follow historic precedent and kill off the decrepit and infirm, because it is economical and physically commendable? "Man shall not live by bread alone," means that man is more than an animal; and the action of a thousand legislatures, that provide and pander to him as a mere animal, will not destroy the utterance of Christ.

A CHRISTIAN COLLEGE FOR CHINA.—Rev. Dr. Happer, who has laboured for many years in the city of Canton, in connection with the American Presbyterian Mission, is now in the United States raising funds for establishing a Christian college in China. He has already succeeded in getting over 100,000 dollars, which will secure the establishment of the College. In connection with this, Rev. B. C. Henry, of the same mission, and now in Canton, has sent home a petition from four hundred Chinese officials, gentry, scholars, and merchants, asking that the College be established at Canton. A great many of the signatories are men who hold high literary rank, and they state that their petition expresses "the united statement of the feeling of all the gentry in the province of Canton." This is certainly a wonderful step in advance, and is another indication that China is really awaking.

A NEW TRANSLATION of the New Testament, b Professor Stapfer, is announced. This will be at leas the twelfth in circulation.

THE SORROWS AND EVILS that result fro woman's forced inferiority and bondage in India ar legion. It is settled, as well as medical authority ca settle it, that the early development of Indian women i chargeable to child marriage. Recent cases before th Courts in Calcutta show that this system has a stron hold upon some people in a few branches of the Chri tian Church. These same cases show that some pr fessed Christians are quite as ready to testify to scree a wife-beater as to tell the whole truth. But the day wi come when woman's claims to life and protection wil be fully conceded. In the meantime, missionaries wh take no notice of man's inhumanity are guilty of sinfu neglect. To cover up the brutality of husbands, les our religion should become an offence, is such an un worthy and unrighteous course that we hesitate t think any missionary has sunk to such a level.—Indian Witness.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Rev. J. M. Hewson, Baptist agent, has been conducting a Gospel temperance mission in South Wales with good success.

At a special meeting of the Portsmouth Working Men's Liberal Union a proposal to establish a drinking bar in connection with the club was defeated by a very large majority.

In connection with the Baptist Union a great total abstinence meeting was held in the Albert Hall, Sheffield. Rev. Dr. Clifford presided, and the audience was very large and enthusiastic.

At the closing meeting of the Baptist Union at Sheffield a resolution was passed condemning the traffic in strong drink among the native races connected with our colonies and dependencies.

At the annual meeting of the South Wales Temperance Association, at Carmarthen, the Secretary said Wales was ripe for a national plebiscite on the drink question. The value of the Sunday Closing Act was acknowledged.

In the Isle of Man intemperance may be dealt with more freely than in England. The coroner increases the fine in proportion to the number of offences an individual commits. He lately issued an order that no publican should supply a certain man with drink.

The United Kingdom Alliance annual meetings were held recently in Manchester, and were marked by great enthusiasm. It was announced that Mr. Allison, M.P., had consented to introduce into the House of Commons, and take charge of, a Direct Veto Bill. At the evening meeting, held at the Free Trade Hall, a tone of eager earnestness for early legislation on the Direct Veto marked the speeches.

FOREIGN.

In New Zealand Mr. W. T. Glover is prosecuting temperance work with encouraging results.

Mr. Gough's widow, with the assistance of Rev. Mr. Gould, of Boston, is preparing a biography of her late husband.

The New Zealand Drink Bill shows a decrease in the consumption of intoxicants, including beer, wine, and spirits, of a total of 372,429 gallons.

Canon Wilberforce was told in Maine that that State, once the poorest in the Union, had now an embarrassing surplus of no less than 47,000,000 dollars.

President Cleveland is stated to have ordered that if the Sunday closing law in Washington is not better enforced the Commissioners must be changed.

The question of a drink monopoly for the State is under consideration by the French Government Commission, lately appointed to investigate the causes of the increase of intemperance.

No man but a total abstainer is allowed under the laws of Michigan to be employed as engineer, train despatcher, fireman, brakeman, or other railroad servant. Any railroad violating this law incurs a fine of 500 dollars for each offence.

Dr. Norman Kerr has been interviewing an hotel proprietor as to the bibulous qualifications of his customers. For a lawyers' dinner he provided a good deal of liquor; for clergymen not quite so much; and for doctors not anything like so much.

M. Rouvier, President of the Council, and Minister of Finance, in France, has appointed a commission to inquire into the dangers to the public health from the use of made-up wines, which has become so large an industry, since the ravages of the phylloxera.

News comes from Norway (says the New York Nation) that the temperance movement is making extraordinary progress there. Within a few years 650 total abstinence societies, with a membership of 73,000, have been formed, besides a number of Good Templar lodges and Blue Ribbon societies, which all unite in fighting the drink evil. An address to the Storthing demanding a law prohibiting the manufacture and importation of alcoholic liquors obtained in a short time the signature of 65,000 men and women over twenty-one years of age, although it was not by any means generally circulated. In the province of Christiansand a similar address obtained 35,000 signatures.

WELCOME HOME.—The soup suppers at the Sailors' Welcome Home, Ratcliff-highway, are about to be resumed for the winter. These suppers are intended to alleviate the sufferings of the poo of the neighbourhood, and in connection with them Gospel meetings are held, which have in past years been the means of much blessing. Miss Child and the workers will be very thankful for the help of Christian friends.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

An anonymous friend has sent a donation of £5000 to he Church Missionary Society.

Though Canon Smith has not been three years in wansea, he has already been instrumental in erecting our new churches in the district.

The Record will publish this week the first of a series f articles on Modern Socialism, by Mr. H. H. Champion, hose paper at the Church Congress excited such nterest.

Bishop Caldwell, of Tinnevelley, Madras, will next ear complete his fiftieth year of residence in India nder the auspices of the Society for the Propagation of he Gospel.

The Committee of the Church Missionary Society are repared to accept the offers of ladies willing at their wn charges to work in the mission field either in alestine or elsewhere.

Rev. Charles Mackeson, of the Church of the Good hepherd, Mansfield-road, South Hampstead, recently eceived back into the Church of England a lady who ad gone over to the Roman Catholic Church.

Rev. C. J. Atherton, of the Parochial Mission Society, ecently held five days' special services in the Tavistock arish church, which it is believed will result in the mprovement of the religious tone of the parish.

Dr. H. P. Parker, Bishop Hannington's successor in astern Equatorial Africa, has reached Mamboia, aving journeyed there from Mombasa by a route hich has not before been traversed by any European.

The recently-appointed Vicar of St. John's Church, West Chelsea, Rev. F. W. A. Wilkinson, has introduced he Church Army into his parish. Christian helpers with voices to form a choir are greatly needed. Rev. W. Haslam will conduct a ten days' mission in St. John's Church, commencing on Sunday, October 23.

METHODIST.

The effort to establish Sunday-schools for working men is meeting with success in Wolverhampton.

Rev. Alexander M'Aulay and Mr. William Sampson, the Cornish Wesleyan evangelist, expect to start on November 17 for an evangelistic tour in Jamaica.

It is proposed to open immediately at City-road a girls' parlour, and a reading-room for men and youths. There is no neighbourhood in London where social want of this kind is more imperatively needed.

The West-end Mission commences to-day (Friday) with a sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, at St. James's Hall, at 11 o'clock. The ladies who are to help in the work are to be attired in uniform by which they will be distinguished.

A remarkable evidence of continued interest in the old-fashioned kind of Methodist love-feast comes from Berry Brow, in the Huddersfield Circuit, where the chapel was crowded early in the afternoon. Many of the people had travelled long distances to be present, and the speaking and singing was kept up with vigour to the close.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The Congregational Church at Kettering have erected a splendid block of school-buildings at a cost of £3500.

A Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour, after the American model, has been commenced at Crewe.

The Evangelical Magazine for October contains an excellent portrait of Rev. C. Fleming Williams, pastor of the new church at Stoke Newington.

Writing from Brooklyn, Dr. Parker says that he is receiving lavish kindness on every hand. He has been entertained by Rev. Joseph Cook, and by Mr. Moody, and expresses himself as delighted with both of these friends.

Rev. L. Weaver is leaving Ruyton xi. Towns, Salop, after a pastorate of over eighteen years, and is going to reside in Liverpool to engage in evangelistic work. His address will be 71, Moss lane, Aintree, Liverpool.

Rev. William Marshall, of Cambridge Heath Church, was recently presented with a testimonial, consisting of £1000, in token of the appreciation in which the church held his ministerial services during his pastorate of twenty-five years.

The Congregational Churches of Flintshire are arranging for two Conventions for "the revival of faith and piety." The Welsh one will be held in Bethel Chapel, Mold; while the English gathering will be in Christ Church, Rhyl.

Mr. Thackeray, who has been engaged in evangelistic work, has accepted a cordial invitation to carry on the same work at the united mission stations of Oulton and Wood Dalling, in connection with the Norfolk Congregational Union. He will commence his labours on October 23.

Dr. R. W. Dale, who is now on a visit to Australia, accompanied by Mr. Albert Spicer, has stated that personally he is, in educational matters, a pure secularist, believing that the work of religious instruction belongs to the churches, and that the State should confine itself to its own sphere.

At the annual conversazione of the members of Trinity Congregational Church, Aberdeen, Rev. John Duncan, the pastor, said that the total membership amounted to nearly seven hundred. When he came to Aberdeen, twenty-nine years ago, the membership did not number fifty. The members connected with the Congregational Churches in that city numbered about six hundred; now they were about one thousand six hundred, an advance which was greater in proportion than the increase in the population.

At the annual meetings of the Sussex County Association, Rev. Chas. New urged the duty of ministering as the work of the whole Church. In many congregations only a handful of devout women and young people do the real work. Many who have been professing Christians for years have not once stirred themselves to bring a sinner to Christ. Mr. New also spoke strongly in favour of holding after-meetings at the close of each public service. Much is lost in consequence of the want of personal dealing with the unconverted.

BAPTIST.

Mr. William R. Rickett, of Sunnyfield, Hampstead Heath, has accepted the office of Treasurer of the Baptist Missionary Society, in succession to the late Mr. Joseph Tritton.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon, of Greenwich, has been visiting Glasgow. On Sunday week he addressed in all some three thousand people, two of the largest churches of the city being crowded to the doors. The proceeds of his visit will be devoted to the General and Home Mission Funds of the South-side Baptist Church.

The staff of the Baptist Ladies' Zenana Mission consists of 44 lady Zenana visitors, 17 assistants, 54 native Bible-women, and 50 native school teachers. There are 50 girls' schools and women's classes, containing 1630 pupils. About 1000 Zenana homes are visited for regular instruction, in which are 1660 pupils. The income of the Society last year was £6422.

At a meeting of the Baptist Ministers' Prayer Union, held in Sheffield during the autumnal session, Rev. F. B. Meyer announced that 150 ministers had joined the Prayer Union, and many testified to the benefit derived from it. It was decided to hold a meeting at Melbourne Hall, Leicester, on Thursday, November 24, for prayer and conference. Rev. George Wainwright, 51, Park-street, Greenheys, Manchester, is the secretary of the Union.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Four senior scholars of Miss Maclagan's girls' school at Amoy, China, have been received into Church fellowship.

Rev. James E. Somerville, formerly of Broughty Ferry, has been appointed to take charge of the Free Church winter station at Mentone. Dr. Murray Mitchell is to minister to the Church at Nice during the winter.

The London Presbytery are looking forward to an active winter of evangelistic work. The plan pursued this year will not be that of employing special evangelists, but the work will be done by the ministers themselves.

Rev. John Smith, of Edinburgh, says that family worship is not observed in Scotland as it used to be; there is a relaxation of parental discipline, and the commandment being turned upside down, so that now parents obey their children; and there is visible around us that love of pleasure which marked the decadence of Rome.

Rev. James Stalker, the new pastor of St. Matthew's Free Church, Glasgow, five weeks ago commenced a Wednesday evening prayer meeting in the church, an effort which has met with much success. At the meeting on October 5 there were upwards of four hundred listeners present, including a goodly number of young men and women. The subject of the prayer-meeting this winter is the Psalms.

SALVATION ARMY.

The General has arranged to visit Sweden and Denmark during the present month.

At Bury St. Edmunds one hundred souls have professed salvation within the last month.

There is little or no change in Miss Eva Booth's condition, and she still remains in a very weak condition.

A mission to the Kaffirs, Pondos, Zulus, Fingoes, Basutos, and other native tribes of South Africa is to be commenced shortly.

The Army is busy at work in several of the towns of Queensland. Its work in Brisbane is taking the practical form of rescuing fallen women.

The Salvation Army Building Association have declared and paid a dividend of four per cent. per annum for the six months ending September 30.

The gift which Commissioner Tucker found awaiting him on arrival at Bombay consisted of a cheque for £1100, not £11,000 as reported in many of the newspapers.

Major Roberts states that many corps have been formed in Exeter, and that in the twenty-fifth corps 1473 souls professed to give themselves to God during the past year.

The work of the Rescue Home at St. Helier's, Jersey, progresses steadily. Many who had wandered away from home, and had fallen into sin, are to-day in respectable situations, and doing well.

A correspondent at Pinner states that the notice in our last issue as to the prosecution of Army officers is incorrect. Only one officer was fined—2s. 6d. and costs, with a week in which to pay it; but he declined to pay, and went to prison.

At Buckwood, Australia, the publicans subscribed funds for the formation of a "Skeleton Army," which was to put to route the Salvation Army, but after three weeks the former surrendered, and forming themselves in a circle round the Salvation Army, gave three enthusiastic cheers, and dared anyone to touch a soldier.

Last week, says The War Cry, four hundred and thirty souls sought salvation at the penitent-forms of the various barracks of the London divisions. It is calculated that if souls were saved in London at this rate every week, "in fourteen weeks the entire population would be saved, and that without any individual convert being instrumental in the salvation of more than one per week."

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Western yearly meeting, held in Indiana, was a time of great blessing. The Irish deputation was present, and had an open door for service.

Frederick Sessions has just held an interesting mission, embracing Gospel and Bible-reading meetings in Kendal. They were largely attended.

Mary E. Beck, of London, recently gave two addresses on the principles of the Society in the meeting-house in North Portland-street, Glasgow, the first on Worship and Ministry, and the second on Baptism and the Supper. Several years have elapsed since any addresses of this kind have been delivered in Glasgow.

The Conference of representatives of all the orthodox "yearly meetings" in the world met in Richmond, Indiana, on September 23, and continued in session for several days. There has never been a similar gathering held, and the deepest interest is felt in its doings and conclusions. The question of issuing a more definite and uniform standard of fundamental doctrine, and regarding "ordinances," the priesthood of believers, peace, and oaths was discussed and decided on. A Minute endorsed by eight yearly meetings was adopted, which is as follows:—"We believe it to be inconsistent for anyone to be acknowledged or retained in the position of a minister or elder amongst us who continues to participate in or to teach the necessity of the outward rites of baptism and the Supper."

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Rev. G. R. Grubb has held evangelistic missions in Kilkee, Kinsale, and Queenstown.

A Methodist Local Preachers' Association has been organised in Dublin with the object of meeting together from time to time for mutual improvement and encouragement, the study of God's Word, and practice in homiletics, reports of successful work, or the seeking of new openings for labour.

The Irish Church Missions are doing excellent service. The Society now employs four Bible-women, three colporteurs, and sixty-two Scripture readers, who speak in either English or Irish, according as the people among whom they labour speak. It has eighty-three day-school teachers, with three thousand scholars and thirty-two Sunday-schools.

The annual meeting of the Central Presbyterian Association was held in the Assembly Hall, Belfast, on Thursday evening, last week. The report for the year was highly encouraging. The reading-room, Bible-class, and educational classes have been largely attended, and the Committee believed the past year was the most successful they had ever had. It was decided that in future a paid Secretary should be appointed.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. John Thomas, Congregational minister, of Dowlais, Wales.—Mr. Hugh Hodge, a prominent figure among the English Nonconformists of North Wales.—Rev. William Butters, ex-president of the Australasian Wesleyan Conference, and for more than fifty years in the Wesleyan ministry.—Rev. William Thomson, parish minister of Belhelvie, N.B.—Mr. W. Newett, father of Mr. W. H. Newett, secretary of the Manchester Y.M.C.A.—Rev. C. E. Haslam, rector of Toddington.—Rev. F. Pigot, curate of Knowsley, Lancashire.—Rev. John Spicer Binder, Congregational minister of Penge, S.E.—Rev. Alex. Cross, of the Independent Church, Ardrossan.—Rev. James Ingram, M.D., of the U.P. Church, Eday, Orkney.—Madame Honorine Tourn, wife of Edouard Tourn, of the Evangelical Library and Bible Depôt, 38, Rue de la République, Marseilles, on September 5, after a long and painful illness.—Mr. Alexander Sutherland, a devoted elder of the Free Church at Portknockie.—Rev. William Drury, for forty years vicar of Braddan, Isle of Man.—Mrs. Fentiman, wife of Rev. Albert Fentiman, Wesleyan Mission, Benares, North India.—Mr. Anthony Golightly, an earnest worker for twenty-one years in connection with Rowley Baptist Chapel, co. Durham.—Mr. John Christopherson, for over fifty years a valued and useful member, and for many years deacon of the Baptist Church at Tottlebank, Lancashire.—Samuel Lonsdale, aged 68, missionary to sailors for forty-one years.—Rev. Edward Garbett, Canon of Winchester, for ten years rector of Barcombe, a faithful preacher of "Christ, and Him crucified."—Rev. Thomas Huntley Greene, vicar of East Claydon, an earnest evangelical preacher of the Gospel.—Rev. William Hunt, rector of St. Michael's, Cornhill, E.C.- Rev. James Hamblin Smith, Canon of Rochester.—Lady Brassey.

EGYPT AND THE HOLY LAND. — Mr. G. H. Lord recently gave four lectures on this subject, to crowded audiences, in Bethesda Free Chapel, Sunderland. His description of the manners and dress of the Bedouin Sheik, the Damascus merchant, the Jerusalem and Syrian women, were most interesting; while his explanations of the rolling stone, the ten pieces of silver, the places of interest mentioned in the Bible, and the home and haunts of Jesus (which Mr. Lord visited) were graphically portrayed.

LIVERPOOL CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.—The tenth annual meetings of the Liverpool Christian Convention were held on October 6 and 7. The object of these meetings is to bring together members of the various denominations, and, by united prayer, to seek a fuller preparation for the work of extending the Redeemer's kingdom at home and abroad. The subject this year was "Home Evangelisation," and addresses were delivered by Revs. E. W. Moore, F. B. Meyer, J. Wells, T. Champness, in addition to several local ministers. The services concluded with the Lord's Supper.

MISSIONARY HYMN.

Thou Son of God, who died to save
  The whole world from the death of sin,
And rose triumphant from the grave
  That we thy joy might enter in.
    Stretch forth thy loving, piercèd hands,
    O'er all the distant heathen lands.

Disperse the clouds of guilt and shame,
  The gloom of sin's tempestuous night;
Let every heart now learn thy name,
  And pass from darkness into light.

Thy lonely life of loss and pain,
  Thy bitter pangs and dying woe
Were for thy creatures' glorious gain,
  That each the love Divine might know.

With bounteous grace fill every soul,
  That, as the waters fill the sea,
From shore to shore, and pole to pole,
  The glad earth may be full of Thee.

James Bowker.

Appeals.

Miss Lee (Hurst-road, Ocklynge, Eastbourne) having placed out ten girls this year from her Orphan Home, would be glad to fill up the vacuum. She is without funds to do so at present, though she has several distressing applications.

Rescue Home, Poplar.—In a private letter Mrs. Wilkes writes:—How hard the struggle has been these nearly ten years, only God knows. Many hundreds of women and girls have passed through my hands; not a few have done well, and I persevere, though fearfully short of means. The deaths amongst my friends have been disastrous. I feel it so hard not to be able to make the best use of my experience.

Missions to Seamen.—Commander Dawson, of this Mission, writes:—Hundreds of ships will be running in under headlands for shelter, where our forty Mission yachts and boats will board them before a change of wind takes them to sea again. Disused Bibles, Prayer Books, hymn-books, reading books, magazines, and periodicals are issued by the hundred thousand annually, but our stock is quite exhausted. We need also some thousand white "crash" bags, to contain the books, the size to take pictorial newspapers, a pattern of which would be gladly sent from the office in Buckingham-street, Strand.

WORKERS IN BRISTOL.—A movement has been inaugurated among Christian workers in this city for the formation of a Union for purposes of mutual edification, and also for organising united and systematic Gospel effort among the masses. The project is a most praiseworthy one; we trust that its success will be complete, and that such a good example will be followed elsewhere.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE WORKERS' UNION.—The October issue of The Gospel Temperance Monthly is so full of live matter as to indicate that our Hoxton Hall friends are devising large things for the coming winter's work in the temperance field. "The Platform Bureau" department is most complete and extensive; it will certainly be to the advantage of local associations to attach themselves to the Union, and thereby secure a share in the wealth of speaking power at its disposal. Full particulars can be had from Mr. J. T. Rae, the general secretary, 34, Hoxton-street, London, N.

Subscriptions Received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Monday, October 17, 1887.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

ASYLUM for FATHERLESS CHILDREN, Reedham, near Caterham Junction, Surrey. This unsectarian Institution is entirely dependent upon public benevolence. It is open to fatherless children of either sex from all parts of the kingdom. They are received as early as three months old, and are retained and cared for in every way until they are 15 years of age.

Since the foundation of the Charity in 1844, 1,500 children have been admitted to its benefits and 310 are now in the Asylum. Their maintenance entails an expenditure of at least £8,000 per annum, but of that sum only £2,500 is provided by annual subscriptions.

The large balance is dependent upon donations and egacies. FUNDS are urgently NEEDED.

THE GOSPEL IN CHINA.

A SPECIAL PLEA.

SINCE the great recent developments of Mission work in China, and the free access of the Missionary to every part, there has been presented a far wider opportunity for the distribution of CHRISTIAN LITERATURE.

Thousands now receive and read the Tracts telling of SALVATION THROUGH CHRIST, where formerly only a few would accept them.

Miss Gordon Cumming, in her "Wanderings in China," tells the story taken from the North China Tract Society's Report of the "Chinese Cornelius," to whom the light came through reading a Chinese version of "The Peep of Day." This is a sample of what is going on in various parts of the world.

In many directions the people of this great country are first made familiar with Christian Truth through reading the publications issued from the Mission Presses.

A voice has often been raised in Missionary gatherings, crying, "CHINA FOR CHRIST!" Will the friends of the Religious Tract Society help to realise this grand result by additional contributions to enable the Missionaries at the different chief centres to spread much more widely the knowledge of the wonderful love of God in Christ, by means of specially adapted publications?

Thus CHINA'S MILLIONS will be familiarised with the truth concerning the One living and true God, who will have "all men to be saved, and to come to a knowledge of the truth."

Contributions should be addressed to the Secretaries, Religious Tract Society, 56, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

MISS CHARLOTTE MASON,

Of the House of Rest for Christian Workers.

(From Photograph by Mr. G. Churchill, Eastbourne.)

EVENTS are constantly corroborating the truthfulness of a remark we often heard fall from the lips of the late Earl of Shaftesbury — that this is pre-eminently the age of the ministry of women. In the company of ministering women whose faithful and unwearied labours in Christian word and work are known to all the churches, the subject of this sketch holds an honourable, almost a unique, place. There are other institutions having the same object as that of the Houses of Rest at Kilburn and Eastbourne; but Miss CHARLOTTE MASON, by the Divine blessing sanctifying her natural force of character, has made these Homes the best and most useful of their kind—so far, at least, as our knowledge extends. The fact that her work has reached the close of its twenty-first year, and is more appreciated now than ever, speaks volumes for its genuine character and the reality of the need it is intended to supply. This juncture in its history seems a fitting opportunity for presenting to our readers a portrait of the founder and a few comprehensive particulars as to the origin and growth of these admirable resting-places, where so many worn and weary mission workers have been rested, refreshed, and restored to happy service in the far-spreading vineyard of the Common Master.

We are not able to relate any biographical details of Miss Mason's early life, or of the processes by which she was led, in the first instance, to put on the yoke of Christian service. The following brief account of her conversion, from her own pen, will be read with interest, and we believe with profit:—

My conversion may be described as having three stages. I was first led to give up much of the worldliness and pleasure in which I delighted, and to become religious. After a time a most extraordinary fear of death took possession of me. After weeks of intense agony and dread, one winter's night in 1861 I was sitting by the fire in my own room, when my eye caught the text, "All things are possible to him that believeth." All at once the truth flashed upon me that my sins were pardoned, and that I was a child of God. I was ready to dance for joy; nothing but a sense of propriety kept me from ringing my bell and calling up the whole household, midnight though it was, to rejoice with me. On the Sunday, as I entered the church, the whole building seemed to have undergone a transformation; and I was enabled to enter into the beauty and pathos of the Liturgy in a way that I had never realised before.

The third stage was in 1875, while attending the Brighton Convention, and listening to an address by M. Theo. Monod, of Paris, on Peter's stepping out of the vessel to meet his Lord. The Holy Spirit revealed to my heart that in response to faith Christ does consciously "dwell in" us. Up to that time I had known and loved and trusted a Saviour up in heaven; from that moment He became a living presence within, according to the promise, "I will dwell in them, and walk in them." I have never believed in, or taught, any of the theories of "perfectionism," or of the "eradication of the roots of sin," or any other of the numerous crotchets that have grown out of what was called the "holiness movement;" but I have found in my experience that while I am just as liable to stumble and fall as ever, at the same time the presence of the Lord is a living reality; and I have found that He is able to keep from stumbling all who really trust and obey Him.

We pass on to the period, nearly a quarter of a century ago, when she was brought much into contact with earnest workers for God, chiefly those of her own sex. She saw that to the spiritual and physical welfare of almost every class in society godly women were devoting a lavish expenditure of heart and brain and muscle. Many, if not most, of these were persons by no means rich in worldly goods, though rich enough in faith and love and zeal. And so the thought was pressed upon her, without a doubt by the Divine Spirit, that while these sisters were caring for others, scarcely anyone was specially caring for them. The following incident, written by Miss Mason's own pen, in her excellent little monthly, Rest and Reaping, describes one link in the chain of experiences that urged her forward to the turning point in her life-work:—

I was visiting a lady who had established a mission amongst the merchant seamen of one of our large seaport towns, and met frequently a poor woman who was employed as a Bible-woman and visitor. She was a most earnest and humble-minded Christian, and deeply attached to her work, in which she had been engaged many years, and was then getting into middle life. A mere cursory glance would have given one the impression that she was a strong, healthy person; but upon closer observation I perceived certain symptoms about her which led me to question her a little as to her state of health. After a good deal of hesitation I at last elicited what I had suspected—that she was suffering from that terrible scourge, cancer. I found that she was never free from pain, and that she carried on her work under the greatest possible difficulties. I suggested that it was really imperative that she should retire from work, and have proper rest and care. At the word "retire" she turned upon me a most resigned and placid look, but which seemed to have in it a slight touch of benevolent amusement at my ideas of "retiring," and answered, "If I retire, Miss, it must be to the workhouse!" Ah, she has many years ago "retired" into the presence of her

Lord and Master, who makes no workhouse provision for those who love and faithfully serve Him!

Facts such as these were enough to impel a less sympathetic heart to provide for her tired-out sisters some substitute for "the workhouse;" but with force of character Miss Mason combines the sure-footed cautiousness that follows and does not outrun the leadings of Providence. She looked, therefore, for a clear call to arise and undertake the work she saw to be so much needed. She tells that, during convalescence from a serious illness, the intimation came distinctly to her mind that she should provide a Home for those who had occupied so large a place in her thoughts.

It was sufficiently disheartening for Miss Mason, all aglow as she was with enthusiasm for her new-found calling, to meet with cold repulses from several Christian friends whom she consulted on the subject; but even this seeming ill was turned to good, for it only drove her the more completely to take counsel with her God, and developed that simple unwavering trust in his goodness and grace, which has been a distinguishing feature of the Mission throughout its course. Some kind words of encouragement and sympathy from Dr. and Mrs. Cranage, of Wellington, Salop, when on a visit to them, led Miss Mason ultimately, after much cogitation and painstaking search, to secure and open a cottage in that country town, in which to begin her work. The first money that came to her as an index of God's mind with respect to the provision for the work, was a shilling given to her by a young Bible-woman; it was all she could afford, but she meant "to go on praying about it," and was sure the means would be forthcoming. "No shilling," says Miss Mason, "either before or since, ever looked to me like that shilling." A small beginning truly, but there was that in it which showed that the work was a true and living one that would grow. And grown it has amazingly, even in the matter of pounds, shillings, and pence, for our sister was able to tell, at the "coming-of-age gathering" in Exeter Hall last week, that during the twenty-one years past, there had passed through her hands for the work £23,876. Growth, indeed! and not a very slow growth either, but that which indicates a full and vigorous life. The cottage at Wellington was suited to receive some four or five inmates, and the first to enjoy its benefits was a widow who stood much in need of the recuperation it afforded. At this stage of her career, Miss Mason received plenty of advice and criticism; but, as a welcome offset, there came contributions larger or smaller, some of them, we are glad to be reminded, from the readers of The Revival.

We have not space to follow, through all its stages, the steady development of the work. It was not long before Miss Mason saw the necessity of removing her House of Rest to London, where the workers are most numerous. She was directed to a house in Cambridge Gardens, Kilburn, an elevated and healthy suburb. There are some striking facts told by Miss Mason as to the way in which God provided for the increased demands in furnishing the new Home. But the whole history of this work, indeed, is one continuous record of Divine intervention in response to trusting prayer, and of supply in the very nick of time and need. Anybody who does not believe in answered prayer, had better not apply to Miss Mason, if they wish to be confirmed in their unbelief. "When I commenced the work," said Miss Mason, "I had two ideas in my mind. I wanted to care for those who were labouring in the Lord's vineyard, and for whom, at that time, no special provision was made. I had read my Bible and had found so much in it about the wonderful promises of God with respect to the supply of temporal things. It seemed to me, therefore, that if I entered on a work for God at all, I must do it in simple dependence upon Him." It is in this spirit that she has continued, and God has fully honoured her confidence.

In carrying out her first idea of caring for the exhausted workers without means of their own, she had been as signally blessed. We might fill every page of this issue with the testimonies that have been freely given by those who sojourned under the roof of the House of Rest as to the exceeding comfort and help it has been to them physically, mentally, and spiritually. Recognising the fact that the different parts of our complex nature act and re-act on each other, Miss Mason sought from the first to make her house not only a haven of bodily rest and re-creation, but a well-spring of refreshment and a storehouse of equipment for the heart and the soul. Without these things the mere temporary cessation from wearing toil of muscle and bone and brain, would lose half its value as a restorative and a preparation for further effort. All the rest the Christian ought to look for in this world, while strength remains, is merely a snatch of time in between the spells of arduous work. Rest comes sure and soon, it is true, but not here. Still there arrives a time when the wonderful elasticity of nature will no longer assert itself, and when the veteran worker must lay down his or her weapons of active warfare. It is not given to every one to die in harness. For these permanently disabled sisters, Miss Mason seeks to make some provision, either in the House of Rest or by a small pecuniary allowance. This is a branch of the work which she is anxious to develop, and the need of it will become more and more clamant as the years go on.

The house at Kilburn soon grew too small for the growing calls on its accommodation. The house adjoining was acquired. Before this a seaside branch had been secured at Eastbourne, and this, as may be supposed, has done splendid service in furthering the objects of the Institution. All these houses have been paid for, and are put in trust for the uses of the work. Miss Mason is now seeking, by a special fund, to acquire the freehold of the Eastbourne house, and also to make much-needed provision for aged and invalided Christian workers. That is an object which must of necessity commend itself to the sympathies of all.

Some time ago enlarged accommodation was provided at Kilburn for the holding of prayer and other meetings. The robust Scriptural teaching given in the Home as to the privileges and resources of the believer, in Christ, has found acceptance with many besides the residents, and this added accommodation has led to the holding of monthly Conferences on some vital Christian doctrine or experience. These are much enjoyed as seasons of prayer, praise, and testimony, and the place has become a centre of spiritual health to many. It has often been likened to the House Beautiful, where Christian was received, and entertained, and strengthened on his pilgrim journey towards the Celestial City. Many within its walls have not only had health and strength of body given back to them, but have been filled with fresh or quickened impulses for mission work, both at home and abroad.

Early in her public career Miss Mason was led to take a strong position on the question of total abstinence, as the only safe ground for the Christian, and especially the witnessing Christian, to occupy. This position she has maintained intact, and she is able to make her boast in the Lord that He has enabled her to carry on these Homes for twenty-one years without spending a penny in alcoholic drinks. That is a fact worth many arguments.

We can only wish and pray, in concluding our outline and imperfect sketch, that God may gird our earnest and devoted sister with strength to serve Him and to serve her generation for many a year to come.

Dr. H. G. GUINNESS on PALESTINE.

Dr. H. Grattan Guinness addressed recently at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, a full and appreciative audience largely composed of young men and youths drawn from the surrounding City warehouses, his subject being "A Recent Tour in Palestine." The lecturer having lately returned from the East was able to describe the scenes through which he had passed with vivid freshness, excellent lime-light illustrations contributing to the enjoyment of the audience. The lecturer made us travel with him through the mysterious land of Egypt, past the solemn Sphinx, and that wondrous pyramid whose height and colossal proportions exceed those of any other building upon earth. Jerusalem, the city which has survived seventeen sieges, being reached, we examined its sacred memorials, its Via Dolorosa, and its surroundings, so full of memories of "God with us."

The lecturer described the idolatrous orgies he witnessed on the Festival of Easter at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, and evoked sympathetic concurrence from his hearers when he said that he believed God, who interred his servant Moses "where no man knoweth of his grave unto this day," had surely hidden the true locality of that holy sepulchre from the degrading worship of which the reputed spot is now the scene. Confirmations of Scripture met the traveller on every hand in experiences of toiling in rowing on the buffeting waves of Galilee, in the topography and sociology of the country. The humorous occurrences incident upon travel found a happy place in these graphic sketches of journeyings among scenes of surpassing interest.

Dr. Guinness referred affectingly to the recovery of his wife from the fever contracted towards the close of their wedding tour.

THE "DOWN-GRADE" AGITATION.

No. II.

In a former article we considered mainly that class of critics in whose judgment Mr. Spurgeon has missed the mark by a false alarm. In this article we shall endeavour briefly to ascertain what the accused have to say for themselves, and how far, if at all, their own professions corroborate Mr. Spurgeon's allegations. The very nature of the case demands that we should make our appeal to the verifying touchstone of fact. If there are those who dispute Mr. Spurgeon's view of the case, believing that it is a second edition of "Much ado about nothing," we can only say that such a state of things makes it all the more imperative that we should get to know the testimony of the facts themselves.

Of the many concerned in Mr. Spurgeon's indictment, we know of none who have a better right to be heard in reply than the conductors of The Christian World and their supporters. In no avowedly religious organ of our day having to do with Dissent is the cause of the "New Theology" so warmly advocated as in the pages of that journal. Is "Modern Thought" a deadly cobra in Mr. Spurgeon's eyes? It is, in the eyes of The Christian World, "the glory of the century."

In looking, then, at the witness borne, we must admit, when the chaff of irrelevance has been winnowed away, that the "Down-Grade" articles are fully justified. The confessions correspond with the terms of the impeachment. Mr. Spurgeon's charge is:—"A new theology has been initiated, which is no more Christianity than chalk is cheese." We are amazed at the lengths to which the exponents of the new line of teaching permit themselves to go. The word "immoral" they freely use as descriptive of the verities which have been the sheet-anchor of God's Church in every age. There is the blank denial of the imputed righteousness of Christ, which the Holy Ghost declares to be a righteousness which is "to all, and upon all, them that believe." Not only is this precious truth denied, but it is held up to odium, and branded as immoral. This statement alone would, in our opinion, amply justify the alarm that Mr. Spurgeon has raised. What can possibly enter so deeply into the heart of historical and Scriptural reality as the doctrine of "relativity"? According to The Christian World there is no imputed guilt, no imputed goodness; it is an "immoral notion" to condemn mankind for the sin of their representative and head. "But how, then," it has well been asked, "do they account for the sin which has cleaved so closely to human nature since the Fall?"

And as to the denial of the imputed righteousness of the Lord Jesus, we ask, What substance of Gospel is left if we are stripped of this ground of hope before God? The Broad School of Dissent may feel themselves able to dispense with Jesus' merits, but we cannot. We find our faith made of none effect unless it be the very truth of God that the righteousness of Christ is imputed to all believers. It stands to reason that if the merits of Christ are of no avail in procuring our acceptance with God, and in effectuating our justification in the eye of his law, then we must answer for our guilt in our own person, and await the harvest of our sins, penal and otherwise, in our own experience. There is no true Gospel possible on the basis of the "New Theology," and it is a bitter satire indeed on the part of its advocates, while extinguishing the Gospel hope, to do it under the auspices of a "larger hope." Could we see eye to eye with such advocates we should feel compelled henceforward to wave the sable flag of despair.

After what has been already cited, it will surprise none of our readers to learn that Mr. Spurgeon's charge that by the New Theology "the atonement is scouted" is, on investigation, fully established. Mr. Greenhough, of Leicester, disposes of the orthodox view on that vital point as "a Jewish interpretation." But, as he has nothing to show for his statement, we number it among the curiosities of literature. Mr. Thew, of the same town, professes to hold the atonement of Christ and other doctrines; but, as he holds it and them in a way which he could not expect Mr. Spurgeon to understand, the reader is left to draw his own inferences as to the mysterious profundity of Mr. Thew's apprehension of doctrine. Happily, not all the writers on that side are equally non-committal. We are indebted to Mr. R. J. Close, of Wood Green, for an unmistakable deliverance on the point. Speaking of Mr. Spurgeon's sermon on the "Heart of the Gospel," one, he tells us, of the most illogical discourses he ever perused, Mr. Close says:—

> I can only mention its most salient anomalies. It maintained that Christ bore on the cross the penalty due to guilty men, and that the latter were, therefore, exempted from such penalty. If this be a fact, then I hold that Jesus violated the Divine government which "by no means clears the guilty," assuredly not by shifting their punishment to somebody else.

According, then, to this exponent of the Broad School, the new teaching amounts to this, that there is no atonement at all, and that every sinner must bear in his own person his own guilt. If Mr. Close is to be taken as an authority, there is no shifting of our liability to Christ our Surety, and we may not say with Paul, "Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." Alas! that such teachers should have any following. It were better, it seems to us, to be born and die in Central Africa, knowing nothing of Christ at all, than to imbibe such poisoned "theology" as this.

The most remarkable letter from the New School that has yet appeared in The Christian World in connection with this discussion is one signed "A Baptist Layman." Here we find what Mr. Spurgeon recently warned his students against—the latest novelty of heterodoxy—namely, the blasphemous teaching that there is not one Saviour, but many saviours; that salvation is a conjoint product, and that Christ simply led the way in a service in which others in their degree are as efficient as Himself. This "Baptist Layman" condemns Mr. Spurgeon's statement, that "to think of sharing the work of salvation with Christ is nothing short of blasphemy." But surely if blasphemy consist in the assumption of the Divine prerogative, and if salvation be only of the Lord, where could there be a more clamant instance of it than the one we have cited? Verily the new lights stand at an infinite remove from the Apostle who said, "We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord," since they snatch at his prerogative of saving power.

We cannot, with our limited space, advert to every correspondent, even those of repute, who have joined issue with Mr. Spurgeon in his manifestoes. But this is the less to be regretted because in the main they merely skim the points of moment and are largely occupied with illiberal aspersions. "It is high time," says one, "that his (Mr. Spurgeon's) claim to be a kind of Theological Pope was contested." Another says, "If the pastor of the Tabernacle is desirous of setting himself up in the chair of Papal authority, and of pronouncing ex cathedrâ what is, and what is not to be believed and taught in all our Baptist pulpits, we had better at once resign our claim to the right of private judgment." Is Mr. Spurgeon then to be styled "a Pope" because he faithfully and vigorously denounces what he believes to be the soul-destructive heresies of the day; because, like a true watchman on Sion's walls, he lifts up his voice and forbears not? Mr. Spurgeon may well reply:—

> Has it come to this, that if we use our freedom and speak our mind we must be charged with arrogance? Is decision the same thing as Popery?...... We would not touch a hair of their heads or deprive them of an inch of liberty. Let them speak that we may know them; but let them not deny us the same freedom; neither let them denounce us for denouncing what they are so eager to assail.

We must refer to one aspect of the way in which Mr. Spurgeon's charges are met, which, in our judgment, is peculiarly unjust—namely, the attempt to neutralise his witness by the assumption of superior learning. Dr. Stevenson, of Brixton, e.g, speaking of the Theology of the seventeenth century, says "it was developed not in the Reformed, but in the Roman Church; and it is not rude to say that it requires a learning to which our censor has no claim to trace the steps by which it grew." We are not prepared to receive that statement. The Reformed Faith is one which Rome had gone on for many ages to darken and depart from, and of which she has expressed her unqualified condemnation in the decisions of the Council of Trent. Further, we say there is no man in England, unless it be Dr. Grosart, of Blackburn, who is more deeply versed in the Reformed Theology than is the honoured pastor of the Tabernacle. Should a revival of Puritanic conviction ever revisit our backsliding country, there will be a return from the deplorable superficiality of the times to massive Theological scholarship, and, we may add, classical likewise. But then there will be no room for boasting or display, save in the Cross of Christ.

We shall conclude our review of this momentous controversy in next week's issue.

"NATION of DRUNKEN MOTHERS."

So great is the increase of drinking among women and girls in Sussex, that the local Press is alarmed at the consequences. The Sussex Daily News says:—

> The Eastbourne sessional reports show that drunkenness among women and girls is seriously on the increase. Indeed, the number of women recently arrested and fined for being intoxicated and noisy in the streets is not very re-assuring to those social reformers who state from teetotal platforms that sobriety is now quite the fashion. When Mr. Gladstone introduced grocers' licences as an alleged benefit alike to the working classes and the revenue, a fear was openly expressed in temperance publications that such temptations to weak-willed women might lead in the end to England being a nation of drunken mothers. This ideal of despair will, it is to be hoped, never be realised. Still, to see women crowd into beershops with their infants, or fight, "cat like," in the streets, as the police express it, is a sad sight, and will amply excuse the wrath of not a few teetotalers.

Reports of Police-courts throughout the South of England show the same serious signs of the moral deterioration of women through the baneful effects of grocers' licences as means of secret drinking.

CHURCH FELLOWSHIP.

By Rev. W. LANDELS, D.D., Edinburgh.

From an Address before the Baptist Union at Sheffield.

The fellowship in which the early Christians continued (Acts ii. 42) is not called the Apostles' fellowship, as it appears in the Authorised Version, but the fellowship. We understand it to mean the society, or community, or brotherhood of believers; and to denote the closeness of their union, their oneness of feeling, when "the multitude of them that believed were of one heart, and of one soul" (Acts iv. 32), their free confiding intercourse, their identity of interest—of which the community of goods was only one manifestation—their common share in all that the word embraces. Its application by Paul to the contribution sent to the poor saints in Jerusalem (Rom. xv. 26) does not mean that it has an exclusive pecuniary reference. Rather is it so applied, because that is one expression—the most striking, perhaps, in the world's estimation—of the infinitely more comprehensive spiritual oneness or partnership in which all believers share. Fellowship in the proper sense is a most exalted thing; nothing less than the oneness, not of this society or that, but of the whole body of the faithful, in state, in privilege, in suffering, in obligation. It is the oneness of a family of which God is the Father, Jesus Christ the Elder Brother, and all believers sons and daughters; of a body of which Jesus Christ is the Head, and all believers members.

Although we may not expatiate on the higher relations of this fellowship, it is important that they should be recognised as underlying our church membership, and supplying the motives by which the mutual duties of church members are enforced. They embrace the marvellous fact that the Infinite One makes his sinful creatures partners with Himself—there is oneness of feeling as well as of interest. Christians are one, or are yet to be one, with the Father and the Son in desire and purpose. To be, we say, because their oneness is not complete until Christian character is perfected, and all in themselves that interferes in any degree with their communion with God is removed. They are already in sympathy with God, but their sympathy is to become more deep and quick and responsive. They have communion with God. Having access to his presence, they breathe the desires of their heart into his ear, and receive in direct communication intimations of his will. His life moves in them, regulating their desires, prompting their words and deeds, bringing their wills into harmony with his own. So that they can all say in part, and will yet be able to say in the fullest sense of the words—"I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Such, briefly and very imperfectly represented, is what we understand by fellowship in its higher relations. It is oneness in state and feeling with the Father and the Son, a oneness into which every member of the Church Universal is introduced, and in which it is the privilege of every believer to share.

The coupling of the word fellowship with the word church in common use—although we have no example of it in Scripture—is not much to be objected to, perhaps; for although it is too comprehensive in meaning for that to which it is applied, it bears testimony to what ought to be. It means, or it ought to mean, the mutual recognition of a body of men, whose authority to act is derived from the revealed will of Christ, as participators in this high spiritual partnership—participators in the state, privileges, and obligations of those who are partners with each other, with the Father, and with Jesus Christ. In this recognition they virtually say, "Yes, we own them and we promise to treat them as regenerated men, partakers of the Divine nature, as belonging to the family of God, members of the body of Christ, sharers in our hopes and joys and privileges and prospects, as being altogether one with ourselves." Unless all this is a farce—unless our Christianity itself is a mere pretence—church fellowship is a most significant and important thing, conferring great privileges on him who is admitted to it, imposing great obligations on those by whom he is received.

When it is thus understood, two things are obvious. First, that whenever the relation exists and is realised, it must be influential in determining the intercourse and action of Christians with and towards each other, not merely as joined in separate local societies, although there especially, but as belonging to the great body of the faithful. Second, that in the practical manifestation of this fellowship churches, as a whole, are yet far from being all that they ought to become.

Such fellowship means that every member of the church cherishes a genuine regard for the welfare of his brother. Partnership with each other and with Christ—community of feeling and interest—cannot exist where one Christian is indifferent to anything that affects in the smallest degree the welfare of another. If I am one with him, what touches him touches me. His sorrows are my sorrows. His dangers are my dangers. His duties are my duties. His joys are my joys. His prosperity is my prosperity. As in the natural body, "whether one member suffers, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it;" so is it with the body of Christ. No isolation, no independence, no mutual disregard is permissible among those who are so related. And the member of the church who takes no interest in the welfare of his fellow-members is guilty of violating the partnership in which all Christians are embraced.

In this we are giving utterance to a mere commonplace, or platitude, if you will. Be it so. All the more reason is there for its being recognised and applied. And it is its recognition and application at which we now aim. We plead that on which we are agreed as a reason for seeking that which is lacking. We cannot find in the action of churches generally any adequate expression of that which is generally acknowledged. What Christian who has a proper conception of church fellowship can be satisfied with a state of things—by no means uncommon among us—which admits of members of the church taking so little interest in the welfare of their fellow-members, that they not only have no knowledge of their cirumstances or condition, but do not even know them by face or by name, and that not because they are so numerous as to render such knowledge impossible or difficult of attainment, but because they have no desire to know? With such a state of things no one can rest content who knows what a church ought to be. And hence the necessity that by giving prominence to the generally acknowledged, but little heeded, yet most important and glorious truth of the partnership of Christians, we should seek to foster that interest in each other's welfare which becomes those who are essentially one.

Fellowship finds expression also in free and confiding intercourse—the interchange of thought, especially on all matters pertaining to spiritual experience, not merely among those who are united in the same societies, although primarily and chiefly among them as best acquainted, and most frequently brought into contact with each other, but among all who are members of "the household of faith." Not as in the protracted conferences of our day, which are beyond the reach of those who have to toil for their daily bread, and from which, after great professions of brotherly love, men come forth to ignore their fellow-Christians whose social status is inferior to their own. Not as in meetings now held to promote brotherly love, in which important subjects are tabooed because of differing opinions, as if the bond which unites Christians were not sufficiently strong to admit of their freely expressing their differences even with a view to bringing about a greater oneness of belief. But in the various meetings of the churches, and in the ordinary intercourse of the members. When the churches are what they ought and are intended to be, a man's membership will be a sufficient passport to the recognition and confidence of his fellow-members; and more than equality of rank or wealth or worldly station will furnish a basis of mutual intercourse. The tie which binds them is stronger, closer, more vital, than which exists in any earthly relation, and will be deemed a better reason for companionship than the greatest intellectual attainments, or the highest worldly rank. Christians, wherever they meet and their Christianity becomes known, will feel themselves drawn to each other, as they are to none besides; and though belonging to different ranks of life, will, notwithstanding their earthly distinctions, enter into loving converse as those who "are all one in Christ Jesus."

The greatest importance in regard both to the realisation and manifestation of fellowship attaches to church meetings pure and simple—meetings confined to members of the church only, where the time is spent in devotion and free fraternal intercourse; perhaps, as a means of breaking down restraint, accompanied by a plain social meal something like the love-feasts of former days. In these meetings there should be a free outpouring of the heart, rehearsals of experience spontaneously given, accounts of difficulties, trials, temptations, helps received, enlightenment, sources of consolation, &c.; questions freely asked on such subjects by those who want guidance, judiciously answered by those who, having passed through such experiences, are qualified to counsel and to guide. The timid should be encouraged to speak freely, and the too loquacious, who encroach on others' time, gently but firmly restrained. Such meetings, we fear, have fallen greatly into disuse among us. The worldly spirit has crept into the churches, gendering a feeling of distance among the members. So many hours are necessarily spent in business, that there is little time to spare for mutual intercourse. Listening to the preacher is more attractive to many than the conversation of fellow-members. From these and other causes church meetings are held not more than once a month, frequently for only a few minutes after some more public service, and not even regularly.

And the manner, too, in which you often hear them spoken of shows in what low estimate they are held, and how sadly they fail of their proper purpose. By many they are regarded as synonymous with scenes of contention, and you may even hear quoted with approval the saying of a venerable minister, that "whoever may be absent from church meetings, the devil is always present." If this be so, it betokens a most lamentable state of things—a sad want of, and an outrage upon, anything that deserves the name of church fellowship. This is a matter on which the present writer is not competent to speak. He has had no such experience. The church meetings he has attended, whatever they may have lacked, were never scenes of contention. And where they are so, it is partly owing to their being made too exclusively business meetings. Questions are introduced for settlement on which there is almost sure to be differences of opinion; and unless the discussion be judiciously directed, and unless some degree of self-restraint be exercised, and unless they are approached in a devout and loving frame of mind, such as devotional exercises would foster, some degree of friction is very likely to be generated. This, however, says nothing against such meetings of the church as we plead for; it is rather an argument for all church meetings being more of the character we suggest. They would soon be differently reported of if their principal object were devotion and fraternal intercourse, and especially if the ordinance of the Lord's Supper were to form part of the exercises. After the writer, on the suggestion and after the example of the late beloved and lamented Charles Vince, introduced the custom of breaking bread into the church meetings of his former charge, he does not remember that a single angry word was ever spoken. Perhaps the very presence of the sacred elements exerted a subduing, hallowing influence. It might well do so; for who could cherish angry feelings in view of those touching memorials of a Saviour's dying love? There would be little strife in our church meetings if it could be said of us as of the Apostolic Church, "And they continued stedfastly in the Apostles' doctrine, and in the fellowship and in breaking of bread, and in prayers."

"GOLDEN BELLS" COFFEE PALACE.

BY LADY HOPE.

MAY I request your readers to pay a visit to the "Golden Bells," 87, High-street, Notting Hill-gate, to see there the work that is being carried on, and the extent to which this house is being used by customers daily.

We are very desirous to extend both our space and operations. We are unable to accommodate sufficiently either lodgers or customers, and are pressed for room when we attempt our meetings. We are now also unable to find room for the Clubs who have hitherto made use of the Coffee Palace. Additional space can easily be obtained if our friends will give us the means to carry out our plans.

We are very anxious to begin our new soup kitchen, of which at present there is a very great need, and by means of which we could supply soup at one penny per basin to hundreds daily. All who can help us to multiply our efforts may be sure that they will receive the thanks of hundreds of working men who are really needing it.

PATERNAL GOVERNMENT.

THE larger proportion of the crowds who gather in the streets and parks of London may not be "bonâ fide unemployed," but idlers, loafers, vagabonds, roughs, pickpockets, burglars, and whatever other character is contrary to sound doctrine and respectable citizenship. But the last word has not been said, nor the last step taken, when this débris of society, this human flotsam and jetsam, has thus been weighed and measured and labelled. Sewage is pernicious as well as offensive; it must be utilised or got rid of, or it will take revenge in the form of typhoid and other deadly pestilences. And these fellow-citizens of ours, these brothers and sisters, whom we manufacture into criminals by our selfish neglect, cannot be stamped out by charges of mounted police.

"Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do"—and "the bonâ fide unemployed" are, by the simple fact of their enforced idleness, constantly swelling the crowds of the dangerous classes. No country can afford thus to deal with its humankind—its bone and muscle; its brain and blood; its mind and heart; its intellect and affections; its spirit and soul, and body. To use a phrase of Joseph Cook's, "the constitution of things is such," that wasted humanity takes vengeance upon the wasters. At present the prosperous classes are being asked, like Cain, "Where is Abel, thy brother?" and like Cain they fling back in the face of God the defiant answer, "I know not: am I my brother's keeper?" But "the nature of things is such" that the brother's blood cries out from the ground to God.

This century derides the idea of paternal government, and therein contrasts with the Bible idea of government. Was not the government of Joseph in Egypt paternal? "And they cried before him 'Tender father'" (Gen. xli. 43, xlv. 8). Was not the Theocracy paternal? "Out of Egypt have I called my son." Will not the reign of Christ be paternal? "The government shall be upon his shoulder, and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Father of the Future Age, the Prince of Peace."

The wealth of Britain and America becomes a curse, because it is congested in few hands. It makes its possessors selfish and luxurious as to themselves, negligent and oppressive to the poor. If wealth were circulated every industry would revive. If labour were better paid, and a paternal government legislated against the destroying drink, and other forms of vicious indulgence, the people would be able to be better clothed and fed, and increased employment would be the result. Such a country would command the respect of the world, and would be stronger by its moral force than any armaments could make it. It will be so when Christ is King; and in so far as He now reigns in us individually that coming kingdom will be anticipated. When we pray, "Thy kingdom come," we pray for the Millennium. The reign of peace has been already established in that soul where Jesus reigns as King.

Y.W.C.A., MORLEY HALLS, 316, Regent-street, W.—Evening classes for young women will be commenced here at the beginning of November, and will embrace such subjects as singing, letter writing, and composition, dressmaking, book-keeping, arithmetic, and French. Prospectuses may be had at the bookstall, 316, Regent-street, W.

DYING.

WALKING in the misty woods,
  Autumn winds are sighing;
Throngh the trees a whisper steals:
  "All the world is dying."
Swallows leave the cosy eaves
  Where they long have nested,
Flying far beyond the seas,
  Sunless and foam-crested.
All the happy golden days
  Now behind are lying;
Sadly wail the falling leaves:
  "All the world is dying."

Dying! yes, the rosy babe
  Wrapt in waxen slumber,
Aged sire, fair maid, and youth,
  Go to swell the number.
All the world must pass away;
  Daily some are sleeping,
Locked within the arms of death,
  Heedless of our weeping;
Sadly we, too, bow our heads,
  Sadly say we, sighing:
"Love must go beyond our ken;
  All the world is dying!"

. . . .

Spring comes round, and once again
  Joyous bells are ringing;
Happy voices greet our ears,
  Comfort to us bringing:
"Easter Day gives hope and joy—
  Christ has burst his prison;
Now the sting of death is gone,
  He, our King, is risen."
Death lies near the bounds of life,
  Glorious and eternal,
Where sad hearts shall find one day
  Beauties ever vernal.

ALICE M. STEVENS.

THE CONSTANTINOPLE REST.

IN the autumn of 1884, a call came to Miss Grimston and Miss Green-Armytage, then carrying on Rest-work in Smyrna, to take up the Constantinople field also. Accordingly the latter removed thither, and the present Rest was opened and dedicated the following February. It works hand in hand with, and on the same plans as that of Smyrna. Many English and foreign sailors have thankfully availed themselves of this Harbour of Refuge, where they can spend their time when on shore, safe from the many snares laid for them, read the papers, write their letters and find a welcome at all times.

Gospel meetings are held almost every evening, which are well attended and appreciated, and on them God has given much blessing. Many there are who thank Him for the day they were first induced to come to the meetings where they afterwards found pardon and peace through the blood of Jesus, and are now leading changed lives on their ships and in their homes. One might be instanced, who first came to "make fun," but was converted after a second visit, and has since been the means of blessing to all his family; he is trying specially to win for Christ those among whom he used to be a leader in sin. Another, the only one for Christ on his ship, writes that he gets nearly all who are off work to meet together after tea to sing the Sacred Songs and Solos.

Besides the work among the sailors, the Rest is much freqnented by the varied races of the native population of Constantinople, many of whom come daily, on purpose to study and talk over the Word of God, which is provided in eighteen different languages. And not a few have thereby been led, and are being led, we trust, out of darkness and superstition into the light and blessing of the Gospel of Christ.

The premises where this work is carried on, being necessarily as near the water as possible, which is the business centre of the city, are very small and inconvenient, and the need of more space is becoming increasingly urgent.

LETTERS FROM IRELAND.—2.

I have been the guest of my old friends, Captain and Mrs. J. Kearney White. The first thing that meets the eye on entering their house is characteristic of them, and of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, which they represent. Instead of "Cave Canem" (Beware of the Dog), which faces us as we enter one of the old Roman houses at Pompeii, we find here a sort of manifesto on Christian unity. It was written by one whose name and memory is honoured of all good men :—

> UNITY and LOVE prevail among the different divisions of the Protestant family here. We no longer maintain the old and fatal mistake that Christian men are not to co-operate for anything till they agree in everything. We now hold the antagonistic and true maxim, that Christian men should act together so far as they are agreed.
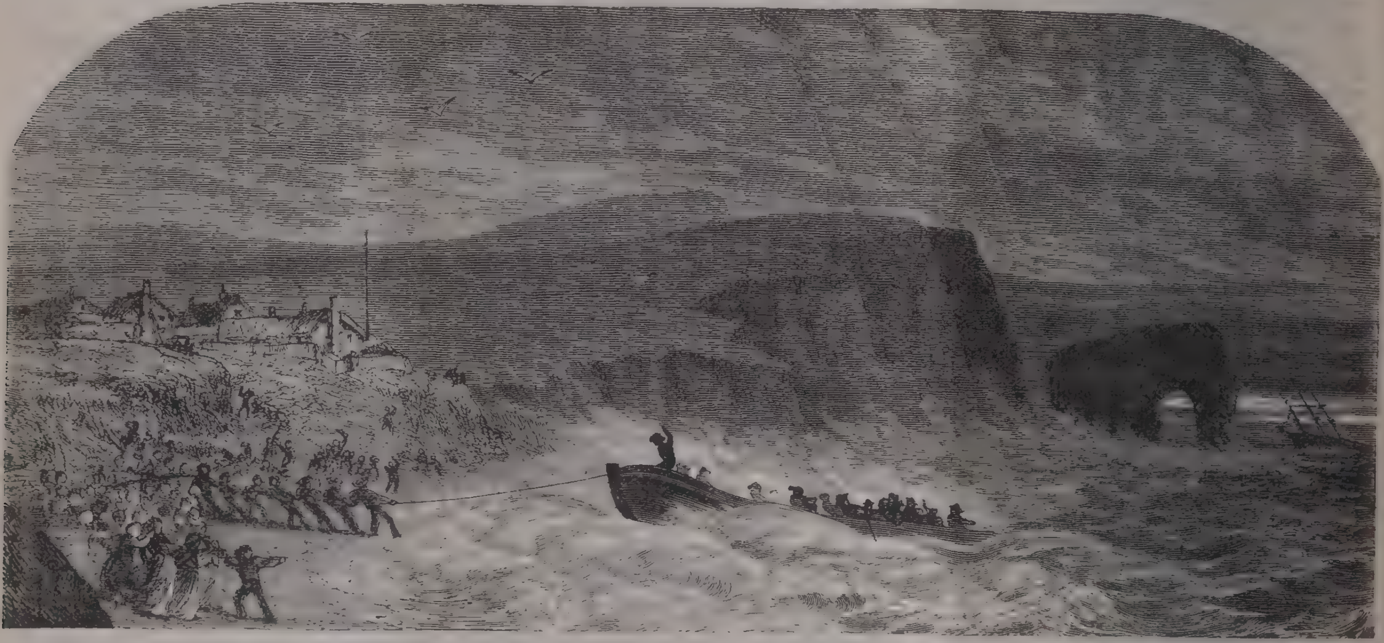
> Daniel Wilson, Bishop of Calcutta.

This is precisely the doctrine of the Apostle Paul to the first European church: "Whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing" (Phil. iii. 16).



Captain Kearney White is an old naval officer, and for many years was an Inspector of Coast Guard Stations in England, Scotland, and Ireland. Few of those who dwell at home at ease have any idea of the dangers undergone in the endeavour to save imperilled lives. One very important part of coast-guard duty is the life-boat and the life-saving apparatus, and as the saving of life at sea has always been the hobby of my host, he was very much in his element while commanding the coast-guard.

He is enthusiastically in favour of irreversibility instead of self-righting, as the principle on which life-boats should be built. In other words, he would consider how to keep the boat on her keel, rather than how to get her right after she has capsized. The self-righting principle must sacrifice something of permanence. The terrible disaster at Southport last year, when out of three life-boat crews twenty-nine men were drowned, was occasioned by the capsizing of the boats. Such a disaster in a heavy sea would in most cases be fatal to one or more of its occupants. A self-righting boat must, so far as I can understand, be to some extent a capsizing boat; for the same principle works both ways; and Messrs. Lamb & White, of Cowes, years ago bent all their energies to make a boat which would not capsize. Unfortunately, nearly all the life-boats on our shores are on the capsizing self righting principle, and as many thousands of pounds are invested in them, it is to be feared they are not likely at present to be replaced by others. The following narrative is slightly abridged from a most thrilling description in The Times, of December 10, 1864, written by Richard Mahony, J.P., of Dromore Castle. It shows at once the dangers of the deep, the value of the principle of irreversibility, and the heroism of our life-boat crews :—

EXTRAORDINARY LIFEBOAT ADVENTURE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE TIMES."

Sir,—A description of a strange life-boat adventure during the late gales may interest many of your readers.

In August last, two whale-boats, constructed on the principles of the life-boat, arrived in the harbour of Valentia, on the south-west coast of Ireland, consigned to Mr. Kearney White, inspecting officer of coast-guards in that district, to be subjected to experimental trials which should test their qualities under all circumstances.

No weather occurred sufficiently heavy for such experiments until the late November gales. Some trials then took place, and the behaviour of the boats was most satisfactory.

They differ slightly in construction. In the one the property of self-righting, in case of being overturned, is most prominent. This quality does not exist in the same degree in the other boat, which is much lighter, but her steadiness and irreversibility are most extraordinary.

The 26th of November last opened on the West Coast of Ireland with a very heavy gale from W.N.W. Barometer, 28·90; force of wind, 10. A tremendous sea was running, and breaking on the headlands of Dingle Bay. In one place it was bursting over a cliff more than 100 ft. high. Everything was considered suitable for a thorough trial of the boats. Both were accordingly got ready for the occasion. The self-righting boat was manned by the coxswain, and five of the local crew who are in training for a life-boat. The other boat was manned by a Coastguard crew, and steered by the inspecting officer himself. Both crews were provided with Captain Ward's life-belts. Within the harbour all was comparatively smooth; but the gale was so strong that the boats made headway with great difficulty, the wind sometimes driving the oars up over the men's heads, in spite of their utmost efforts to keep them down. Slow progress was thus made towards a passage leading into a wild bay, called Lough Kay. Here the sea was running mountains high, and it became evident that no boat could live long under it.

Mr. White, however, made his final arrangements for a bold experiment. He directed the accompanying boat to lie under Lamb Island, so that she might watch her consort, and render assistance if possible. Then with his own Coastguard crew in the irreversible boat he dashed out into the bay. About a quarter of an hour passed, when a great tidal wave was observed gathering itself about a mile to seaward. Like a mighty Andes towering above the lesser mountains, this Atlantic giant swept in, extending right across the bay. In the opinion of experienced seamen who observed it, this sea would have swept the decks of the Great Eastern like a raft. As it neared the devoted boat its appearance became more terrific. The water shoaled there from seven to ten fathoms, and, changing its shape with the conformation of the ground below, that which had been a rolling mountain rose into a rushing cliff of water. Never were six men in more desperate circumstances; yet what men could do was done boldly and steadily. Cheering his men forward, the steersman put his boat right at it, calculating nicely to meet the sea at a right angle. Steadily, as if spurting in a race, the men strained at their oars. Like an arrow the boat entered the roaring avalanche, its crest towering twenty-five feet above her, and overhanging.

The inspecting officer steering, and the chief boatman pulling stroke, were hurled headlong over the boat's stern by the falling sea. Had she not been of extraordinary strength, she must have been shivered like a bandbox. Crushing her bodily fathoms down, the sea bore her astern at lightning speed, tearing away her rudder irons and steering crutch by the pressure. The steersman was caught, head downwards, as she passed, by some projection, and dragged thus for a few seconds; then found himself suddenly freed, and rising rapidly. On reaching the surface he met his chief boatman, who looked very much confused. The latter describes himself as having received some tremendous impetus, causing him, as he imagined, to turn a series of somersaults under water……

The sea, which hurled them out of the boat, beat the rest of the crew down—each man on the thwarts before him. The bowman alone was stunned. The remaining three retained perfect consciousness; they had their eyes open, but all was total darkness. They describe their sensation as like being whirled through a railway tunnel, but whether they were in the boat or in the sea they could not distinguish at the time. At length a faint dawn of light appeared, increasing rapidly, and they were conscious of rising through the green waters; at last they emerged, each man sitting in his place.

The first object that met their eyes was the Kay Rock Buoy, close alongside of them. This buoy is over 400 yards from where the sea had struck their boat. She had been shot about a quarter of a mile under water and had risen as she had entered the sea, at right angles to it. Articles lying loose in the bottom proved that she had not once turned over during her submersion. All the oars but one had been lost, and with it the men kept her head to the seas, though she was fast drifting upon the rocks astern.

Meantime the other boat's crew had watched the whole occurrence; but so appalled were these hardy fishermen by what they had seen, that they refused at first to pull out to the rescue in the face of what appeared to be certain death. However, their brave commander, Edward O'Neill, determined to save his comrades or share their fate. By entreaty and command he got them to pull out into the bay. By great skill he succeeded in picking up the officer and chief boatman, they having been nearly half an hour in the water. They then pulled away for the other boat, and reached her just in time to save her and her occupants from being pounded to fragments on the sharp ledges that rose black at intervals through the foaming water. They supplied the drifting boat with the oars they had picked up, and both crews worked their way back into harbour, without loss of life, or even the slightest injury.

So far as I can judge, from pretty fair data, the boat must have been under water about two minutes.

I can scarcely expect anyone who reads this statement of so wonderful a preservation from destruction to believe it. I could not believe it myself at first, nor could any save those who witnessed it.

I can only say that if anyone will take the trouble to investigate the particulars as I have done, by close examination of the actors in the scene and the spectators, he will be convinced that I have understated the circumstances.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
Richard Mahony, J.P.
Dromore, County Kerry, December 7, 1864.

When Captain Kearney White was commanding a vessel bound for China, he fell in with another vessel of similar speed, with whose captain he formed a friendship, and to whom on their voyage a terrible accident occurred. He was sitting on deck, "rocked in the cradle of the deep," when a sudden wave struck the ship and pitched him overboard. He was in the water more than an hour, and was about to sink, when he made one last effort, and cried out. One of the boats was within sound, and just in time to rescue him. But when Captain White went on board his ship a few days after, he did not know his friend, his hair and beard had become white; in appearance he had grown twenty years older in that fearful hour.

A very telling illustration of the command,

"COMPEL THEM TO COME IN,"

occurred during the Crimean War. The Russian barque Victoria, of Uleaborg, was wrecked on Blyth Sands, on the Northumbrian coast, October 28, 1852. Captain Kearney White, in command of the lifeboat, went off to the rescue. But before they reached the wreck they saw, with astonishment, that the Russians were preparing to resist them, evidently thinking they were going to massacre them, or at least to make them prisoners. With great difficulty they boarded the vessel, and neither crew understanding the other's language, they could not explain their benevolent intentions. A hand to hand struggle ensued, and the Captain was at length disabled, and at great risk to both parties, got into the lifeboat. By this time they began to perceive that they were being saved, and the rest followed. They were taken ashore, provided for at the hotel, and in every way kindly treated. Next day, when Captain White went to see them, the saved skipper of the barque received him with a bear's hug, kissed him on both cheeks, and in every way but English speech manifested his gratitude to his deliverer.

This gallant rescue was acknowledged by the Royal National Institution for the Preservation of Lives from Shipwreck in the following resolution:—

That, in addition to a clasp for second gallant services the special thanks of the General Committee are due, and are hereby presented, to Mr. J. Kearney White, Chief Officer of the Blyth Haven Coast Guard Station, Northumberland, for his intrepid conduct in rescuing, with the Blyth lifeboat, manned by fifteen men, the crew, consisting of fourteen persons, of the Russian barque Victoria, wrecked near that place on October 28, 1852. (Signed) Northumberland, President.

A paragraph recently appeared in these columns anent the fisher-folk of Fraserburgh, in connection with which I may mention that it was from the soundings taken by Captain White in the new harbour that its site was eventually decided upon. "That work," wrote Captain Washington, "I believe will be the greatest benefit ever conferred upon the Pilots and Fishermen of Fraserburgh"—an anticipation which events have amply verified.

The secretary of Monkwearmouth Assurance Association, on behalf of his Committee, in making a remittance to the Inspecting Commander at Banff, "tendered to Mr. Kearney White a vote of thanks for his very great exertions in endeavouring to save life and property," and added, "I trust God will bless him in every act of kindness to his fellow-creatures."

I have mentioned these incidents in order to interest the reader in life-saving enterprises, and to indicate the kind of man who in the providence of God is now the commanding officer of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland; a society which appears to me to be one of the most fitting instruments, and adopting the wisest methods, for benefiting that agitated, agitated, agitated, but too often kind-hearted and hospitable, though misguided people.

POOR CHILDREN'S LIBRARIES.

As winter approaches, a contrast naturally recurs to the mind of those who go in and out amongst the poor, between the bright nurseries and drawing-rooms of our land, and the gloomy lodgings of our city streets. Frost, snow, and darkness will soon drive the children in-doors, where mother, however busy or weary she may be, must occupy or bear with them, and when, too, often having nothing else to give, she "gives them their own way."

Cannot we help in this matter? Are there not many homes where mothers or elder sisters would be glad to sort out shelves and cupboards? Are there not stores of story-books, picture-books, scrap-books, children's illustrated magazines, Bible pictures, puzzles, and games that are no longer needed at home, or which if given would only make room for others. Any such gifts, labelled, "Childrens' Library," would be most thankfully received at the Deaconess House, Mildmay-park, London. N.

THE REPRESSION OF IMMORALITY.—Some recent occurrences have materially altered the course of procedure for the repression of street solicitation and of houses of resort for immoral purposes. Henceforth the putting of the law in force for the removal of these evils must rest upon the inhabitants themselves or the Vigilance agencies which have been called into operation. The Central Vigilance Society has recently done good service in the suppression of such houses, especially in the East-end of London, and Local Committees affiliated to it have done the same elsewhere, particularly in the districts of St. George's, Hanover-square, and Kensington. Constant applications are being made to the Central Society for the protection of those who are wronged, and the punishment of offences against the Criminal Law Amendment Act. This class of cases can rarely be taken up or successfully prosecuted except through some such agency. To grapple with the potent agencies of evil, to protect the victims of unbridled sensuality, and to shield the pure from exposure to public enticements to the adoption of impure courses, requires far more means than either the Central Society or its branches have yet received. The secretary is Mr. Stephen Bourne, 15, York-buildings, Adelphi, W.C.

THE HOUSE OF REST "OF AGE."

It must have greatly encouraged Miss Mason to see so many friends assembled to rejoice with her, on Thursday evening, last week, at the "Coming of Age" of her House of Rest for Christian workers. Elsewhere we have given a short sketch of the history of the Institution, but some particulars of this interesting meeting will be welcome. No inconsiderable proportion of those present had at one time or another shared in the benefits of the Kilburn and Eastbourne Homes; after tea, many of these sisters bore warm testimony to the blessing they had received during their sojourn.

There was a strong platform, and all the speeches were of the heartiest description. Mr. James E. Mathieson, who presided, referred to the growth of individual effort in Christian work, carried on apart from the backing up of any church, congregation, or committee. He was strongly of opinion that instead of disintegrating Christian society, as some seemed to fear, these special and independent enterprises formed a strong bond of union among Christians, by providing a common ground of meeting. Many had good cause to thank God for the House of Rest, and he wished great prosperity and blessing on Miss Mason's endeavours in the years to come.

In a warm speech, Rev. J. G. Tanner, of Maida-hill, said this work by women on behalf of women had become possible by the revival of female ministry in the Christian Church, so long overlooked. He paid a tribute of gratitude to Miss Mason for the helpful prophetic teaching in her little monthly periodical Rest and Reaping. Col. Sandwith recalled some interesting experiences connected with the early history of the House of Rest, and remarked on the spirituality of tone pervading the institution. Dr. McKilliam said he had been greatly touched in hearing the testimonies given in the early part of the evening. These were the best possible proofs of the value of Miss Mason's work. In attending various meetings at the Kilburn House he had been impressed with the home-like character of the place, and also with the advantage that the inmates derived from becoming acquainted with kindred and sympathetic spirits. We are sometimes apt to under-rate the importance of true-hearted Christian fellowship; but this boon is fully enjoyed at the House of Rest. Another point he emphasised was the high place given to united, believing prayer, as an influential factor in Christian life and work.

Perhaps the most succinct of all the speeches was that of Rev. H. Sharp, of Hampstead. He said he had discovered that those who sojourned at the House of Rest learned four things—how to rest, how to work, how to trust, and how to retain power for service. On these points he said some excellent things, highly commending the spiritual teaching at Kilburn. Mr. C. R. Hurditch said he admired Miss Mason's institution, because it provided rest, in order to renewed work. The world is crying out for workers, and anything that helps to keep up the supply of workers is much to be commended. The unsectarian nature of the institution is another decided point in its favour in the eyes of Mr. Hurditch; as also is the fact that it meets the case of those who cannot expend much money on themselves. Speeches of a congratulatory character followed from Mr. A. C. Coote, Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Mr. R. Paton, and Hon. Henry Noel, the whole making a body of testimony that we seldom find on one platform in a single evening.

Last of all came Miss Mason herself, who gave some interesting statistics. She said the special fund being raised was for acquiring the freehold of the Eastbourne House, and for helping in their declining years those who are permanently invalided, after a life spent in active Christian service. Some friends who had contributed largely to the support of the work have been removed by death, and she is looking to the Lord to incline the hearts of other stewards to supply their places. We doubt not that her trust will be rewarded. She stated that communications sympathising with the work had been received from various friends unable to be present. Among these was a telegram of congratulation by Dr. Barnardo, from Toronto.

BIBLE STUDY.

THE HAND OF THE LORD (IN REFERENCE TO HIS PEOPLE)

(1) For strength.—"And, behold, an hand touched me, which set me upon my knees and upon the palms of my hands……Then there came again and touched me one like the appearance of a man, and he strengthened me" (Dan. x. 10, 18). "And the hand of the Lord was on Elijah; and he girded up his loins, and ran before Ahab to the entrance of Jezreel" (1 Kings xviii. 46). "I was strengthened as the hand of the Lord my God was upon me" (Ezra vii. 28).

(2) For deliverance.—"The Lord said unto Moses, Is the Lord's hand waxed short? Thou shalt see now whether my word shall come to pass unto thee or not……And there went forth a wind from the Lord, and brought quails" (Num. xi. 23, 31). "The hand of the Lord shall be known toward his servants, and his indignation toward his enemies" (Isa. lxvi. 14). "The hand of our God was upon us, and He delivered us from the hand of the enemy, and of such as lay in wait by the way" (Ezra viii. 31).

(3) For prosperity.—"The king granted him all his request, according to the hand of the Lord his God upon him……On the first day of the fifth month came he to Jerusalem, according to the good hand of his God upon him" (Ezra vii. 6, 9). "The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek Him" (Ezra viii. 22). "The hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord" (Acts xi. 21).

(4) For moulding.—"Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in mine hand, O house of Israel" (Jer. xviii. 6).

(5) For chastening.—"Day and night thy hand was heavy upon me" (Ps. xxxii. 4). "The hand of God hath touched me" (Job xix. 21). "Now, behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind" (Acts xiii. 11). But the chastening hand is also the pierced hand, and when He shows us his hands, we too, like the disciples of old, shall be glad when we see the Lord, whatever cup He brings us to drink.

(6) For healing.—"They bring unto Him one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech; and they beseech Him to put his hand upon him" (Mark vii. 32). "Grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak thy word, by stretching forth thine hand to heal" (Acts iv. 29, 30). "He maketh sore, and bindeth up; He woundeth, and his hands make whole" (Job v. 18).

(7) For sustaining.—"The righteous, and the wise, and their works, are in the hand of God" (Eccles. ix. 1). "I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness" (Is. xli. 10). My sheep ……shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand……no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand" (John x. 27—29). "He……holdeth the seven stars in his right hand" (Rev. ii. 1).

(8) For shelter.—"In the shadow of his hand hath He hid me" (Is. xlix. 2). "I have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand" (Is. li. 16). "His left hand is under my head, and his right hand doth embrace me" (Cant. ii. 6).

Y.M.C.A., WALHAM GREEN.—Under the auspices of the Mission Committee of this branch, a meeting in connection with the C.M.S. work in Africa was held on Friday, October 21, when an interesting and instructive lecture was given by Mr. Burness, who has been labouring as an agent of the above Society for several years past on the West Coast of Africa. Many of the details given by the lecturer were most distressing, and fully testify that "the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty." But there is much to encourage. Idol houses are neglected, and many gather to hear the Gospel. Only a short time since 1000 people were gathered in a church at Bonny, while quite recently sixty-one people belonging to one of the worst tribes were baptized on confession of their faith.

LADY MISSIONARIES FOR INDIA.

On Saturday week five missionaries sailed from Liverpool to labour in connection with branches of the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society. They are Miss Patteson, Miss Abraham, Miss Mead, Miss Macreddie, and Miss Hadath.

Miss Patteson, who has already spent seven years at Benares, has been in England for some time recruiting her health. She now returns to her old post in a vigorous, physical condition. Miss Abraham has also had previous experience of India, having laboured for two years in the Society's school at Patna. Her health, too, gave way, and she was obliged to come home last November. She has regained strength, and goes back to Patna to resume her duties there. The other three ladies proceed to India for the first time. Miss Mead, who is a licentiate of the Edinburgh College of Surgeons and Physicians, and who has acted for a time as house surgeon of the new hospital for women at Marylebone, is to be attached to the medical mission at Lucknow. An idea of the Society's operations in this city may be formed from the fact that last year 100 patients were treated in the hospital, and the attendances at the two dispensaries numbered 6,930. The Zenana work at Lucknow, as elsewhere, has also been of the most encouraging character. Miss Macreddie accompanies Miss Abraham to Patna, while Miss Hadath goes to Lahore as a teacher in the Zenana school there.

On Wednesday afternoon of last week a large number of friends, chiefly ladies, assembled in Morley Hall, Regent-street, to take leave of the departing missionaries, as well as of Miss Browley, who, accompanied by another lady, is on the eve of embarking for India in connection with the Young Women's Christian Association, for the purpose of stirring up the existing, and establishing new branches of that organisation, and otherwise advancing the cause of Christ. The gathering was presided over by Sir Robert Phayre, who said that what is needed most at this moment for the success of missionary enterprise everywhere is earnest, heartfelt prayer to God on its behalf. Rev. W. Hooper, of the C.M.S., who has had some years' experience as a missionary in the north of India, based a thoughtful and able address to the outgoing missionaries, on the Lord's command to Gideon as contained in the fourteenth verse of the sixth chapter of Judges, "And the Lord looked upon him and said, Go in this thy might, and thou shalt save Israel from the hand of the Midianites; have not I sent thee?'" The promise given in this passage, he showed, is as applicable to those who are now proceeding to the mission field as it was to Gideon when uttered by God himself.

Dr. Monro Gibson followed with a truly heart-stirring address, in which he nobly championed the claims of India as a mission field. It is not only a foreign but a home mission field. Our Queen is not only the sovereign of England, but Empress of India, which is a part of our own country; for do we not call it a "dependency"? Geographically India is a monster, but politically it is a child, which Christian England is called upon to train up in the culture and admonition of the Lord. How spiritually dark is poor India! Thank God there are so many ladies in England determined that it shall not remain dark long if they can help it, and so many ready to go forth and do what they personally can to bring in India's day. Graphically and eloquently did Dr. Gibson express his especial admiration of the motto of the Society, "In faith and hope and love for Jesus Christ's sake." Faith, hope, and love are three sisters. We call them the three graces of the Christian character, but they are not only that; they are the three great forces which impel all Christian work.

DESTITUTE BOYS.—The builders have made great progress with the erection of the Shaftesbury Memorial Home in Shaftesbury-avenue, St. Giles's, and it is hoped that the same will be finished early in the new year.

WORKING GIRLS IN LONDON.

A bright picture is that presented by Mr. John Shrimpton, the hon. director of these Homes, in his voluminous report for the year 1886. The condition of thousands of working girls in this great Metropolis is such as to excite deep compassion. Vast numbers have been delicately brought up, and through no fault of their own find themselves adrift on the world without a single human friend. And all, from the precarious nature of their employment, the low rate of remuneration, and the temptations by which they are surrounded, stand greatly in need of some friendly helping hand. In this report, every page of which is bright with the rays of Christian love, we see what such helping hand can do for these struggling sisters, so soon in life cast into a furnace of trial, the fierceness of which none can know, save those who have experienced it.

From the darkness and depths of a hopeless, almost despairing existence hundreds of girls are annually received into these Homes, of which there are eight in various parts of London. For them, what a change! Once again, or for the first time, they taste the joys of home. In these hospices, from which many a cheery ray shoots into the gloom, the desolate one finds herself at once in a new atmosphere, warmed and gladdened by a true and heartfelt sympathy. The particulars concerning the year's work of each Home give abundant evidence of this, and are well worthy of study by those who are seeking some field for their benevolence. The quiet home evenings, with their social companionships and various occupations, are scarcely less enjoyed than those when, through the kindness of friends, special entertainments are provided. Bible-classes and prayer-meetings are found to be seasons of refreshing.

There is need enough for the large extension of this good work, for the nine hundred and odd girls accommodated during the year in these eight Homes form but a fraction of those still wandering in the cold, dark wilderness. In the eight Homes, the first of which (Victoria House) was opened in 1879, there have since that time been received 7367 girls and young women under the age of twenty-five. Full board, which includes breakfast, dinner, and tea, is provided at 4s. 6d. per week, and bedroom accommodation at from 2s. 6d. to 4s. At Norfolk House, Mare-street, Hackney, this can be had for 2s. Notwithstanding these low charges, the earnings of numbers are so small that they can only afford themselves two meals a day. Lincoln House, situate at 12, York-place, Baker-street, W., is the latest addition, and it is an interesting fact that after the opening of this a gentleman called at the office and left a donation of £2100, for providing yet another Home, a suitable site for which is now being sought. All communications should be addressed to the hon. director, Mr. J. Shrimpton, 38, Lincoln's-inn-fields, W.C.

Y.M.C.A., CAMBERWELL.—The first annual meeting of this branch was held on the 20th inst., at Camberwell Hall, Grove-lane. The report, though dealing only with small figures, showed satisfactory progress in every direction. Rev. H. W. Webb Peploe, as chairman, spoke powerfully from Gen. xiii. 14, drawing an impressive and solemn picture of the three classes typified by the Sodomites, by Lot, and by Abraham, and especially emphasising the character of the second class as representing that large body of half-and-half Christians, who try to "make the most of both worlds." Rev. J. Reid Howatt spoke forcibly on want of "tone"—pointing out that Lot's downward course began when he left the holy atmosphere of Abraham's company. Mr. Hind Smith followed with some words of encouragement to the members, whom he urged to work, not for the Association, but for Christ. An invitation to join the Camberwell Branch was given by Mr. Carpenter—himself a member—who also spoke in no uncertain manner as to the nature of Y.M.C.A. work. The last address came from Rev. S. B. Rees, who referred to the grave necessity for Christian workers to realise more definitely their entire dependence upon God.

OF FULL SALVATION FROM SIN.

Extracts from a few of very many Letters :—

"I thank you a hundred times."——"I cannot tell you how much God has blessed them to me. It was just what my soul was longing for."——"I am doing all I can to circulate them; for they are so clear and convincing from the Word, that we possess in our Saviour, not only pardon for past sin, but cleansing from indwelling sin."——"I have had a fresh revelation of what Jesus is to me in His capacity of Saviour, and I have been able to grasp Him in a fuller and more comprehensive faith as my Deliverer from indwelling sin; and that on the truth of the living God, as shown so clearly in your little book."——"Glory be to God! it has made a new man of me. . . . . Through its instrumentality I consciously stand upon the promises as I have never done before. I used to struggle against temptation mightily, and many a time I thought I could not hold out much longer. Now I see it—I simply look to Jesus."

The book may be obtained through any bookseller; or, in case of difficulty, by writing to the under-noted address, sending 2s., or less if not able to send so much, or without money if not able to send any.

The "Letter to the Rev. Robert Dawson," 40 pages in paper cover, to which the "Scriptural Proofs" are a sequel, may also be obtained by so writing, sending fourpence, or without money. "The highest-toned piece of controversial writing it was ever our lot to read."—Divine Life.

For the Young.

WHAT A CHILD LEARNED IN AN OLD HOUSE.

BY MRS. A. B. SIMPSON.[*]

It was the end of August. Summer was taking leave of us, and carrying off the long days to fold up in her wardrobe for another year. Hoar-frost at night succeeded great heat by day, and the moon looked down on closely reaped fields and ungarnered sheaves. Autumn had brought forth her treasures, and the trees were heavy with apples and laden with plums. Brambles, rowans, heather, and hazel-nuts mingled in the hedgerows.

Amid such surroundings lived our little Elsa. She was, at the time of our story, at school in a great city an hour distant by rail. But on this particular day she had a holiday; and, leaving in her lodgings her school-bag and the tin in which she carried her lunch, she put on her best clothes, and was soon hurrying joyfully back to her beautiful home in the country.

"We have a holiday, grandpapa!" she cried, as the old man stooped to kiss her. "It is the Nestküchlein's birthday, so it must be a story to-day."

Soon the two were sitting at milk and coffee under the great oak. Afterwards the old grey-haired man of seventy summers took the child on his knee, as he began to tell her the story of their home, the dear old Schloss. The Bille flowed softly past, the Mathilde lay anchored in the little harbour, the scythes of the men cutting the reeds might have been flashing waves, and one field was full of haymakers. On the sides of the old Schloss the grapes were ripening and the red creeper grew over the walls. Verbenas, stocks, and roses were in great profusion. The air was still.

> This castle hath a pleasant seat: the air
> Nimbly and sweetly recommends itself
> Unto our gentle senses.

It seemed as if summer had a recall from nature to come back for one day more into the autumn hours: for the white butterflies skimmed about; there were clouds of insects in the air; and swallows hovered not far off, uncertain whether it was time to go or not.

All this the child heeded not. Not even the little dog which jumped about could turn her thoughts from the story. Her only interruption was, "Go on, grandpapa! do not stop!" As she looked up into his face, and listened to the words which fell from him, describing different scenes, she felt as if she was turning over the leaves of a great picture-book. A noble book, indeed, would that old grandfather have been. In his younger days he had been strong and active, taking ever as his motto, "Thue recht und schaue nicht!"—"Do right and regard nothing!"

"This great building that you look on," he began, "which is now a hotel, has gone through many changes. In the verandah, where servants are now flipping their napkins to keep off the flies, holy monks used to walk about, for it was in former days a monastery. Very rich was that old Cistercian cloister, having huge wine cellars and owning all the country round. The chapel opposite us has a door in the end for dwellers in the house to enter by, and there are dungeons underneath with little holes for air, and an underground passage by which the monks used to go secretly to the nearest town. The clock now ticking in the tower has seen strange sights—baptisms, bridals, burials. Everything in the chapel is perfect—the old pulpit, the images of the Mother and Child, the confessional, and the old organ.

"Then the scene changed, and the old house became a court of justice. Prisoners were brought up to the gates; and in the long hall, which is now our table d'hôte room, filled with little tables for our guests, cases were tried and judgment given. The sheriff and his servants lived in other rooms; and, when I came, we found the presses in which the legal documents were kept and the trap-doors to the cells.

"Then came the time when my son—your father, my child—and I bought the house for seventy-five thousand marks. The place became a bee-hive with busy workmen. Heaps of rubbish had to be removed. A wall had to be pulled down there, and a partition to be put up here. Gardens had to be made outside, walls papered and painted inside. Even the furniture was brought in a rough state and finished here, because of the tax. I seem to see it all before me. The inspector's office was over there, mine yonder. How slowly the men worked! They were social democrats. I wept! I scolded! I promised them beer, increased their day's wages; but all was of no use. Not one bit would they go faster than what seemed agreed upon by themselves.

"Our Schloss is even not without its legend, for a strange thing happened while they were at work. A lady came up to the men, and, pointing to yon ancient tower, cried, 'A louis d'or if you will dig for the bones of my dead daughter which were buried there.' We never discovered what she meant, for the body was never found. It may be that some sad tragedy had taken place within these walls.

"You see for yourself what I have made of the old place—how beautiful it is, and how much pleasure it gives to hundreds; how tired citizens come here to enjoy a few days' rest, while many more come but to be made glad by the lovely gardens and flowing stream.

"How strange have the changes in this one old building been! A cloister! A court of justice! A hotel! Some day, you will read in the chapel Bible a more wonderful story still, and that of a far more wonderful building than this. God Himself once dwelt in it, for the building was the soul of man. At first the life was peaceful and holy, as we may fancy were the lives of the cloistered monks who dwelt here. Alas! man sinned and fell; and all that remained to tell of the soul's first occupant was the faintly legible inscription, 'Here God once dwelt!'"

> It was thy lodging once before,
> It builded was by Thee:
> But I to sin set ope the door,
> It render'd was by me.
> And so thy building was defaced,
> And in thy room another placed.

"Who dwelt in the soul-building after that, grandfather?" asked the little girl.

"Ah, my child! a stern judge, called Conscience, held his court in it as the old sheriff did in our Schloss here. Many a time his decision on the deeds brought before him was 'Guilty.'"

"Is it not wonderful, my child, that just as I bought this Schloss, to make something valuable of it, so another stepped in and resolved to buy the ruined soul, and to make it a beautiful temple which would repay Him for all his trouble?

"It was our Saviour who bought the soul for Himself, paid the price for it, made a new creation of it, furnished it with beautiful thoughts and Christian graces, and dwells in it with his Father!"

> Mark you the floor? that square and speckled stone
> Which looks so firm and strong,
> Is Patience:
> And the other, black and grave, wherewith each one
> Is checker'd all along,
> Humility:
>
> The gentle rising, which on either hand
> Leads to the Quire above,
> Is Confidence:
> But the sweet Cement, which in one sure band
> Ties the whole frame, is Love
> And Charity.

The grandfather and the child sat for a time thinking over this old story. The sun went down, and the moon came out, before the child retired to rest. She never forgot that evening. Often in after days did she have secret interviews with the Bible in the chapel, and many pilgrimages through the winding passages of the old house. When asked the secret of her willingness in service and her love for the old Book, she always pointed back to the day her grandfather told the stories of the Schloss and of the soul, with the wonderful changes both had undergone.

> I love to tell the story:
> More wonderful it seems
> Than all the golden fancies
> Of all our golden dreams.
> I love to tell the story:
> It did so much for me:
> And that is just the reason
> I tell it now to thee.

REVIVAL IN A PRISON

Having learned that the prison of C——, in the State of Nevada, was open to us (writes a Christian lady), we wended our way thither, full of emotion at the thought of facing the 125 criminals. We held our service in the refectory. Shall we ever forget that scene, some so young and others quite aged?

We began with a hymn, the first line of which is "Home, sweet Home." By degrees the faces softened, the eyes that had looked with hate were filled with tears. We could almost read upon their faces the thoughts that were rushing through their memories. Some leant their heads upon the table; others tried to brave it out; others turned their heads away to hide their feelings; many wept. The loving, merciful Saviour was there, his holy, blessed presence filled that room! The officials who had accompanied us looked at each other with astonishment as they noticed the effect of the truth spoken. As for ourselves, our hearts were filled with the deepest gratitude for what we were permitted to see amongst that audience. Those who desired to leave their sins and take Christ as their Saviour were asked to stand up. Sixty of them rose. We sang a hymn, the prisoners joining with us in praise.

As we left we promised to return on the following Sunday, and on that day in this prison we had a real baptism of the Holy Ghost. As we entered for the second time, faces lightened up, and it was visible that a great change had taken place from the happy countenances of several. At the end of this service those who had found peace were asked to rise. Almost all who had risen the previous Sunday again rose, and others who had remained seated then now rose for the first time. When we were departing we shook hands, they declaring that, by the help of God, they would henceforth lead new lives, and God should have the glory. Eternity only will reveal the blessing that descended upon those prisoners in the Government gaol of Nevada on those two memorable Sabbaths.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN CALMUCK has recently been published by the Russian Imperial Academy of Sciences, and copies have been sent to Astrachan where they were rapidly purchased by converts, and the remainder sent for distribution by European missionaries in Asia. The British and Foreign Bible Society first moved in the matter, and entrusted the translation to Professor Poznsieff, of the University of St. Petersburg. It is stated from Beirut too that the Sultan of Turkey has approved of thirty-two editions of the Scriptures in Arabic, allowing them to be "sold, distributed, or shipped, without let or hindrance." In Damascus also the officials have authorised a large number of copies.

CONFERENCES ON REVIVAL.

By Rev. W. GUEST.

ADDRESS AT THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

The subject supplied to me, and which I have the honour of presenting to the Assembly, is "The Desirableness of County Conferences for the Revival of Faith and Piety in the Churches."

By conferences are not meant public meetings, where there is ostentation, eagerness to listen to announced speakers, and no opportunity for conferring in the true sense of the term. Neither do the words "revival of faith and piety" mean that religion is in decay in the churches of our order. Exceptional opportunities during recent years of visiting congregations have led me to the conclusion that our churches comprise members who, for public spirit, disinterestedness, laborious service, and generous gifts, have not been surpassed in our history. On the other hand, it would be a new thing among us if we concealed from ourselves dangers which are not ours only, but those of our times. During all the progress of Christendom there has never been a church which combined with eminent religiousness a Pharisaic complacency. Barren is the comparison which sets a past age against a present one. This, however, will be admitted. Every age has its characteristic evils; and nothing but a strong religion can prevent human nature gravitating downwards. Every new period comes, moreover, as a test of loyalty, and as a new call to a perfecting self-restraint. On the appointed overseers of churches the duty has been laid of taking note of these new perils. If we may compare the words of the Lord Jesus, none are more august and impressive than those wherein, in his messages to the seven Asiatic churches, He identifies the presiding elder with the steadfastness, defection, or apostasy of the church which is addressed.

It has of late been my privilege in the southern and western counties to hold intercourse, in conferences, with ministerial brethren, and I am justified in declaring that the prevailing state of thought among them is this: there may be doubts whether the complaint of not holding truth does not stop at truth, and whether evangelical doctrine is not often preached rather as an opiate than as a converting power to the conscience; but at the same time there is prayerful, painstaking, and honest effort to get at the very heart of the Gospel of Christ. As Independents, we have, for three hundred years, been a great witnessing house for truth in England, but we have never been enamoured of humanly constructed theological formulæ. Our standard of faith has been immutable. Let it be reaffirmed. We place our hand on the New Testament and say, "This is our creed." Those of us who are older in the ministry are not careful to preserve every past reading of Nonconformist doctrine. But time enhances in our estimation the exceeding preciousness and wonderfulness of the New Testament, and increases the anxiety that any change of doctrinal opinion should be obviously the light that breaks forth from its deathless words.

We cannot, however, fail to see that an insistent scepticism is upon our era. Endless alarms are heard of the injury to Christian faith by the conclusions of physical science. Certainly the scientific spirit and priceless scientific results have made illustrious this century; yet surely no intelligent faith has been shaken thereby. Scientists are truth-seeking investigators, but they are far from being infallible. When those of us who attended the British Association meetings in Birmingham in 1865, and again, twenty-one years after, in 1886, saw that at the former period there was a direction towards blank materialism, and on the latter year towards a wondrous supernaturalism; when one finds that a leading theory, which was for years endorsed by official scientific publications, and which permeated scientific text-books, has had to be completely abandoned; when we learn that the Director-General of the Geological Survey nobly confesses, in 1884, that he had joined in supporting a mistaken hypothesis; when one hears a distinguished petrologist in 1886, from the chair of a learned society, uttering warnings against incorrect scientific observations, and inferences founded on superficial similarities; when we are told that Sir W. Thomson has reduced his former conclusions on geological time by no less than eighty-eight millions of years; when we read Sir William Dawson's words, written last March, concerning what he terms the "crude speculations on Cave deposits;" when we learn that this last May the Professor of Geology in the University of Oxford offered considerations to the Geological Society that enormously brought forward the date of the appearance of man; when the facts are becoming manifest that many of the foremost scientists of our period are the most pronounced believers in Divine Revelation, and that the present President of the Royal Society fills also the Chair of the Victoria Institute—we should be imbeciles without courage, and not Christians, should we fail to possess our souls in patience on this matter.

Among other influences, that which we have to fear in its effect upon our period is this: there has grown up in recent years a school of literary critics, who, while smart writers, are amazingly unlearned in theological literature, boastful of the moral emancipation which they conceive the "higher philosophy" has brought, and dominated by a fashion of hinting that Christianity is discarded for a religion which none of them dares describe. One of its clever and dangerous books, on "The Service of Man," repeats anti-Christian arguments which have been completely answered and conclusively demolished. It is astonishing that this literary fashion and audacious superficiality should be allowed to drop a poison of unbelief on the minds of Nonconformists. But so it is. Young men in our churches are lost as to effectiveness; young ladies, who might be expected to love the Saviour, thrust forward their doubts; and men whose names are on our church-books have allowed themselves to become unsettled in their convictions in a way that makes their witness for Christ painfully ambiguous.

The subject given to me speaks of the "revival" of piety as well as of faith. The two are properly joined. When the authority of Revelation is no longer recognised, the pathway is opened to utter disbelief in a supersensuous realm. The senses become the impulsion of life. But this is an age when the appeals to the senses press on men with a force they never had before. As the spiritual retires, the materialistic multiplies its temptations. An exacting and tyrannising outwardness is sorely in danger of belittling us as ministers. How much more are our people exposed to that outwardness, and likely to succumb to it. When our Lord spoke of not finding faith on earth, may He not have meant a faith equal to the desperate strain that would be put upon it in the last days? Our newspapers are issued by three and a half millions a day. Books and magazines come out by hundreds of thousands. The literature of fiction, good and viciously bad, and which caters to an unwholesome love of the sensational, is disseminated by millions of copies every week. The facilities, importunities, and imperativeness of locomotion, have changed the character of our country and of our homes. The pleasure-loving faculty is the mark of this latter half of our century. The possibilities of amusement, the fascinations thrown over the doubtful, and the temptations to a God-forgetting life, are countless in variety and attractiveness.

M. Vinet has pointed out, in his "Outlines of Philosophy," that man is at bottom a serious being, and that this especially applies to the working classes, who will cease to listen to teachers when they care chiefly to amuse them. On this account it is that the attempt made in England just now to turn Sunday services into a performance has no attraction whatever for intelligent artisans. And so of this present externalism of life. Whatever advantages it brings, it brings also to professors of religion the very gravest dangers. The avenues of blessing from the Spirit of Christ often become closed; real prayer is jostled out of the way; the taste for Bible-reading dies; God cannot bless the soul, for He finds nothing to bless in it; the hallowed domestic worship of Nonconformist forefathers becomes a mere memory of happier and nobler days; pastoral urgencies to take part in special efforts for missions at home, and abroad, fall powerless; and pastoral exhortations to cultivate devotional habits are met by the criticism that they are old-fashioned. Certainly, in every one of our churches there are those of whom very different things may be said. These two things, however, cannot be questioned: there can be no religion without communion with God; and, according to the Scriptures, the fundamental conception of faith involves sacrifice, the "sacrifice and service" of faith.

Therefore it is that since our last autumnal assembly most blessed and useful ministerial meetings for getting alone with the Lord and for counsel, have been held in many places. They have been ministerial that there might be first the confession of ministerial sins, and prayer that the great Searcher of hearts would reveal the real nature of ministerial aims and motives. In these conferences care has been taken that pastors in obscure places should not be overlooked, and ample time has been given, so that churches might be in full sympathy. When communicants, because they will not live as they believe, are left to believe as they live, it is sacredly urgent that churches should be informed of our apprehensions and solicitudes.

It was a fine sentence from Lord Bacon which was quoted at the late Shorthand Congress:—"Since things alter for the worse spontaneously, they must be altered for the better designedly." The altering for the better among Congregationalists is a simultaneous cry from our watch-towers to leave modern novelties, and to cast ourselves fully upon spiritual forces. County conferences are recommended by our Union Committee. To these, while laymen might well be invited, there should be sessions in them wholly ministerial. Brethren who feel the more deeply on the matter should meet beforehand. Arrangements should be no byplay of leisure. Much depends upon the selection of those who introduce topics for counsel. Time should be left for spontaneous utterance. The responsibility of preserving the oneness of accord must be realised. Above all, the deep dependence by prayer and the religious sentiment must be paramount. The taking up, throughout the denomination, of the revival of faith and piety is in harmony with our best traditions, and can alone enable us to meet the appalling evils that prey upon society. He in whose Person there is concentrated the union of Godhead and manhood, and who loves us for the sake of the truths we confess, has already given indubitable proofs in the preliminary conferences of the grace He will bestow.

Doubtless other matters claim attention. Excellent men there are among us who see breakers ahead in the future of England, and who nobly devote themselves to the work of social reforms and ameliorations. Let none of us disparage these movements, and let not such as promote them under-estimate the purpose of those who maintain that intelligent and real spirituality is the necessary complement of our Scriptural principles, and the safety and strength of our churches. Nothing monastic or affected is meant by spirituality. This is meant by it: it is the mysterious nexus which unites man to God, and faithfully interprets his law of righteousness in all human relationships; and this is meant: it is the quickened understanding that detects low aims, and the sympathy with Christ that reveals to churches what methods He will approve in advancing his unworldly kingdom, and, at the same time, causes preaching to revolve around those great saving truths which in every age have been attended with the effectual working of the Divine Spirit; and this is meant: that there may be upon us, who are Jesus Christ's, an air of reality—unaffected, unmistakable reality—and an enthusiasm for the salvation of men which shall exert a contagious belief.

I will close with one thought more. At the beginning of the Church we may imagine that seven days after the ascension of the Lord Jesus a fervent disciple might thus have addressed the hundred and twenty. Anticipating a latter-day maxim, he might have said, "Brothers, to work is to pray. We have no time longer for this upper room. The coming Feast has drawn to the city foreign Jews from every synagogue. Our duty now is to stand up in the streets of Jerusalem, and testify that we all saw the risen Christ." Had that been so the Pentecostal effusion might never have come, because fitting agents were not found. So now, if we would join in lifting England out of the slough of immoralities, chaotic questionings, and Popish fatuities, into which it is in danger of falling, our wisdom will be to count no time lost which makes us meet for the Master's use. Spite of all our apprehensions, the Spirit of Christ, whose silent march through the ages is in divers ways, is moving over us, so that we may make the last years of this great century glorious in his service, whose we are and whom we love.

THE FIGUERAS MISSION.

DEAR FRIENDS,—We left England on Sept. 28, accompanied by Miss Kerr, who has been a valued worker in the Mission for nearly two years. At Paris we were joined by my mother, and step-father, Colonel Baynes. Since the origin of the Mission the latter has taken a deep interest in the work, and until the last few years acted as hon. treasurer, when he was obliged to resign on account of failing health. For some time past his wish had been to visit Figueras. At Paris we were also joined by Miss Green, an earnest Christian, who has undertaken the charge of the Figueras girls' school.

The first need that presses itself upon us is that of a new hall in the centre of the town, our present one being most inconveniently situated on the outskirts. The lease of our old hall ends February 4, so tha other quarters must be found, and there are none to let, so that building becomes a necessity. About £160 are promised towards the £1200 needed for purchase of land and building.

October 17.—Since writing the above we have passed through great sorrow. On the 9th my beloved step-father was taken ill very suddenly. At the first visit the doctor gave no hope, saying, "The Colonel has come to Spain too late; but his life may be prolonged a few days." To add to our distress a letter came for him with the sad news of the sudden death of his eldest brother, which was a great shock in his weak state. After five anxious days and nights he passed peacefully away. To him we believe it is a "great gain," but to us who remain it is a terrible loss.

On Saturday at 4 p.m. the funeral took place at the Protestant cemetery. Over one thousand persons walked in the procession. All the town showed sympathy, and was represented by the leading doctors, lawyers, professors, tradespeople, the colonel in command of the regiment at the fortress, with a military band. Of course the converts of Figueras and Vilabertran, rich and poor alike, combined to offer a tribute of respect to his memory. Many Romanists and Freethinkers were present out of sympathy to us, so at the cemetery the pastor intimated that there would be an evangelical service, and if any did not wish to stay, they could then retire. But not a man stirred; all in that large concourse remained, and listened with respectful attention to the earnest Gospel address on the text, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." It was a grand opportunity. Oh that through it many of those present may pass from death unto life. Pray for us.

CANADA AND CHINA.

THOSE who are suffering from spiritual constriction of the heart should attend a few of the workers' meetings at the Home of Industry in Spitalfields. If they can go through a brief course of these without having their Christian sympathies widened so as to feel with Wesley that the world is their parish, then they are, indeed, in a hopeless condition. Capital place, this Home of Industry, for our "Brethren" friends to lose their "exclusiveness."

At last week's meeting, of course, Miss MACPHERSON herself was the greatest centre of attraction. She had just got back from Canada and the great North-West, and her heart and lips were full of the wonders she had seen. After hearing her eloquent description of the country and its resources, we felt as though we ought to start by the next steamer from Liverpool. And when, at the close of the meeting, Mr. Pigott dilated with rapture on the glories and attractions of the far-spreading and fertile plains of Manchuria our self-condemnation was complete. Why do we huddle ourselves together by the million in a few square miles of the earth's surface, when there are these broad expanses of almost virgin soil waiting to be trodden and cultivated and coaxed into fruitfulness by the race for whose benefit it was created? Are we kept here by laziness, ignorance, timidity, or what?

As we have hinted, Miss Macpherson had much to say about her recent visit to the Dominion, during which she journeyed by land and by sea 10,600 miles. Of the voyage, the reception at Stratford, and the deeply interesting work of setting the solitary in Canadian families we need say nothing; it is a tale we have often heard and told, though every time it seems as fresh as at the first. Letters are already coming in, said our sister, describing "how much nicer Canada is than England," and so forth. The house at Stratford being left comparatively empty for the time, Mr. and Mrs. Merry have come back for a little space to London, to help in preparing the new Home of Industry for its future work.

A new departure, of which Miss Macpherson spoke enthusiastically and hopefully, was a Bible carriage, which is destined to perambulate the backwoods with its freight of spiritual wealth, in the shape of Scriptures and good books. A visit to the great annual fair at Toronto was described. Ministers, missionaries, merchants, and others, belonging to all sections of the Christian Church, stood on the steps of the carriage and proclaimed the message of salvation; while a stream of pure and purifying literature flowed out. The carriage is going from fair to fair throughout the "fall," doing its blessed work; the Gospel texts painted on it, acting as constant preachers by the way. We hope this pioneer carriage will be followed by many more.

The third and last topic of Miss Macpherson's remarkable discourse was the visit to the North-West, whither she, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Merry, was "franked" by the generous kindness of the Canadian Pacific Railway officials. Two days and three nights were consumed in this westward journey from Stratford. Our good sister fairly surpassed herself in expatiating on the natural beauties of the route. Such lovely scenery! Rivers rushing through boulders and rocks on their headlong way to Lake Superior. Trees clothed with the gloriously tinted autumnal foliage of that sunny land—many shades of green, yellow, crimson, and golden—"till really we sometimes could not speak to each other; we could only just gaze, and wonder, and adore." Space would fail us to repeat the half of what Miss Macpherson said as to the richness of the land, the blueness of the skies, and the brilliance of the starry heavens, as seen from Winnipeg. She indicated that there is a wide and open door in those parts for spiritual work, and she hopes soon to hear that Mr. Moody will pay a visit to this Western paradise. By the way, Mr. Moody had begun a month's Gospel mission in Roman Catholic Montreal when our friends passed through the city on the homeward journey. He was waking up the Montreal Christians, by his rousing words; and setting them to work in the way that we remember so well on this side of the sea.

This and much more did Miss Macpherson tell us, till our hearts burned within us, and we could not but catch some of the glow that enswathed her burning utterances. When she sat down, Miss GRAINGER, who was a companion-voyager to Canada, greatly excited our interest by a pathetic sketch of "Little Sally," rescued from an East-end lodging-house, nursed and trained for a time at Hackney, taken out to Canada, and when seen there a few weeks ago transformed beyond recognition. This, as our readers well know, is the sort of thing that is going on all the time in connection with the Home of Industry. A little company of boys present in the early part of the meeting looked as if they were quickly graduating for promotion to the Canadian shore.

A contingent of the party of lady missionaries, to sail for China on the following day, was present, and the brief addresses they gave proved by no means the least interesting part of the evening's work. We are now somewhat familiar with the jubilant spirit that pervades these valedictory utterances, and it was certainly very marked on this occasion. It is no superficial enthusiasm or dreamy mysticism that leads these sisters to go forth on their glorious life-work with such merry and rejoicing hearts. Each one told how the surpassing love of Christ and the realised sense of his near and living presence was an inspiration that enabled them to endure the parting of human ties, and to enter on their untried pathway of service with the joyful assurance of success. Mr. BROOMHALL, in giving particulars of the China Inland Mission, asked for prayer that the right workers may be chosen out of the many who offer themselves. Miss Macpherson, at the outset of her remarks, had some encouraging thoughts to offer her departing sisters about the blessedness and value of individual work. Mr. PIGOTT, as we have said, spoke of the goodly land to which they were going, and of the almost endless vista of opportunity for Gospel work that has opened up among the thousands and thousands of populous towns and villages in China. As chairman of the meeting, Mr. R. C. MORGAN gave an opening message of comfort and cheer to the missionaries in a brief exposition of the narrative of the Transfiguration, showing that it is by seeing "no man, save Jesus only," on the mount of communion, that power is gained for service and conflict in the valley. At these meetings it is the good custom by the golden chain of prayer to bind the whole round world about the feet of God, as our Laureate so beautifully puts it. So it was last week; even the Trafalgar-square "loafers" were not forgotten.

TRISTAN D'ACUNHA.—In reply to a correspondent, the Post Office authorities state that correspondence for this island does not require any special superscription. There is no regular communication between this country and Tristan d'Acunha, but one of H.M. ships calls there occasionally, and, due notice of such opportunity being given to the postal department by the Admiralty, a mail is made up to contain any correspondence which may be awaiting despatch. When no such direct opportunity offers, correspondence for the island in question is despatched to St. Helena for transmission to destination as occasion arises.

RICHMOND Y.M.C. INSTITUTE.—This Institute, which was started at the instigation of the members of the Bible-class conductor by Mr. Albert A. Head in April last, has been the means of much blessing to the young men of Richmond. Many have professed conversion since its opening, and the spiritual life of many more has been deepened by the classes and meetings held there. In carrying on the work great want is felt in the need of suitable lodging accommodation for young men of limited means away from home; and the committee are desirous of meeting this want by starting a residence for such young men under the control of the Secretary. To furnish and fit the house proposed to be taken £200 is needed. The Home will be self-supporting. The treasurer of the Institute is Mr. Albert A. Head, Sunnyside, Richmond, Surrey.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Rev. Dr. Adolph Saphir, of Belgrave Presbyterian Church.

We would remind our northern readers of the series of meetings about to be held in Scotland to protest against the system of licensed vice in India and the Colonies. The dates fixed are:—Edinburgh, November 15; Aberdeen, 16; Dundee, 17; and Glasgow, 18. Principal Rainy, Mrs. Josephine Butler, Mr. J. B. Wookey, and others, are expected to address these gatherings.

Football may be an exhilarating sport, and valuable from an athletic point of view, when properly conducted. But in its practical outcome, as at present arranged, it seems to be more fatal than prize-fighting, which is prohibited by law. In our opinion, every death caused by the rough and brutal methods permitted in the game, ought to be the occasion of an action for manslaughter.

Much can be done by local authorities to relieve distress, in providing work for the unemployed. But there are many "hidden ones" in every densely populated neighbourhood who never proclaim their want and sorrow, and who must be sought out if they are to be helped. The only agency that can effectually do so is the Christian Church. We would, therefore, urge the importance of generously sustaining the hands of every London pastor who has a visiting staff, and who makes it his business to minister to the wants of these silent sufferers.

Pastor Frank H. White writes, strongly urging that "systematic proportionate giving" should take the place of "indiscriminate charity." He and others who are engaged in mission work constantly come across genuine cases of dire need in their visiting — cases which they have ample opportunity of verifying. He also suggests that the benevolent public should entrust their gifts to "well-known and accredited London pastors" for wise distribution, instead of dispensing them to beggars in the street and at the door, many of whom are not among the most deserving.

The simple truth as to the imputation of Adam's guilt to his posterity, and of Christ's righteousness to his believing people, appears to us to be that just as "Levi paid tithes in Abraham, for he was yet in the loins of his father when Melchisedec met him" (Heb. vii. 9, 10) so each of Adam's children sinned in Adam, for he was yet in the loins of his father when he sinned in Eden. And, on the other hand, when Jesus our Substitute and Surety died, we died in Him, and when He rose from the dead we rose in Him. Natural generation unites us to the first Adam; faith unites us to the second.

Mr. Denham Smith's friends will be rejoiced to hear that he is seemingly none the worse for his anxious and difficult journey from Shanklin to London. Carried from bed to bed by means of an ambulance, and aided by all the appliances and skill necessary to safeguard him in his prostrate condition, he bore the journey by sea and land better than could have been expected. His physicians, however, still consider his state to be one of the gravest anxiety, although his wonderful rallying power gives ground for a reasonable hope.

The family and friends of Miss Marsh desire to express their warmest thanks once more to those readers of THE CHRISTIAN who have kindly joined with them and with others in prayer for her recovery. God has most graciously answered those prayers in raising her up from the extremity of illness. The severity of the attack has left both her heart and lungs seriously affected, and prayer is still desired on her behalf.

It is humiliating to find one of the largest and noblest of Missionary Boards in danger of a split on a question of purely speculative theology. The question of probation after death has arisen among the missionaries and friends of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. From being a charitable possibility, controversy seems, in many cases, to have hardened it into a dogma. Two long and exciting sessions have been held in its discussion at Springfield, Mass.; because of this hypothesis, for it is nothing more, the churches are agitated, party factions find a battle-ground, and sympathies over the benighted heathen are arrested. Why should servants want to know more respecting the work their Master has given them to do than what He has revealed?

The Conference held on the Tuesday and Wednesday of this week at Hammersmith has moved on very commendable lines. There have been morning and afternoon meetings for ministers of various churches and denominations. The topics at these private conferences have been Confession of Ministerial Sins; Conditions of Spiritual Blessing; the Doctrine of the Holy Spirit; and Hindrances to his Manifestation and blessing. On the evenings of the two days there have been open meetings for Church officers, Christian workers, and others, and a united observance of the Lord's Supper. We hope to give further details next week.

We have received a telegraphic despatch from Dr. Barnardo in Canada, stating that the exhaustion of the funds for carrying on his rescue and training work at home compels him to hurry back to London. He adds that the work in Canada is magnificent. We doubt not the knowledge of his pressing need will constrain many to come to the help of our devoted brother.

The recent report of the Directors of Convict Prisons contains the re-assuring intelligence that the number of persons under sentence for serious crime in England and Wales continues steadily to decrease, the yearly average of penal servitude prisoners having declined from 2800 thirty years ago to 968 for the last two years, and the total convict prison population (counted in the summer of this year) being about 7441 as against 11,000 in 1879. Specially noteworthy is the fact that the number of female convicts is now very little more than one-half of what it was ten years ago; and that, whereas in 1884 there were 350 sailors, soldiers, and marines under sentence in convict prisons, there are now only 127. Opinions, of course, will differ as to the causes of this undeniable improvement, but one portion of these figures, at all events, bears powerful testimony to the spread of the temperance movement in the services, and to the value of such work as that carried on by Miss Robinson, Miss Daniell, and others. Much of the credit for the decrease must also be given to the Prison Gate Missions and similar valuable agencies, which, by affording help to convicts on their discharge have been successful in saving many from relapsing into crime.

A writer in The Birmingham Weekly Post furnishes the following details which have been brought to his notice respecting the firm of match-makers alluded to at the Church Congress, as declaring a dividend of over twenty per cent., and yet paying their female employées a penny an hour:—

> The women supply the labour, the paste, the firing to dry their finished boxes, and the hemp wherewith to tie them up into bundles; they are paid for six bundles of twenty-four, or 144 boxes, if delivered without any flaw in the work, (the work is carefully examined), twopence farthing. A woman can earn at this work, if she is quick, and works uninterruptedly, ninepence in eleven hours, or three farthings an hour.

These particulars appear to rest upon the authority of a periodical called Common Sense, which also cites the case of a woman who, with a dying child by her side, could only make three gross of boxes in the week, for which, after the deduction of twopence for one slightly damaged label, she received fourpence-halfpenny. If these assertions are not true, let the firm in question (Messrs. Byrant & May) nail them to the counter at once; if they are facts, the time is come for another Wilberforce to emancipate another race of slaves from a thraldom even more pitiless and degrading than that of the African plantations.

It has been announced by telegram to The Times that the "Palestine Orthodox Society," whose head-quarters are at St. Petersburg, has been making excavations at Jerusalem in ground belonging to Russia, and that the investigations have resulted in the discovery of remains of the city wall, with gateways as they existed in the time of Christ. As the gateways are nearest to the site of Golgotha, it is believed that they are those through which Jesus must have passed on his way to Calvary. Steps have been taken to preserve the remains.

"I don't say never use it, but use it only when necessary; above all, don't use it when you know it is unnecessary." Such is the advice given by Dr. Murray, of Newcastle, in a recent lecture there on "The Danger of Regular Habits," wherein he treated the drink question as a scientific problem. While admitting that the regular use of alcohol was neither necessary nor advisable, he maintained that sudden and rigid total abstinence was attended with some risk, especially to those of feeble constitution and uncertain health, and cited instances in support of this theory from his own experience. Commenting upon this in a subsequent speech, the Bishop of Newcastle aptly suggested that if it were good for a total abstainer to change his habits (which, however, he did not believe), it might not be amiss for non-abstainers to change theirs, and make the experiment of doing without alcohol for a while. There seems, as yet, no general consensus of opinion among doctors as to the proper use and function of alcohol; but, unless we are mistaken, the tide of medical opinion is setting towards the view that its right office is that of a medicine, pure and simple, to be prescribed like any other drug, e.g., laudanum or morphia.

At a subsequent meeting the same Bishop, speaking of the necessity for a change in the licensing laws, thus indicated the true lines upon which the temperance movement should run:—

> The alteration of the law must be the expression of the mind of the nation. It is obviously no use to legislate ahead of the consciences of the people of this land; anything like sumptuary laws will only thrust back the swing of the pendulum; and, therefore, our laws must be the result of our personal work, the record of the great moral sense of the nation expressed articulately in the laws made at Westminster.

The following summary of the chief hindrances to missionary work in Africa, condensed from a paper read by Archdeacon Hamilton at the Church Congress, may be found both useful and suggestive:—(1) Mohammedanism, which panders to slavery and polygamy; (2) Paganism, with its fetishism, witchcraft, &c.; (3) Ungodly nominal professors of Christianity; (4) Tribal wars; (5) The evil and vicious lives of Europeans, which openly contradict the preaching of the missionaries; (6) The resort to dishonest tricks of trade on the part of Europeans; (7) The liquor traffic as introduced and carried on by Europeans. The Archdeacon also quoted from a letter written by the King of Bida to Bishop Crowther, saying that barasa (rum or gin) had ruined his country, and begging that the importation of it might be stopped.

Many of our readers will be able to call to mind singular "cases of conscience" which, in the times of the Puritans, received consideration at the hands of the leading divines. A Roman Catholic contemporary evidently is of opinion that the time has not gone by for such intellectual feats, and in a recent issue, under the head of "Clerical Notes and Queries," it has the following:—

> Matilda, a devout person, had a rosary blessed by the Pope. She died, and the rosary, which she had always carried about with her in life, is inherited by a friend who does not inherit the blessing, which was personal, and yet wishes, for her friend's sake, to use it. But it having been blessed by the Pope, she shrinks from giving it to a common priest to bless—moreover, she has already a set of blessed beads. Can she have the beads of the deceased blessed also, and use both sets?

The Puritans were never exercised about such nonsense as this.

The visit of the Bishop of Lichfield and the Bishop of Salisbury to some of the centres of the Old Catholic movement in Germany, Switzerland, and Austria, naturally has given rise to much comment, and the result is being looked forward to with considerable interest. The primary object is, according to the Bishop of Salisbury, "a closer union between ourselves and those who, by a study of Holy Scripture and of Church history, have been brought to a like faith with ourselves of the Church of England on many of the most important points of doctrine and discipline."

How this union is to be brought about is not quite apparent, however, unless the Old Catholics are very much more advanced than is generally believed to be the case. Do they not, for instance, still adhere to the cultus of the Virgin, and to the Communion in one kind only? and if so, which party is to make the necessary concession? Perhaps, all things considered, an effort after Christian union a little nearer home would be more commendable. As the Bishop of Bath and Wells said at the Conference in Wales, a week or so ago, "The duty of cultivating brotherly relations with those who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity seems to me to shine out upon our path," and the cultivation of such relationship with Protestant Nonconformists is "a practical course of action" which may be followed "without compromising a single principle." In the face of so many movements antagonistic to Christianity in our very midst, the time surely has come for a practical protest against disunion and division, and there is no need to go to Austria or Germany to find an opportunity for making it.

There are here and there Christians who fail to recognise the possibilities of influential work which God has placed within the reach of everyone, however humble their sphere. But our American sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Comstock, is not one of these, and her records may well put to the blush even some of our hardest workers of the male sex, for within the last thirty years she has visited over 120,000 prisoners, 195,000 sick and wounded soldiers in hospital, and 85,000 persons in workhouses. In the face of such figures, none need be at a loss to know what they, even in their weakness, can do for Jesus.

In grim contrast to the terrible poverty which meets us at every turn, and the depression in nearly all branches of trade, stands forth the fact that during the past year a profit of no less than £40,000 has been made by the Pavilion and Alhambra music-hall companies, the former having cleared £18,000 in ten months. A grave responsibility rests upon those who thus corrupt public morals by degrading the standard of virtue in woman, by holding up to ridicule all honourable family relationships, and by making unfaithfulness a virtue, while they grow rich upon the demoralisation of their fellow-citizens. But the conduct of the Middlesex bench of magistrates in licensing the Empire Theatre, which is within a few yards of both the above-mentioned haunts, for similar purposes, calls for the strongest censure.

Mr. E. W. Thomas, of Euston-road, writes that by united action on the part of the clergy, ministers, and influential laymen living in the vicinity of Holloway-road, a music-hall licence applied for by a publican has been successfully opposed. Memorials were extensively signed, and public meetings held, resulting in the refusal of the licence. Mr. Thomas points out that a publican is bound to exhibit the statutory intention to apply for a licence outside the house for at least two months before the licensing day, and petitions must be sent in fourteen clear days before the meeting of magistrates. Notice must also be served on the applicant at least seven days before the licensing day. Mr. Thomas strongly urges that Christians should be on the alert to detect any proposal to establish these dangerous sources of evil, and band themselves together to prevent the granting of such licences.

THE HIGHBURY SOCIAL GUILD, which has its headquarters at Union Chapel, Islington, although only started last year, has now one hundred and twenty members, and the number is increasing rapidly. Its constitution is simple, the stated object being the providing of pleasant and profitable intercourse.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Moody commences a fortnight's work at Pittsburg, Pa., on November 7.

Nottingham.—Richard Weaver preached at the Tabernacle here on Sunday week; 3000 persons were present, and the message of the veteran evangelist was blessed to many.

At Sion Mills, county Tyrone, a most successful series of evangelistic services was concluded on Sabbath week. The meetings were held in a tent under the auspices of the Irish Evangelisation Society.

Mr. W. E. Bailey is visiting the autumnal fairs in Hampshire and Wiltshire. At the recent Basingstoke fair a number of the wandering merchants were gathered for tea, provided by some Christian ladies in town; addresses were given by Mr. Bailey and other friends.

Mr. J. W. Moodie has concluded a series of Gospel services in connection with the Cedar-street Mission, Glasgow. Large audiences gathered each night to hear his earnest appeals, and numbers remained for conversation at the close of every meeting. In the case of many, hopeful decisions were made.

Convoy, co. Donegal.—A mission has recently been conducted here by Mr. J. M. Simpson, of the Presbyterian College, Belfast. The meetings were attended by members of the various Protestant denominations, night after night, in increasing numbers. There is reason to believe that the earnest proclamation of the Gospel was accompanied by the Divine blessing.

Brimscombe, Gloucestershire.—Largely attended evangelistic services were held here by Mr. W. R. Lane during the first ten days of October. Much earnest prayer for blessing has been graciously answered; the cold-hearted quickened, backsliders reclaimed, and many true and deep conversions to God manifested. Meetings for men were specially blessed, being well attended by working men, several professing Christ.

Mr. Charles Inglis has been holding services in Ireland during the past ten weeks. Each Sunday large numbers have listened to the Gospel from his lips in Dublin, and hardly a service has passed without some precious souls accepting Christ. During the week Mr. Inglis has held meetings twice a day, both in the north and south of Ireland. Many Christians have been greatly refreshed who have attended his Bible lectures, and in the Gospel meetings unsaved ones have come out on the Lord's side.

Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall.—On Sabbath evening last, the second of the series of Services for the People was conducted in the large hall by Dr. H. Grattan Guinness. For the first half-hour the West London Choir sang a number of anthems and sacred songs very sweetly. Dr. Guinness chose for his subject "All sorts and conditions of men," from words in Luke xv. 2, "This Man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them." The address was one of great power, and of a most searching nature, and at the close many acknowledged that they had found the Lord. Will friends make this meeting widely known, and remember it in prayer?

Ashton-under-Lyne.—A fortnight's mission has recently been conducted in the Wesleyan chapel, by Captain Warner Dennis, which has proved the means of much spiritual blessing to the church and town. All the services were well attended. The congregations were in deep sympathy with the work, and many prayed and laboured for the success of the mission. Two special meetings for men only, and one for women only, were held. The closing service, on Friday evening, October 7, was one long to be remembered. The converts were seated in the front pews of the body of the chapel, and words of counsel and encouragement were addressed to them by the evangelist.

Regent's Park.—Our open-air work in the park is now closed for this year. We have had many tokens of blessing, for which we praise God. The work has been difficult, and a spirit of indifference appears to pervade the minds of the great bulk of the pleasure-seekers and idlers who frequent our beautiful park, and, notwithstanding the ability with which the message may be delivered, very few will stand and listen, even for a few moments. The number of meetings, political, secular, and argumentative, held in close proximity unsettle the minds of people, and draw them aside. Kindly permit me to thank our many friends for the parcels of tracts and pamphlets so generously sent, and which I have given away at the park gates. ARTHUR SOLOMON.

REV. F. B. MEYER IN HASTINGS.

"There was great joy in that city" may be truly written of Hastings, where Rev. F. B. Meyer has closed a week's services, in which the saving and consecrating power of God has, in a surpassing manner, gladdened the hearts of his people. This is the natural and glorious outcome of a deep work of quiet preparation, and the culmination of a long-continued inflow of spiritual blessing, with which our Lord has favoured the towns of Hastings, St. Leonards, and their vicinity. In special services, and by the stated ministry of the word, from the lips of men of God in whom the Spirit dwelt and wrought in power, the way of the Lord has been prepared. Prominent among these agencies we may mention the incisive preaching of Rev. C. J. New, the Congregational minister, which is marked by close adherence to the old lines of truth. In addition, this esteemed servant of the Lord Jesus received, some eighteen months since, a very definite and remarkable quickening, which was soon observable in his ministrations, and has since resulted in constant blessing to those who throng his large chapel.

Last November Mr. New was chiefly instrumental in calling together a conference in Hastings, of about one hundred Congregational ministers, for the avowed purpose of waiting upon God for power for service. It lasted three days, and was attended with most precious and lasting results. The evening meetings alone were open to the public. If Christian ministers, in all parts of the land, would thus meet together, with the one purpose of waiting upon God, would not many, who now deplore a weak and barren ministry, find their words become as Samuel's, of which it is said, "None of them fell to the ground." In the early part of the year Mr. New conducted a mission in his church, resulting in the conversion of large numbers of young men and women. The crowded congregations, constant accessions, and numerous testimonies to blessing under the word from his lips show what true success awaits those who amid the "other gospels" of the day, preach the old and only Gospel of substitution.

Besides the stated work of Mr. New and others, Rev. W. Haslam, whose home is in St. Leonards during the summer, has occasionally preached. Another worker of marked faithfulness and success has been Mr. J. Barnabas Bain, the evangelist, whose humble and ardent spirit gives him ready access to those he addresses. In the spring he conducted a mission for women only at the Y.W.C.A., resulting in the conversion of many—not a service being held without evident results. This was followed by another effort, conducted by the same devoted harvester, at the Y.M.C.A., Hastings, which extended to twenty days. Here the blessing also was great, both to the saved and the unsaved. Then Mr. Bain conducted a two weeks' mission on West-hill, in the same town, with like results.

Thus the inflow of spiritual life had long been the order of the day when Mr. Meyer came in response to the united invitation of all the Nonconformist ministers. His name had already become well known in the town through his papers on Jacob and Elijah, which have appeared week by week in these columns, and which have been used for the strengthening of many. So, from the first announcement of his coming, the faith of God's people had claimed and expected great things; and the result has not been disappointing. Never has Hastings been so moved. Never have believers so seen their place of power and privilege. Tradesmen remark how readily people speak upon religious topics. The praises of God fill many mouths.

The main meetings were held at noon for prayer, at three in the afternoon for Christians, and at night for the unsaved. There was an open-air eleven o'clock morning service on the beach; also a young men's meeting at nine o'clock, which proved fruitful. Mr. M two occasions addressed special gatherings of the police. At the various Gospel services very many passed from death unto life.

But the feature of the mission was the afternoon service for believers. The large hall was crowded on each occasion. The silence and rapt attention and eager drinking in of the cooling waters of a full salvation from care, restlessness, and sin, we never saw equalled. On the first afternoon meeting, on Tuesday, the subject was "The Ownership of Christ in the Believer." Many learned then for the first time how completely Christ claims body and soul. The three following days the subjects were respectively: "The Infilling of the Spirit," "Power over Sin," and "The Indwelling Christ." The effect of Mr. Meyer's solemn and searching words baffles description. There was the inward conviction on the part of the gathered throngs that he himself was living in the strong sweet consciousness of that mighty love of Christ he so delighted to uplift. The felt presence of the Spirit of God made the place awful at times. Our brother spoke the words God gave him in a holy hush that quieted all hearts in these eager and riveted audiences. Very many of God's blood-bought ones will lead brighter and holier lives. The writer, among many, can say, "He that is mighty hath done for me great things, and holy is his name." Upon two evenings Mr. Meyer addressed Christians in one of the chapels after the Gospel service on similar topics, these services being arranged for those who could not attend in the afternoon. The Saturday three o'clock meeting was for children, who filled the spacious hall, and whom Mr. Meyer held and interested with rare tact.

The Lord's day was the great day of the feast. The crowded early seven o'clock morning service in the Baptist Chapel in Wellington-square will never be forgotten. At eleven o'clock the Congregational Chapel overflowed, while Mr. Meyer spoke upon the seven words, "Keep yourselves in the love of God." At three o'clock the large pavilion on the pier was packed, the admission being by ticket. It is believed many found the "rest" then dwelt upon; the great gatherings in the same place at night were marked by a solemnity that was oppressive, and to not a few it was the turning-point of their lives. Thus ended these precious services, whose results and whose memory will long rest like a benediction upon this region.

The Nonconformist ministers heartily sustained the meetings. It was observed that large numbers of church people attended. Mr. Bain was an untiring helper throughout. He is to follow with some special services in the new hall. B.

EAST GREENWICH.—Last winter was a hard struggle for scores of families, but this winter already the distress prevailing, even in respectable families, is very great, and augurs sadly for the coming months. Among the sixty to seventy working men, members of my own Bible-classes, the distress is acute, and there is also much sickness. In a few weeks, unless help is timely, I have no hesitation in saying many homes will be reduced to a box or two to serve as tables and chairs, and a mat or some straw for beds. Help in money or cast-off clothing will be gratefully received.

YOUNG MEN IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.—At a recent convention of the Y.M.C. Association of this State some interesting reports were submitted. Wildwood, a lumber region, three years ago had but two praying men in it, and was noted for wickedness. A steam mill hired a bookkeeper who was a member of the Y.M.C.A. The first Sunday he had a meeting in a school-house. The Association now has forty members, holds meetings on Sunday in three school-houses; in the two last years has had 200 conversions; the last year held 179 meetings, and last February organised a church, and the delegate said at the closing service: "I go home feeling the need of more work for my fellow-men, and with this motto, 'Wildwood for Christ.'" This pure mountain breeze invigorated the whole Convention. Mr. Sankey was present and made good use of his consecrated voice.

THE CATACOMBS OF ROME.

On the two past Tuesday evenings Professc De Launay, of Paris, has lectured at Mildma Conference Hall on the Catacombs of Rom These are to be succeeded by other lectures b different speakers on Tuesday evenings durin the winter.

Professor De Launay divided his first lectu into three parts:—(1) What the Catacombs ar (2) The religion of those who dwelt in then (3) The faith, hope, and love of those earl Christians. In the second lecture he dwelt upo the symbolism of the inscriptions on their tomb A large number of new illustrative diagran were exhibited, which greatly interested the lar audience.

Describing a funeral, the speaker said:—"B hold the procession: they go down step by st each holding a palm or olive branch, singing t 116th Psalm:—'I love the Lord because I hath heard my voice and my supplication.. Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death his saints." There is no appearance of gloo The black badge of Paganism is discarded. W should we put on black in memory of those w are washed and made white in the blood of t Lamb? TOTTENHAM.—A large committee representi the various churches in Tottenham have be engaged in making arrangements for a unit mission, to be conducted by Mr. Henry Thor The whole neighbourhood is being thoroug visited, and about 20,000 handbills and 6000 dresses to young men are being distributed. T mission will extend from Oct. 29 to Nov. 7.

LORD AND LADY ABERDEEN on Saturd visited the Lads' Club at Manchester. Lord Ab deen, in the course of a short address, urged boys to cultivate a good, sound, manly tone spirit. Lady Aberdeen, in distributing some pri also addressed the members, and said they dently knew and appreciated the advantages of club, and the difference there was in their li since they joined it. Lord and Lady Aberd visited the Boys' and Girls' Refuge, Strangew and each delivered an address to the children.

OBITUARY.—Many of our readers will with regret of the sudden death in his eighty year of Mr. John Lynn, of Fleet-street, w occurred on Friday evening last. He had atte a meeting at Malden Hall, and on reaching Ha stock-hill station died in a few minutes affection of the heart. Mr. Lynn's house ha many years been the resort of missionaries sojo ing in London, whose visits he always welco and many are the friends in various parts o world who will mourn his loss. WESLEYANS IN THE WEST.

The West London Wesleyan Mission was commenced under the happiest and most encouraging auspices on Friday last.

SERMON BY REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

Up to the last moment it was not definitely known whether, owing to the precarious state of his health, Mr. Spurgeon would be able to fulfil the promise he had made some weeks ago to preach the inaugural sermon; but, though weak and infirm, the popular pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle put in an appearance, and delivered one of his eloquent and masterly discourses. St. James's Hall was well filled.

Mr. Spurgeon selected for his text Jeremiah vi. 16, "Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls." He began his sermon by defining, in one or two sentences, true religion, and then proceeded to show that in proportion as any kind of religion departs from the Gospel of Christ, it also departs from the very pretension of giving rest unto the souls of men. We have about us now plenty of a so-called Christianity, which never gives anybody rest. Are there not many Christian people who never have any rest, who never know they are saved, and who never lay their heads on their pillows at night prepared to say, whether they awake in this world or in the next, "it will make no difference?" Suspect, he exclaimed, that religion which does not give rest unto the soul. In proportion as we are true to our faith we shall have a rest deep, profound, like the "peace of God which passeth all understanding." There is no pillow like rest in Jesus. Rest is enjoyed by believers, but it is never found apart from the Gospel, and from faith in Jesus Christ. There is no rest for the soul anywhere else. Mr. Spurgeon showed that the way of pardon by the Atonement gives rest to the conscience, and that the way of believing in the Word of God as being inspired by God, and as being our authority of God, gives great rest to the understanding. "As for me," he said, "I believe in the infallibility of Holy Scripture. I accept the Word of God as being so inspired that it will never mislead me, and so full that in all points in which I need direction it will rightly guide me. In this I find a very blessed rest to the understanding."

Mr. Spurgeon proved that wonderful rest could be enjoyed by Christians if they trusted their business concerns and family affairs to God, and if they kept in the way of obedience to the law of God. If a man does what God bids him, if he is obedient to God's will, if he suffers in doing that which is right, and stands fast in his integrity, he shall wear that little flower called heartease in his button-hole; he shall be happier than a king, and that little bird called conscience shall sing sweetly to him after his day's labour is finished. At the beginning of this great enterprise, said the preacher, I should like to say to my brethren, that intense and ardent service for Christ brings rest to the soul. One finds a great deal of rest to the soul in the consciousness of being spent in the service of the Master. The way of unbroken communion with Christ is also a way of deep rest unto the soul. Oh! that all Christians were like those simple-minded, humble believers who are always rejoicing in the Lord, always resting in Him, and always praising his name.

The Gospel rest, it was pointed out, should be enjoyed by every real Christian. It is a grievous error that it is not enjoyed by all. The reason why so many Christians do not find rest for their souls is that instead of keeping in the middle of religion, they kept going round the margin of it. The best way of walking to heaven is in the middle of the road. These restless Christians could never find satisfaction until they took a header into religion, diving right into the middle of the stream.

THE FIRST GREAT MEETING.

St. James's Hall was packed with a magnificent audience at seven o'clock; when the chairman (Mr. R. W. Perks) stepped on the platform, followed by the President of the Conference, and a long line of leading ministers of the denomination, the coup d'œil was complete. Mr. Price Hughes gave out a well-known Methodist song—

My heart and voice I raise,
To spread Messiah's praise, which was sung to an equally well-known and majestic air. How these Methodists do sing! The sacred strains rang round the rafters of the hall in a way to stir the most sluggish pulse. Then Rev. Newman Hall offered prayer for a blessing on the future work of the Mission, in words earnest and fervid enough for a true-born Methodist, evoking many responses.

The Chairman struck a somewhat sombre keynote when he said that the great éclat with which the West-end Mission had begun might prove more an element of danger than otherwise. However, he ventured to assert that the work would not suffer for general support so long as it was true to its object. He proceeded to argue that the development in these days of democratic ideas and forces demands that the churches should adapt themselves to the altered condition of things. His remarks were more of a general character than specially applicable to this "new departure" in the West of London. One remark elicited a rousing cheer—that there were present representatives of all the Methodist bodies. This "manifesto" (which would have been really excellent if delivered from the chair to the Conference, but which somewhat remotely bore on the immediate object of the meeting) being ended,

The President of the Conference, Rev. John Walton, addressed the vast assembly. The Conference, he remarked, never put its hand suddenly on any enterprise—a remark which appeared to receive the special assent, in an ironical sense, of Rev. Peter Thompson, of East-end fame. There was a little too much of "Methodism" in the speech, but its gist was to show that the traditional courage and audacity of the early Methodists, from Wesley downwards, is not dead. This great London, he said, with its throbbing life and its startling contrasts, exercises its influence on the cultivated opinion of foreign lands. How important that that influence should be of the right sort. With Peter Thompson in the East, Edward Smith in the Centre, and now these "exquisite twins" Mark Guy Pearse and Hugh Price Hughes in the West, something ought to be done by the Methodist Church to meet the desperate needs of London. The speech was a trifle marred by over allegorising, and by a lack of due recognition of the work of other churches in the neighbourhood.

A popular man in his denomination is Rev. E. E. Jenkins, judging from the cheers which greeted his rising. This, he said, in his deliberate and clear-cut phraseology, is a great and historic occasion, marking the beginning of a new chapter of Methodism. The Master is with us, and therefore we have all the elements of success. The work is not begun a bit too soon. We tread on a thin crust, beneath which there are seething forces, of which we are only reminded when there is a local eruption. Then matters subside as before. We are going to stop saying "Peace, peace," when there is no peace, and we are not going to stay our hands till God speaks peace to the city. Much good has been done in London in past years in many ways, but it is all Christian born. When we think of the woes of London, let us not forget the quiet unobtrusive work that goes on as a counteractive to the prevailing evil. What has atheism done for us in the past? Its record for good is one of barrenness. No hope for London from that source. Socialism has done nothing for us as yet. If remedies are to come for the abuses of property, they must come in the line of the Sermon on the Mount, not by the channels of assassination and confiscation. We must, as Christ commands, go out to the streets and lanes of the city, and invite the people to Him. If they won't come, then we must compel them by the sweet and irresistible compulsion of love. Mr. Jenkins went to the root of the matter. He cited, amid the plaudits of the assembly, an utterance of Mr. Gladstone at the Congregational Institute, in Nottingham, last week, that the Churches must come together more than ever, because it is becoming with them a question of faith or no faith.

Some impressive words followed by Rev. D. J. Waller, Secretary of Conference, as to the needs of London, and the importance of preserving spirituality of life in a church if it would play its part properly in this world. Rev. Thomas Guttery, of the Primitive Methodist Church, mingled his note of congratulation, making very warm reference to the sermon by Mr. Spurgeon. This good Primitive brother made a rousing speech, recalling the early triumphs of Methodism, and thanking God that this work had begun. Piccadilly, he said, needs purifying as well as Seven Dials. Mr. J. E. Clapham said £21,000 had been promised in connection with the Mission, and of that there is unspent £12,000. But they must look ahead, and he believed that Methodism would stand by the effort so that they would not have to relinquish it after a while. From the recent examples of Manchester and Birmingham he argued a like success in London.

A jubilant anthem of praise having been sung by the united choirs, Mr. Price Hughes made a strenuous appeal for money help to meet the necessities of the work. Referring to the fact of the Congregationalists having given the use of Wardour Hall, Soho, Mr. Hughes said that one of the delightful features of the effort was its catholicity. He was pleased that a Baptist preached the inaugural sermon, and he intended to give the Bishop of London an opportunity of preaching to them. He proceeded to announce the contributions received, which ranged from half a crown to the chairman's donation of £1000. Mr. Hughes is a born beggar, and his efforts to extract promises from the audience met with fair success. He said they wanted, at least, £50,000 in order to make a good start, and to secure a suitable meeting-place of their own. He requested that they should be upheld by the prayers of Christians everywhere; that musical friends should volunteer for help in the choir, the brass band, and the orchestra. Stewards and lady helpers are also needed. Mr. Hughes was careful to state that this Mission is not designed to supersede any existing efforts, but to supplement them. The fields are, indeed, white unto harvest, and the labourers are comparatively few.

Rev. M. Guy Pearse read out some promises of help that had been sent to him, and told briefly how he had been led to give himself to this new effort. A few friendly words fell from Rev. F. Hastings, of Tolmers-square, and the concluding prayer was offered by Rev. Arthur Hall, of Craven Chapel.

The Mission, says the Pall Mall Gazette of Monday, is now in full swing. On Sunday morning the first service was conducted at St. James's Hall by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, who dwelt with great feeling upon the social misery of London, and produced a very evident impression upon the large congregation. In the afternoon Rev. Hugh Price Hughes gave an address on the social duties of Christians, in which he strongly urged many of the points emphasised in an interview with him published last week. At night the hall was crowded to excess; there must have been 3000 present, and many hundreds were unable to gain admission. The service was again conducted by Mr. Hughes, who was assisted by Mr. Percy Bunting and Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. There was an after-service, to which at least one thousand persons stayed, and after last night's service there can be no doubt that one more permanent centre of great religious influence has been established in London. It could best be described as resembling the great meetings that Messrs. Moody and Sankey, the American evangelists, held in London three or four years ago.

HOMELESS AND BREADLESS.

DURING the present outburst of speaking and writing on the distress which prevails in the East-end, too little attention has been paid to the organisations that already exist there for the relief of suffering and distress. Like Issaachar, the East-end continually crouches between two burdens—on this side the heavy toil and moil of the day; on the other, the fear of losing it. This autumn that fear has become fact in thousands of families, and the wolf is already over the threshold. Where last year there was competence, there is now necessity; where there was hunger, there is now starvation. Are the families fighting single-handed, or are existing agencies helping in the strife?

A visit paid to Dr. Barnardo's Homes last Monday helps to answer these questions, with special reference, at least, to the children. For twenty-one years the well-known Home, 18 to 26, Stepney causeway, has been to the East-end (though by no means to it alone) a true Salem, a house of peace, especially to the weary feet of the little ones. On Monday their receiving office was crowded with an array of dishevelled looking figures—men, women, and children—waiting to disburden their stories of woe and want. It needed not to go far to be assured of the grim reality of the crisis which has fallen upon this important branch of philanthropic and Christian effort. Never in any corresponding period in the history of the Homes—so ran the testimony of the workers—have so many applications for admission and relief of children been urged, as during the past month or more.

Arrears of no fewer than two hundred and fifty cases, which were primâ facie suitable, were under investigation—a number never before attained. The boys and girls admitted during the previous week amounted to forty-one, and this, in spite of the fact that the line of destitution has been very strictly drawn to cover in every case only actual suffering from lack of the necessaries of life. The personal applications for admission have numbered from seventeen to twenty every day. The close of the fruit and hop-picking seasons was disastrous to hundreds of families, and multitudes of the children who, with their parents, spent the autumn days in fields and gardens, came back to town with no prospect for the dreary winter before them but starvation and "dossing out."

Some of the applicants were in a condition pitiful to the last degree, and their tales of distress were often heartrending. Three children were among those in last week's admission whose mother had lost her situation through lead poisoning, and who was in the last stage of exhaustion when she came to the Causeway. They were pale, anæmic children; but their appearance was easily accounted for when it appeared that for four months the whole family had slept in a w.c.! At last the police had turned them out of this cold shelter, and the mother had applied as her final hope to Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

Another of last week's applications was on behalf of a wizened little girl, by a mother whose age was 48 but who looked at least 60. The pair had tramped about without shelter or regular food for weeks, and appeared extremely dejected and forlorn. The woman had been deserted by her husband years ago. "I always had a room to myself till this year," she said; "I broke down in the spring, and then we took to the lodging-houses, as long as we could; but there's nothing doing, and we've had to tramp the streets—and that's cruel these nights." The applicant had a high character from her last employer. She is now in a dying state. The little girl was admitted.

A little lad of ten was admitted from a tiny room in an alley at Limehouse, where he lived with his father, who was in an advanced stage of consumption. "For nine weeks," said the latter, "we've had nothing but bread and dripping, and not enough of that." His landlord had given him a dinner on four successive Sundays, but with that exception his fare had been as described. He is now in hospital, and it is not expected that he will survive many months.

Such are the too true tales that find a place in the Home registers, and the cry of the suffering children is growing in shrillness and in volume. It is plain that no ordinary crisis is at hand, and unless the great pity of Christian hearts everywhere yearning to help finds in these suffering ones its objects, the demands upon the Homes may reach a "breaking strain." There are two thousand boys and girls in residence; and when, in addition to these, forty new cases per week come for support and help, the demands upon the institutions may be imagined.

Surely in these boding times, when the thin crust of established order shows signs of cracking, Homes like those which have their headquarters at Stepney Causeway should be regarded as social safety-valves, relieving the dreadful tension of hunger and cold. We have not yet sounded the depths of the destitution that prevails; and especially during the absence of Dr. Barnardo, who is at the present time in Canada, these Homes need the prayers and the active help of God's stewards everywhere, to cope with the pressing claims now being made with such urgency.

The Book World.

CHILD'S OWN MAGAZINE for 1887. 1s. 6d. S. S. Union. Those who have enjoyed this little magazine as its numbers came out will welcome the pretty bound volume; those to whom it is new will find it full of interest and instruction, and will be induced to take it in regularly for the future.

MRS. SOMERVILLE AND MARY CARPENTER. By PHYLLIS BROWNE. 1s. Cassell & Co. The lives of two good and useful women well told. This book is sure to interest thoughtful girls, and will, we trust, fire many young hearts with a high ambition to be good, and to do good, to live the life and die the death of the righteous.

THE BOOK OF THE NEW COVENANT. Translated by GRANVILLE PENN. 6s. Elliot Stock. A well-printed edition of a work too long out of print. Scholars will be glad of this fine translation of the most ancient surviving MS., the Codex Vaticanus, and all Bible readers will enjoy comparing it with the Authorised and Revised versions.

PLEASANT PAPERS. By ANCIENT SIMEON. 2s. Sunday School Union. A racy, readable book, full of lessons adapted to every-day life. For youths starting on their career these pleasant papers are specially suitable; they abound in wit and wisdom well and wisely combined, and are lively enough to attract the attention and fascinate the mind of the reader.

THE WEEKLY PULPIT. Vol. ii. 8s. 6d. E. Stock. To hard-worked town ministers and clergy pulpit aids are almost a necessity. In this volume such will find short sermons on manifold subjects, clear and sometimes striking outlines (of sermons), expositions of difficult passages, and copious illustrations. Some of the notes, we regret to observe, have a rationalistic tinge.

HENRY BARNE. Kensit. This memoir of Rev. Henry Barne, late vicar of Faringdon, is written by his widow. At his death the Church lost a staunch defender of the Protestant faith, and his testimony was always bold and faithful on behalf of evangelical truth. There are many incidents in his life which are full of interest and this record will be valued by those who knew him.

THE GOLDEN ALPHABET: a Devotional Commentary on Psalm cxix. Passmore & Alabaster. This book needs no further commendation than the fact that it is from the pen of Mr. Spurgeon. It is mainly composed of extracts from THE TREASURY OF DAVID, and, being of convenient size, will prove of great value to preachers and students, to whom the larger work is inaccessible.

THE FUGITIVES; or, The Tyrant Queen of Madagascar. By R. M. BALLANTYNE. 5s. Nisbet & Co. We have here a detailed and interesting account of the persecutions of the native Christians in Madagascar during the reign of Queen Ranavalona I. Mr. Ballantyne follows these tried witnesses into the forests and caves, where they had to hide from the soldiers. After the death of Queen Ranavalona there was a great stir in Antananarivo; those who had been banished for life, and were supposed to be dead, appeared to greet their rejoicing wives and children. The story is told in Mr. Ballantyne's inimitable style, and should be read by all who are interested in Madagascar.

THE CHURCH AND THE ROMAN EMPIRE, by Rev. A. Carr, M.A.; and THE CHURCH AND THE PURITANS, by H. O. Wakeman, M.A. 2s. 6d. each. Longmans, Green & Co. These very neat and useful handbooks will be of great service to students in familiarising themselves with the periods of Church history, with which they respectively deal. They belong to a series entitled EPOCHS OF CHURCH HISTORY, which deserves a good place amongst theological manuals.

HOW I REACHED THE MASSES. By Rev. C LEACH. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. A record of downright earnest work, the results of which are widely manifest and known. Mr. Leach must be specially qualified for such labours as he describes; indeed if any doubt existed on the point, the twenty lectures delivered to working men, and published in this volume, would sufficiently prove the fact We commend it to our readers as likely to interest them in such movements, and to assist many in their endeavour to adapt themselves to similar efforts.

ST. CHRIS: A STORY OF TO-DAY. By E. VAN SOMMER. 3s. 6d. London Temperance Depôt, 337 Strand. Miss Van Sommer is acquainted with East-end life, and has used her knowledge to good purpose. This book is evidently written with view to furnish a clearer insight into the life of the poor. The characters are well drawn, especially that of Chris, in whom the chief interest of the story centres. The chief value of the book i in showing what gems lie hidden in the mire of sin, and how much can be done for Christ in what many regard as a disappointing field of labour.

A book that will be eagerly read by those interested in the New Guinea Mission is the third of the series of "Missionary Biographies," being issued by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—JAMES CHALMERS, MISSIONARY AND EXPLORER, of Rarotonga and New Guinea. By Mr. WILLIAM ROBSON, of the London Missionary Society. Mr Robson gives us a graphic account of Mr. Chalmers' twenty years' labour in these islands. The book contains many thrilling incidents, descriptive o Mr. Chalmers's adventures amongst the inland cannibal tribes; the frontispiece depicts a savage brandishing his sword above the head of Mr Chalmers, who is standing calmly telling the crowd around him of his mission of peace. The work contains a life-like portrait of Mr. Chalmers, and upwards of sixty illustrations.

THE SOWER AND THE VIRGIN. By Right Hon. Lord R. MONTAGU. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. The author of this portly volume has proved himself a redoubtable champion of the Protestant faith as opposed to Romish error, and in this work he pleads with a force of conviction impossible to gainsay. Dealing with the Papal Dogma of the Immaculate Conception, he shows how contrary to Holy Scripture, as well as to the traditions of the Church in every age, the doctrine is, quoting a long line of Church fathers, reputed saints, popes, cardinals, &c., as witnesses against it. He then shows how the claim of infallibility falls to the ground, in face of the confusion and self-contradiction involved. A mass of valuable Biblical and historical references is accumulated and the whole woven together in masterly style forming a work as interesting and pleasing as it i instructive and serviceable to the cause of truth.

MY SERMON NOTES. Part iv. By C. H. SPURGEON. 2s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster. It would be difficult to speak too highly in praise of this work, containing, as it does, illustrations of all the best elements of Mr. Spurgeon's power as preacher and as a writer. Valuable as aids t preachers, these notes are full of expositor thoughts, and clear statements of Gospel trut adapted to general use; indeed, they are sufficiently full to form a compendious commentary o all the leading points of Bible doctrine. Th author says in the preface that many more simila skeletons lie entombed where these came from, bu that he has no desire to summon them from thei retirement. Many readers will hope that such desire may yet come to him. Further instalment would be heartily welcomed. Copious indices o texts and subjects for the whole work are include in this volume, which embraces Romans to Revel tion.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

HER WILL AND HER WAY, and Other Storie by Mrs. Newman. 2s. 6d. A handsomely go up volume of clever stories, such as might hav been culled from the harmless journals of fictio but with no possible suspicion of any Christia aim in them.—FOXHOLT, and the Light tha Burned there, by Rev. E. N. Hoare. 2s. Suc a thing as change of heart through the power Christ is not even hinted at in this story, which

We call it—"A.1."—because we believe our new Paper will be classed "sea-worthy, sound, and strong." We do not intend to be dull. Touching on topics of interest both to Young Men and Young Women, and definitely spiritual in tone, —"A.1."—has already enlisted the hearty co-operation of a large number of able and well-known authors. Its contents will be varied, weighty, and concise. Numerous and high-class Illustrations. Serial Stories of well-sustained interest. Travel, Adventure, Biography, Science, Art, and Athletics.

We have also arranged for special Series of Papers on British Industries; Photography; Marine Zoology; the Laws of Health; Teaching in Technical Schools; Household Management, &c. Some terse and timely Talks.

Pegs and Points for Sunday School Teachers. Crisp Correspondence, a special feature. Numerous Competitions with Money Prizes. The fact that Our Own Gazette, also edited by Mrs. Stephen Menzies, has already reached a circulation of 104 thousand a month, bespeaks for this new Journal a warm reception.

ASTHMA, CHRONIC BRONCHITIS, ETC."

SIXPENCE (Post Free), or Large Edition (cloth), 1s. 3d., from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E., and Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The Twenty-second Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing, from August to October.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN" WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

REMARKABLE CASES OF MR. AND MRS. A——, OF EMSWORTH,

Who were patients of mine in succession, and who have derived wonderful benefit from my treatment. For special reasons they have asked me not to publish their names, but with that exception to use any of their letters and to refer to their cases as I please. The correspondence extended over two and a half years, or more, involving between thirty and forty letters on each side.

Mrs. A—— applied to me three years ago. She was then in a sad state of nervous debility, having a constant discharge of matter and blood from the throat, with almost every symptom attending a case of decline. "Having read the great results from your treatment (she writes), I am induced to place my case with confidence into your hands." She also tells me that the doctor had declared her lungs diseased, and had said to her husband that she might as well throw her money into the street as spend it on medicine. Nevertheless, much to his surprise, she recovered under my treatment, which was persevered in for some ten or twelve months. Since then she has given birth to a child, which her doctor has spoken of as one of the healthiest babies he has known. "I am deeply thankful (she writes), by the blessing of God on your priceless medicine, I have got so well."

In February last year Mrs. A—— writes for her husband. For six months his health had seemed failing. Then pleurisy followed in the right lung, and his case became critical—cough, retching shiverings, then burning pains in the chest, want of sleep, weakness. "He is brought down very low (Mrs. A——writes); he says he cannot live long in such a state."

In March she writes:—"I am truly thankful to say my husband is much better, and all his symptoms are relieved."

"In April she reported:—"Everybody says what a great change for the better has taken place."

He continued some months longer under my treatment and recovered.

I have had a letter from Mrs. A—— recently. She says—"My husband is keeping well. He is better than for many years. I am glad also to say that I also now have my health better than for years. May God spare you to bring such joy into many a home."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

an exceedingly well-written one, with some vigorous touches of nature, especially in the character "Dick."—Rex, by the Author of "A Hero-Poet." 1s. 6d. A book for ambitious boys. Anyone wanting to make his boy a sailor, could not do better than put this plotless little story into his hands.—Was He a Fool? by Julia Goddard. 1s. A splendid little tale of truth and heroism. Suitable for Sunday-school reward, village libraries, &c. A healthy incentive to pluck.—Two of Them, by the Author of "Mike, and his Brother Ben." 6d. A story, whose backbone is morality without Christ. It is summed up in the words of its hero. "I think everything comes right after a time, if one tries to do right."

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

The Tract Magazine for 1887 (1s. 6d.). This publication keeps up its tone well, and will continue to do so while such men as Revs. S. Goodall, P. B. Power, and others, contribute to its pages. This volume is full of choice pieces, anecdotes, essays, Bible-readings, and poetry.—Short Biographies for the People. By Various Writers. Vol. iv. These short sketches of the lives of great and good men of our own and other lands will, it is to be hoped, remind many that they may make their lives sublime. The portraits add to the value of the volume.—Sunday Afternoons at Rose Cottage. By E. M. Waterworth. 1s. 6d. Talks with the little ones on great subjects such as "faith," "humility," "contentment," &c., in which the truths of the Bible are brought home in simple words to infant minds and hearts.—Brook and River. By Ellen Louisa Davis. 2s. 6d. A tale for girls showing by a somewhat too graphic description the evils of deception and flirtation. We should be sorry to put this book into the hands of a simple-hearted young maiden, though it is evidently written with a good purpose, and portrays some good as well as bad characters.—The Glory of the Sea. 2s. 6d. By Darley Dale, with illustrations by Charles Whymper, and a table of the principle British shells. This volume is a truly valuable addition to juvenile scientific literature. A pretty story runs through the book and lures the young readers on, while a whole mine of information is contained in its pages worthy of careful study. It would be a capital book for a prize or Christmas present.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION.

The annual volume of Young England (5s.) is a storehouse of wholesome reading, containing amusement, instruction, and recreation. It will make a good companion for young readers during the winter evenings, and will help to cheer many a dull hour.—The Child's Own Poetry Book, by Horace G. Groser. 1s. 6d. The verses are pretty and simple, and the book is profusely illustrated, and it is bound in a very attractive cover.—Frank Lister, by Miss H. Brooks, and Guy, by Miss L. J. Tomlinson (1s. each) are well-told stories of city life, very suitable for Sunday-school libraries.—"Little Nell and Me," by Meta, and Broken Legs but Sound Hearts, by Benjamin Clarke, are good children's books, and wonderfully cheap. The latter is suitable for the more advanced juniors; it gives interesting sketches of the lives of two earnest workers for God, John Falk and Michael Feneberg, "whose legs were broken, but whose hearts were sound."—The "Bright Star" Series (3d. each) are bound to please the little ones; the attractive pictures on the covers will be sure to tempt them to look inside, where they will find bright stories that will both amuse and instruct them.—Keena Karmody, by Eliza Kerr. 2s. A healthy story of a life blighted by an unscrupulous friend, yet made beautiful by the Holy Spirit. Forgiveness and patience win the selfish Marie, who in the end gives herself to God. "Mervyn's Meed," the second story in the book, is not so pleasant in tone.—Sandy: or, The Mystery of the Box, by Lucretia Maybury. 2s. An improbable story of a poor waif who becomes a solicitor, and marries his patron's daughter. The "Mystery" is a letter from his mother, exhorting him to a life in Christ; and the box containing it was to be given to him when he reached the age of twenty-one. "The New Year Waifs," in the same volume, is a good story.—The Allens of Netley Manor, by Rev. Robert Tuck, B.A. 1s. 6d. This is supposed to be a story of Christian life and labour in a country village; it is a plea for the village and the hamlet, that the sympathy of the Churches may be awakened to send encouragement to those who are battling single-handed in the cause of Christ, with the tide often against them, in these out-of-the-way corners of the vineyard.—The Broken Fence, by Meta. 1s. An old-fashioned little story of country life, showing how the poor help the poor, and how sorrow can soften the heart when the grace of God is behind it.—Kate's Ordeal, by Emma Leslie. 9d. This is a tale which we can most heartily recommend to mistresses of households, and employers of female labour, as being calculated to point to the highest principles, and to trust in Christ, those in their service.—Thady D'Arcy; or, Them that Honour Me I will Honour, by Selina D'Ammast. 9d. A spirited, well-written picture of pleasant Irish life. Thady is a credit to his country, and we wish young Ireland of to-day could be led into that which made Rev. Thaddeus D'Arcy a "comfort and consolation wherever he went." The little story is cleverly and devoutly written.—We heartily commend The International Daily Text Book for 1888 (4d.) to Sunday-school teachers and others who are studying the International Lesson.

S. W. PARTRIDGE & CO.

A packet of books which will be greeted with shouts of pleasure by the inmates of the nursery has reached us from this old-established house. The Mother's Picture Alphabet, is full of soft engravings. The print is clear; the verses and prose passages are good; and all combined will make the first step in the road to learning easy for the little feet.—Pretty Pictures for Tiny Pets. This book leads the little ones a step farther, and will doubtless charm the happy possessors of such a budget, containing much that is droll and pretty as well as good.—Our Picture Book, by D. J. D. Illustrated by Barnes, Harrison Weir, and others. Full of beautiful pictures, each illustrating nice verses, telling some anecdote or piece of useful information.—Pets Abroad, by D. J. D., is also useful and attractive, giving, as its title indicates, glimpses of foreign peoples and their customs. It is well written and beautifully illustrated.—Bible Pictures and Stories, by James Weston. Scripture stories and parables told in a way to interest very young readers, while the pictures will give them a good idea of Eastern scenes.—Stories and Pictures of Birds, Beasts, Fishes, and Other Creatures, by James Weston. Illustrated by J. Gronelli, W. Rainey, Harrison Weir, and others. Truly Mr. Weston has opened the gates of fairy-land for his young readers in this lovely little book. The wonders of nature are sketched with great skill both by pen and pencil. All the foregoing are published at 1s. and 2s. each.

The Fireside Almanack has a text for each day of the year, and contains, in small space, some interesting information on various topics such as temperance, missions, &c.

The Bible Searching Almanack (1d. Shaw & Co.) embodies an excellent idea—that of giving a motto phrase for each day, leaving the student to discover the textual reference. We are glad to know that it is having a large circulation; it certainly deserves it.

The Christian Million Almanack for 1888 (4, Ludgate-circus-buildings, E.C.), issued in pamphlet form, 32 pages, is a cheap pennyworth. It contains portraits and sketches of a number of eminent men, with extracts from their writings, besides a budget of other useful information.

How to Write English, by A. A. Reade (1s. J. Marshall & Co.) is a most excellent little treatise, on a subject of universal importance. It contains much sound advice bearing on the different aspects of the literary art. Beginners will find it invaluable, and even experienced writers may gather helpful hints.

Students of phonography may gain many valuable hints from a little book, Verbatim Reporting, by Oliver McEwan, Principal of the London College of Shorthand, 15, Warwick-court, Holborn, W.C. The essentials of success in note-taking are descanted on, and useful notes furnished on the Manual of Phonography. (1s. 6d.)

The Christmas and New Year's cards entitled "Winter Scenes" and "Bright Rays," published by Mr. R. J. Masters, 327, Vauxhall-bridge-road, S.W., are very tastefully designed and printed in good clear type on superior card, with carefully chosen texts. They are issued in separate packets (1s. each) for Christmas and the New Year.

Bird Stories, Old and New, told in Picture and Prose. By Harrison Weir. 2s. 6d. Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. When we see Harrison Weir's name we expect to be charmed, and this fascinating little book will disappoint no one. The pictures are exquisite, and the stories delightful. Old and young alike will enjoy them.

We have received an advance copy of the new illustrated weekly, "A 1," edited by Mrs. Menzies, of Liverpool. The contents of this issue, it need hardly be said, are thoroughly bright, varied, and interesting; though we find nothing of such supreme excellence as to sustain the somewhat high-flown title. The illustrations are good, and there is an ample proportion of narrative. Prizes are offered for various kinds of literary contributions. We wish the new venture all success, and trust it may help to displace some of the unwholesome literature of the day.

PAMPHLETS RECEIVED.

A New Packet of the "Something for Sunday" Series, by Catharine Shaw. 1s.—Go and tell Jesus; A Word to Christians; Songs in the Night, by Rev. Octavius Winslow, D.D. 1s. each.

Appeals.

Fox and Knot Schools and Mission.—We are hampered very seriously by a debt of nearly £150, and although our income, with effort and care, sufficiently meets our annual expenditure, we find it impossible to do anything from our ordinary resources to reduce this liability. James Judd, treasurer; John Stabb, hon. sec., 42, Charterhouse-street, West Smithfield, E.C.

Dublin City Mission.—This Society employs men, truly Christian, to read the Bible amongst the people, with prayer and conversation. There are about one hundred families visited daily. Mothers' and children's meetings are held weekly, besides Gospel and prayer-meetings. Funds are greatly needed to employ more agents. Donations received by Mr. T. P. Law, Q.C., 48, Stephen-green, Dublin.

AMERICAN STUDENTS.—The three Scotch professors—Professor Henry Drummond, Professor A. R. Simpson, and Professor Greenfield—have met with the heartiest of receptions in their recent visits to colleges in the United States. They have had many opportunities of witnessing for the truth, to the rising intellects of America, and of rehearsing the good work among students in their native land. These interchanges of thought and testimony must have a beneficial influence on the future of both countries.

MANSFIELD COLLEGE, OXFORD.—A most interesting meeting was held last Sunday evening in connection with this college, to bid farewell to Mr. F. P. Joseland, who is about to leave for China. It ought surely to be regarded as an auspicious circumstance that the first of the students to leave the new college, leaves it for work in foreign fields. The meeting was presided over by Dr. Legge, who gave a short and interesting account of his own labours in China, adding a few words of advice to the young missionary.

WEST NORWOOD.—Mr. Woodford Fawcett writes:—In your issue of October 7 you refer to the new Conference Hall recently erected in connection with the Servants' Institute, West Norwood. In your report, however, there is a serious mistake. It is printed that the cost of the Hall is £6230, whereas it was only £300. It is a small, comfortable hall seating 250 people. You will be glad to know that although services have only been conducted four Sundays, thirty persons have professed conversion. There is also a good work going on among the girls in the Institute. There is yet £100 due to the builder.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 30.—ISAIAH LXVI.

The first chapter of Isaiah contained a denunciation of Jewish ceremonialism (i. 11, &c.) The last chapter now returns to the same theme. "The speech of the first martyr (Stephen) reached its highest point in the quotation of this verse."—S.C.

2.—All those things have been.—Better in R.V. "came to be." "'All these' refer as if pointing with the finger to the world of visible objects that surrounds us, and recalling the oft-repeated creative 'and it came to be' ('and it was so,' A.V.) of Gen. i."—Delitzsch.

3.—He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man.—"Each ceremonial sacrifice is here identified with some kindred act most impure and hateful under the Levitical code."—Birks. They have chosen their own ways.—Israel could not be said to have chosen the Levitical law at Sinai, for it was clearly imposed upon them; so that this passage seems to contemplate some period in the Gospel dispensation when, instead of accepting God's sacrifice for sin, they go back to the discarded ritualism of a by-gone dispensation. This has been the sin of Antichrist all through the present dispensation ("he shall think to change times and laws," Dan. vii. 25), and will probably be accentuated at the end, possibly in connection with a restoration of Jewish ritualism. "These verses, by their context, seem clearly to predict a re-building of their Temple by restored Jews in the last days, with a revival of animal sacrifices, and of the Pharisaism of earlier times. This revival of blind Jewish zeal will be the preface to Israel's last and sorest hour of trouble (Jer. xxx. 7; Dan. xii. 1)."—Birks.

6.—A voice of noise from the city.—"This verse answers closely to Zech. xii. 3—6, xiv. 3, announcing an appearance of the Lord in a time of Gentile apostasy, and of sore distress to Israel, already in part restored, to accomplish the long-delayed redemption of Zion."

8.—Shall a nation be born at once?—"The man-child here is 'the righteous nation keeping the truth' (xxvi. 2), redeemed Israel, born to a new and manly faith in the true Messiah through bitterest sorrow for their own and their fathers' unbelief."—Birks. The "man-child" here is not to be confounded with that of Rev. xii. 5, where the reference to Ps. ii. 9, and the being caught up to the throne of God, seem to point to Christ Himself.

17.—They that sanctify themselves ...behind one in the midst.—"Perhaps a leader in idolatrous ceremonies."—S.C.

19.—And I will set a sign among them.—"Some think that the final ingathering may be preceded by a miraculous manifestation of Christ which shall be to Israel nationally what the vision near Damascus was to Saul."—S.C. Compare Matt. xxiv. 30, "The sign of the Son of man in heaven."

MONDAY, OCTOBER 31.—JEREMIAH I.

2.—In the days of Josiah...in the thirteenth year of his reign.—This would be about B.C. 628, or seventy years after the death of Isaiah, reckoned from the first year of Manasseh (B.C. 698).

3.—It came also in the days of Jehoiakim.—"The whole period is no less than forty years and six months. Few prophets were God's witnesses for so long a period, and under such trying circumstances as Jeremiah."—S.C.

5.—Before I formed thee...I knew thee.—"The Hebrew verb 'to know,' is not merely 'foreknowledge,' but something more."—S.C. It would be more correct to say that the "foreknowledge" of the New Testament follows this deeper meaning of the Hebrew, and is more than merely knowing beforehand. Here it is parallel to "sanctifying" (i.e., setting apart), and "ordaining."

6.—I cannot speak: for I am a child.—Isaiah on a similar occasion was oppressed with a sense of guilt (vi. 5), and therefore a coal from the sacrificial altar touched his lips to assure him that "his iniquity was taken away." Jeremiah is more oppressed with a sense of his weakness and insufficiency; therefore the Lord's hand (emblem of Divine power) touches his lips, and ment used of God to speak his word, and is "set over nations and kingdoms to root out, pull down, and destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant." There are four words of destruction, and but two of restoration, and so the message is chiefly of evil.

11.—A rod of an almond tree.—The Hebrew for "almond" signifies "to be awake," as it is the first tree that wakes up in spring after the sleep of winter.

12.—I will hasten.—Rather, as in R.V., "I watch over my word to perform it." The Hebrew is, "I am awake over my word."

14.—Out of the north an evil shall break forth.—"All armies marching from the Euphrates towards Palestine entered the land from the north."—Keil.

TUESDAY, NOV. 1.—JEREMIAH II.

8.—The priests said not, Where is the Lord?—Invoking his presence and power, as Elisha did with such success (2 Kings ii. 14). "They that handle the law" is another name for the priests, for this was their function (Mal. ii. 7). "Pastors" (or "shepherds," Heb.) means in the Old Testament "kings" or "rulers" (R.V.). So that the three chief classes in Israel—priests, kings, and prophets, are here charged with causing Israel's ruin.

14.—Is Israel a...home-born slave?—"If so, he is a member of Jehovah's family, and may expect kindness and protection."—S.C.

18.—The waters of Sihor.—"'Sihor' means black, turbid, hence a name for the Nile, from its muddy and turbid waters."—Gesenius.

21.—The degenerate plant.—"'Branches,' not 'plant.' The stock which was God's planting was genuine; the wonder was how such a stock could produce shoots of a different kind."—S.C.

31.—We are lords.—Most critics render it "we rove about." R.V. translates it, "we are broken loose."

35.—I will plead with Thee, because Thou sayest, I have not sinned.—"Or, 'I will enter into judgment with thee.' The verb is one that expresses the act of the judge."—S.C. To refuse to take the sinner's place and plead for mercy, compels God to take the judge's place, and pronounce judgment.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 2.—JEREMIAH III.

1.—Yet return again to Me, saith the Lord.—The Jewish Authorities, as well as the Syriac and Vulgate Versions, confirm this translation. But most modern commentators take it as a question, "Dost thou return unto Me?" R.V. agrees with A.V. in text, but puts the question in margin. The best proof that A.V. is right is to observe the repetition of the same word "return" in ver. 12, 14, and 22. Mark especially ver. 14, "Return (R.V.), O backsliding children, saith the Lord; for I am married unto you." This completely disposes of the objection that, as the Lord refers to the marriage law (Deut. xxiv. 4), which forbids the return of the unfaithful wife, therefore He could not Himself bid Israel return. But God's "mercy rejoiceth over judgment."

12.—Go and proclaim these words toward the North.—"To the ten tribes who had been settled by Shalmanezer in the northern provinces of the Assyrian empire."—S.C.

14.—One of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion.—"The fulfilment of the promise began with the return to Palestine of scattered members of the ten tribes, after the Babylonian exile, but is complete only in Christianity."—Dean Payne Smith.

16.—Neither shall that be done any more.—R.V. margin is better, "Neither shall it be made any more." There is no mention of an ark to be made in Ezekiel's Temple.

19.—I said, Thou shalt call Me, My Father; and shalt not turn away from Me.—"After such proofs of a Father's love, God expected that Israel would, by a true cleaving to Him, show some return of filial affection."—Keil.

THURSDAY, NOV. 3.—JEREMIAH IV.

2.—And the nations shall bless themselves in Him.—Gentile conversion to God is made consequent on Israel's truly turning to Him.

3.—Sow not among thorns.—Comp. Matt. xiii. 7. "As the husbandman prepares the ground by clearing it of weeds, and exposing it to the must repentance be regarded as a serious and important matter, requiring forethought and anxious labour."—Dean Payne Smith.

4.—Circumcise yourselves to the Lord.—Those addressed were circumcised, so far as the outward and visible sign went, but they are addressed as still needing circumcision of heart. See Rom. ii. 28, 29.

7.—The lion is come up from his thicket.—An anticipation of Dan. vii., where the Babylonian Empire is represented by a lion.

14.—Wash thine heart from wickedness.—An echo of Isaiah i. 16.

23.—I beheld the earth.—Better "the land," the same word is so translated v. 27. Without form, and void. —See Gen. i. 2. "The land has returned to a state of chaos, it is mere nothingness and emptiness."—S.C.

31.—My soul is wearied because of murderers.—Better in R.V., "My soul fainteth before the murderers." "The prophet hears in spirit the agonised cry of the daughter of Zion, who beseechingly stretches out her hands for help, and falls exhausted under the assassin's strokes."—Keil.

FRIDAY, NOV. 4.—JEREMIAH V.

1.—If ye can find a man.—The Lord would have spared Sodom if ten righteous men had been found (Gen. xviii. 32); but He would have spared Jerusalem if but one such could be found. The result shows the truth of "There is none righteous, no not one" (Rom. iii. 10).

10.—Take away her battlements; for they are not the Lord's.—As the Lord here disowns the battlements of Jerusalem, so does He, later on, own the armies of Rome which destroyed Jerusalem, as if they had been his, "He sent forth his armies, and...burned up their city" (Matt. xxii. 7).

12.—They have belied the Lord, and said, It is not He.—"What the Jews denied was that the troubles which were coming upon their land were in any especial sense God's doing. The prophets asserted the contrary."—S.C.

15.—A nation upon you from far, O house of Israel.—"Israel is not put here for the ten tribes, but for the whole house of Jacob, of which Judah was now the representative. Josiah even exercised a sort of sovereignty over the remnant of the Israelites" (2 Chron. xxxiv. 9).—S.C. The reference to Deut. xxviii. 49 is clear. If asked what the nation is, the best answer is that the fulfilment of the prophecy began with the Babylonian empire, but lasts through the four great phases of Gentile power revealed in Dan. vii., in the last of which we are now. "Babylon the Great" is more than a spiritual designation of Rome (Rev. xvii.), it marks also the last phase of the great Gentile power which began in literal Babylon.

SATURDAY, NOV. 5.—JEREMIAH VI.

"Jeremiah now proceeds to unveil the judgment impending upon Jerusalem, and describes the arrival of the invading army, the siege and capture of Jerusalem, and justifies her overthrow and the severity of God's sentence by showing the stubborn persistence of the nation in sin."—S.C.

8.—Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem.—"The Hebrew is much stronger 'Be thou chastised'; learn the lesson which chastisement is intended to teach thee."—S.C.

10.—Their ear is uncircumcised.—"The ear is thus spoken of only in this place and in Acts vii. 51, but the metaphor is elsewhere used of the lips, and constantly of the heart."—S.C.

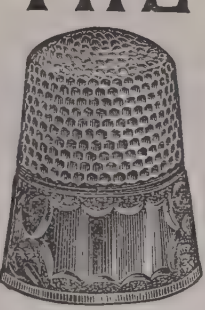
THE "DORCAS" THIMBLE.

(Horner's Patent.)

STERLING SILVER.



2s. 6d.

The Queen, May 8th, says:—"The 'Dorcas' Thimble is more durable than the generality of these indispensable work-table implements; it is made in three parts, the inner and the outer being Silver, and the intermediate Steel; forming a resisting power not obtained in silver only. What is more uncomfortable than sewing with a thimble that has seen service to such an extent that it has holes in its sides? With the 'Dorcas' Thimble this annoyance vanishes."

FROM ALL JEWELLERS.

If you cannot obtain it near you, send a wax impression of the open end of old Thimble to show the size, to

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The autumnal conference of the Church Association is to be held at Manchester, November 2, 3, and 4.

Of the thirty-four English Bishops twenty-one are non-smokers. Some of them never have been, and some have given up the habit.

Canon Burbidge, of St. Michael-in-the-Hamlet, Toxteth-park, Liverpool, has commenced an interesting course of Wednesday evening lectures on the "Pilgrim's Progress."

In the course of a sermon at St. Philip's Church, Southport, recently, the Bishop of Liverpool stated that during his seven years' episcopate no fewer than twenty churches have been consecrated in his diocese.

The Bishop of Exeter, speaking at a diocesan conference, expressed the hope that ere long a Bill would be introduced for the compulsory retirement of incompetent clergymen, whatever position they held in Church.

The Church Home Mission (Rev. Dr. Gritton, secretary, Sidcup, Kent) sends missionary preachers to any part of the country where a group of parishes can be arranged by a local honorary secretary. Evangelical clergymen — faithful preachers of the Gospel—are urgently needed in the circuits of the Mission.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Thomas Brown, of the Free Dean Church, Edinburgh, recently celebrated his ministerial Jubilee.

The Presbyterian and Congregational Churches in Japan have agreed upon a plan of union by which they become one Church.

At a conference on evangelistic work in Edinburgh, ystematic work right through the year by all the hurches was strongly urged.

A cheering account of the colportage work being done n connection with the Irish Mission was submitted at he last sitting of the Dublin Presbytery.

Dr. Black, of Inverness, and Sheriff Cowan, of Paisley, closed on Monday last a week of evangelistic meetings in Dr. J. J. Bonar's church at Greenock.

The Pan-Presbyterian Council in London, will be held n Exeter Hall, and is fixed to commence on July 3, 888. The meetings will extend over about ten days.

Rev. A. F. Forrest, of Renfield-street United Presbyterian Church, Glasgow, commences on Sunday next a eries of monthly lectures to young men on "The Young Man in his Relationships."

An important addition has been made in connection with Dr. Edmond's mission in Hoxton by the formation f an institute, to consist in the meantime of reading- oom, games-room, gymnasium, and Bible-class.

Rev. J. M. Miller, of Leicester, has commenced, at he close of the usual service, a series of special ectures for working men. The series last winter was ery successful, the church being uniformly crowded to he door.

The branch of the White Cross Army connected with t. Cuthbert's, Edinburgh, has now 193 members. At s annual meeting Mr. Dawson, of St. Thomas's Epis- opal Church, declared that those who regarded such a ociety as unnecessary could know very little of what as going on around them.

The Sabbath Observance Committee of the English ynod has issued an important circular to the ministers nd elders of the Church, which calls for information as the state of Sabbath observance in the various locali- es, and invites suggestions as to the best methods of oping with Sabbath desecration.

The London Presbytery had a Conference last week n Evangelisation. Dr. Edmond read a paper on the eed of a fuller spiritual life in the Churches as a pre- de to evangelistic work. In the after discussion it as suggested that special services should be held in ery centre at least once a year.

Rev. H. L. Mackenzie, who has been at home on rlough, returns to Swatow next month. Mr. Mac- enzie was ordained to service in the mission field in 60, and now goes out to China for the fourth time. ev. Donald MacIver, missionary to the Hak-kas, is so returning to China after furlough.

The Women's Missionary Association of the English resbyterian Church have appointed Miss Bessie onn, late of Swatow, who has been forbidden to turn to China on account of the state of her health, to dress meetings at home, with a view of exciting eper interest in the work of the Association through- t the Church.

The congregation of St. John's, Kensington, are king thought for the many Scottish servants in that trict. A registry has been opened. The church anagement are desirous of opening a Home where rvants might live when out of situations, and where asses might be held, but the plan is in abeyance for nt of funds.

Aldenham-street Institute, Goldington-crescent, one the many admirable institutions connected with egent-square Church, opened for the winter session on turday last. The departments of the institute are asses, reading-room, recreation-room, gymnasium, ket, football, harriers', and swimming club, and gious guilds.

We regret to hear that Rev. Dr. Stewart, of Leghorn ee Church of Scotland), who in March last attained ministerial jubilee, has been suddenly stricken down th paralysis. Dr. Stewart has had considerable influ- e in promoting the cause of the Waldensian Church taly, and also in connection with the introduction of Bible into Rome.

A collection in aid of the funds of the College will be en in all the congregations of the English Presby- n Church on Sunday, November 20. Dr. Dykes that congregations will need to contribute about a dred pounds more than they did last year, if income d expenditure are to be balanced with certainty, and College buildings and furnishings are to be uately maintained.

SALVATION ARMY.

Mrs. Booth-Clibborn, Paris, has been laid low with scarlet fever, which appears to have exhausted itself, leaving behind diphtheria, from which she is still suffering.

Marshal Ballington Booth writes from New York:—"We can truly say there has been this summer devotion here that will equal any under the world-wide blood-and-fire flag."

The work at Uxbridge is going well forward; men who before the Army came to Uxbridge were going at full speed down the broad road, cursing, fighting, and drinking away their precious lifetime, are now found sitting at the feet of Jesus.

Writing in The War Cry Mr. Railton says:—"As materials for making soldiers I have never seen the Dutch surpassed. No sooner are they saved than they stand up to face the most unbelieving crowd with a testimony of the most positive and glorious kind."

Staff-captain Chuckerbutty, a native Indian, has been on a two months' visit to Sweden. When he went he was a complete stranger to the Swedish language. After the first month he began to understand the ordinary words used in conversation, and, before the second month was run out, he was able to address meetings in Swedish.

Two interesting cases of conversion recently occurred in Stockholm. One, a Russian lady who was staying in Stockholm heard that an Englishman was to speak, and, understanding a little English, decided to go and hear, and at an open-air meeting she found Christ. The other is an actress; she has travelled America over, and now returned to her home, where God met her and saved her.

Staff-captain Cooke, describing a Saturday night amongst the London slums, says:—"Nearly every public-house was full, and, strange to say, the majority of the drinkers were women. It was a horrible sight to see the numbers of girls, mothers, young and old, besides boys from fifteen to nineteen years of age, all drinking, and using, in many cases, the most obscene language to one another. The poor babies learn early to sip the cursed gin and beer from their mothers' glasses, and so, naturally, they are growing up devoid almost of every true spark of the image of God."

METHODIST.

An excellent work is carried on amongst the masses of Liverpool by the Richmond Hall Mission, which has branches in several districts.

The Wesleyan chapel opened but a short time back in Willoughby-road, Finsbury Park, is so successful that it has already been enlarged by the addition of transepts.

A series of "pleasant evenings for the people" have been commenced in connection with the Clerkenwell Wesleyan Mission, and will be continued every Monday evening during the winter, free.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, preaching at Newcastle-on-Tyne on Friday week, said there is a deal of religion in the world, but it is not Christ's religion unless it cares for men's bodies as well as for their souls.

At a Primitive Methodist district convention held at Tunstall to consider the state of the work of God, it was decided to establish a prayer union, to take in the thirty-two circuits of the Tunstall District.

At the annual meeting of the Second London District, held at Great Queen-street Chapel on Thursday week, Dr. J. H. Rigg stated that in fifteen years the membership of the district has been nearly trebled.

Two new missionaries have recently sailed in connection with the Wesleyan Missionary Society—Rev. E. Webster, of Richmond College, to Manargudi, South India, and Rev. Richard Wormwell, to the Bahamas.

A twelve days' successful mission has been conducted in Tavistock Chapel by Rev. Edward Davidson. One of the vestries was turned into a nursery, in which ladies took charge of the babies that the mothers might attend the services.

Captain Warner Dennis has offered himself for work in connection with the West Central Mission. Mr. Hughes hopes that others will be able to imitate the example of Captain Dennis, and give their services gratuitously to the Mission.

An interesting meeting was held at Chester on Friday, October 14, in connection with the departure of about twenty Wesleyan soldiers to India. Much kindly counsel was given by Rev. W. Oldfield, Mr. John Davies, and Miss Maltby, whose interest in the soldiers is unremitting.

The autumnal meeting of the Manchester District (U.M. Free Churches) was held at Great Harwood. The reports of the representatives showed the circuits to be in a healthy state. In many instances arrangements have been made for special mission services for the winter.

A gracious revival has broken out at Grove-road Church, Wakefield, during a twelve days' mission, conducted by Rev. H. Smith, of Ashton. Seventy persons professed to find peace through believing, many of them being scholars of the Sunday-school. The church has also been mightily quickened.

"Children's Day" was celebrated in a large number of Methodist Churches on Sunday week. At the City-road Chapel a special service, at which 150 children were present, was held on the previous afternoon, when a good impression was produced, and on Sunday afternoon over fifty decided for Christ.

Highgate Wesleyan Chapel has an energetic mission-hall in a poverty-stricken neighbourhood (Vorley-road, Upper Holloway). The tract society in connection with this chapel is the largest in North London, its members numbering twenty-five ladies and gentlemen, visiting over six hundred families weekly.

News has been received of the death from fever, on July 18, after a few hours' illness, of Mrs. C. L. Davenport, M.D., one of Bishop Taylor's party at Dondo, West Africa. Writing on July 9, from Sadikabanza, twenty miles inland from Vivi, Bishop Taylor says all of the party travelling with him into the interior were in excellent health, and impatient to settle down to their work.

BAPTIST

Dr. Culross has to a great extent recovered from his recent illness, and though still weak is steadily regaining his accustomed vigour.

The Sunday-school in connection with Surrey-lane Chapel, Battersea, which recently celebrated its nineteenth anniversary, is doing a good work amongst the poor children of this neighbourhood.

A farewell meeting was recently held at Boston to bid farewell to sixteen missionaries going to India and Burmah under the auspices of the American Baptist Missionary Union. Eleven of these go to Burmah, and the rest to India. Most of the party go out for the first time, and are accompanied by three native assistants who have spent some months in the United States.

At the autumnal meetings of the Essex Baptist Union held at Leytonstone, there was a discussion on the subject of "How far Christianity and Politics overlap, and the consequent Duty of Christians." The general feeling was that while politics, as such, should be excluded from the pulpit, all Christians should be careful to exercise the rights and duties of citizenship in the cause of righteousness and peace.

CONGREGATIONAL.

We are sorry to learn that Mr. Benjamin Clarke, editor of The Sunday-school Chronicle, is seriously indisposed.

Lady Aberdeen recently laid the foundation stone of a new mission hall in connection with Millseat Church at Broadmuir, King Edward, Aberdeenshire.

In Hull, Fish-street and Hope-street Churches have joined together to hold an eight days' mission, to be conducted by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes.

Rev. Charles Leach has conducted a series of well-attended evangelistic services, in connection with the Centenary and High-street Churches, Lancaster.

Any friends of the late Rev. G. M. Murphy who have letters written by him, which would aid in the compilation of a memoir of his life and work, are requested to lend them to his sister, Mrs. Taylor, 157, Railton-road, Herne Hill, London, S.E.

A course of lectures on Free Church subjects has been arranged for during the winter months at Victoria-road Chapel, Wandsworth-road. Dr. Eustace Conder, of Leeds, will commence with one on "The Spirit of Puritanism," on November 8.

The handsome block of buildings just completed in Finchley-road, N.W., for Hackney College, was opened on Wednesday week. On Sunday last services were held in connection with the opening of the College, in Lyndhurst-road Congregational Church, Hampstead.

As a result of recent services at Wormley Chapel, one of the mission stations of Cheshunt College, fifteen persons have accepted Christ as their Saviour. Several others of these stations are showing an awakened spiritual activity, due to the personal visitation and to the earnest work of the students.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The directors of the Presbyterian Orphan Society have just added seventy families, including 192 children, to the roll of the Society.

Several meetings were held last week throughout Ulster in aid of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews.

A Home, in connection with the Presbyterian Orphan Society, where girls will be trained as domestic servants, is now in the course of erection at Belfast.

The Presbyterians of Dublin have opened several day schools of late, and have obtained access for the purpose of religious instruction into existing schools.

Rev. J. W. Whigham, ex-Moderator of the General Assembly, has been appointed to the important position of a seat on the National Board of Education, rendered vacant by the resignation of Rev. Dr. Morrell.

A successful series of mission services were conducted in the Methodist Church, Enniskillen, last week, by Rev. Charles Inwood, Conference evangelist. There was a large attendance, and much good is believed to have been done.

The death is announced of Rev. James Hughes, Methodist minister, of Warrenpoint. Deceased was brother-in-law to Sir William McArthur, of London, and was in the 86th year of his age, and 57th of his ministry. He was greatly respected by those who knew him.

The annual meeting of the Belfast branch of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society has been held, and the report, which was of a most encouraging character, stated that the agents of the Society had reached in the Port of Belfast a very large number of sailors during the year.

Evangelistic services were conducted last week by Mr. J. Townsend Trench, in the New Methodist Church, Mountpottinger, Belfast; and similar services were conducted in Sandy-row Methodist Church, by Mr. John Brandon, of Canada. In each case there were large congregations, and several were led to decision for Christ.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. William Powell, a well-known Welsh divine, and a popular and powerful preacher.—Rev. Richard Horsfield, for many years pastor of Byron-street Baptist Chapel, Leeds.—Mr. Frederick Piggin, a prominent member of the Methodist New Connexion Society at Stapleford.—Mr. John S. Pethybridge, a class leader, circuit steward, local preacher, and superintendent of the Sunday-school at Bodmin.—Mrs. R. C. Murray, of the Canadian Presbyterian Mission, Indore, Central India.—Mr. William Inglis, an active worker of the U.P. church at Newington, Edinburgh.—Mr. Alex. Greig, for forty years deacon at South-street Baptist Chapel, Perth.—Mr. William Flint, for thirty years an elder of the U.P. Church at Ayr.—Mrs. William Bonner, of the Scottish United Presbyterian Mission, Deoli, Rajpootana, India.—Mr. Richard Lewis Morris, at Bloemfontein, South Africa.—Mr. F. S. Warren, Secretary of the Association for promoting the Unity of Christendom — Bishop Frederick Newman, D.D., of the Free Church of England.

HOME.

Archdeacon Farrar offers £100 reward for proof of any case in which "drunkenness has been cured without total abstinence."

In "Indigestion and Biliousness," a new work by Dr. Fothergill, London, the relation of drink to dyspepsia is effectively treated.

Mr. G. F. Cook has held a successful fortnight's mission in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, London.

Mr. William Forbes held meetings last week at Sharnbrook, Beds., and at Lee, Kent. On Saturday he began a six days' mission at Clevedon, Somerset.

In the current number of The Medical Temperance Journal Mr. R. F. Sinclair shows cause against the prevalent practice of administering alcohol in cases of typhoid fever.

The Manchester Women's Temperance Union intend to hold drawing-room meetings during the winter, and have engaged for the work a lady experienced in American temperance methods.

The Central Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, is still the scene of unflagging temperance work. The Sunday services have secured many to religion, who, during the previous week, have signed the pledge.

At the Central Hall, Manchester, the Gospel temperance meetings are continued every Saturday night with great spirit and success. The pledge-takers are well followed up, and many have been converted.

In the London hospitals, generally, the use of milk has largely increased, and, except at St. George's, the use of alcohol has largely decreased. With the decrease in the use of alcohol there has been a lower death-rate.

In Norwich, with a population of 90,000, there is one public-house to every 130 people; one baker's shop to every 650 people; one butcher's shop to every 1000 people. It is estimated that about £100 a day was given for God's service, but £1200 a day, according to the excise returns, was spent on intoxicating drink.

At a special meeting of the Burton Town Council a letter was read from the Lord Chancellor, submitting the names of fifteen gentlemen proposed to be appointed to constitute a borough bench of magistrates. The list includes eight persons connected with the brewing industry, among them being Mr. George Allsopp, M.P., and Mr. Henry Wardle, M.P.

At the annual meeting of the Church of Ireland Protestant Temperance Society in Dublin, last week, Rev. Lewen B. Weldon said, with all due deference to Her Majesty the Queen, he wished she would find out a more suitable way of honouring the memory of the late Prince Consort than that of sending her sons and sons-in-law to the top of a Highland mountain in order to drink raw whisky. An annual Highland gathering used to be held at Braemar, but this year it was held at Balmoral. It was his lot to be present at the festival this year, which was held in the very presence of Her Majesty, and a more disgusting scene of revolting drunkenness he never saw in his life.

FOREIGN.

The French authorities in Tonquin are endeavouring to secure a share of the Chinese opium trade.

Mr. Powderly, head of the American Order of Knights of Labour, says he has little hope for working men, until they come to see the folly and evil of the drink system.

Mrs. Helen Campbell, in one of her interesting and valuable articles in The New York Tribune on the occupations of the poor, gives a lamentable picture of the health and morality of tobacco workers in New York tenement houses.

A fact stated in The Boston Traveller should be carefully pondered by young men. It says, "Out of twenty young men who competed for a West Point Cadetship, at Westfield, Mass., ten were rejected by the Physician 'because they had the tobacco heart' brought on by cigarette smoking. They were unfit for service."

The Hon. John B. Finch, of Evanston, Ill., chairman of the National Committee of the Prohibition party, died on Monday, October 3. Since the death of John B. Gough, Mr. Finch has been regarded as the foremost temperance orator in the country, and has been constantly employed in lecturing on this subject and Prohibition for several years.

Rev. Herbert Geldart, a missionary in Africa, says that throughout its eastern regions strong drink is being imported by millions of gallons, but he believes that it comes not from England, but from Germany. He tells of a firm at Zanzibar which had got a ship's cargo of so-called gin which they sold for 1s. a bottle, having purchased it at home for 2d.

MRS. JOHNSON, 26, Ulster-place, Regent's-park, N.W., writes to The Methodist Times, with reference to the large number of young men and women constantly coming to London to take situations in large business establishments, and who too frequently drift into careless habits with regard to church membership:—"If a line is sent to me notifying the arrival of any such, I will undertake that they shall be looked after, cordially welcomed, and made happily at home in this busy London world."

THE VILLAGE EVANGELISTIC MISSION, instituted by Rev. T. Champness, which has been so remarkably successful in the agricultural parts of England, is to be extended to the villages of Africa. Two evangelists trained in Mr. Champness's Home at Rochdale are, with the sanction of the senior secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, to be attached to the Zulu mission under the charge of Rev. Samuel E. Rowe. They are to sail immediately, with only an emigrant's outfit and a

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY 12,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity. Hundreds of poor men have been gathered in, and their need supplied, while scores have been turned away, for want of room, in the most destitute condition.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; or Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the EDITORS OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

THE DESTITUTE POOR.

From The Standard, Oct: 20, 1887.

ONE piece of evidence which attests the distress existing amongst the very poorest classes of the community at the present time is furnished by the number of persons—men, women, and children—who are to be found nightly sleeping, or trying to sleep, in the open air. They congregate under railway arches, upon the open staircases of industrial dwellings, in the recesses of the bridges, in sheltered doorways, and, indeed, wherever there is a chance of their being allowed to remain undisturbed. The majority of these forlorn outcasts, however, seem to concentrate themselves in Covent-garden, Trafalgar-square, and on the Thames Embankment, and at each of these places they collect in scores, and even hundreds, to huddle together and impart to each other what warmth they may. Such a spectacle as may be seen nightly in Trafalgar-square is, indeed, saddening in the extreme. Usually the poor creatures begin to assemble and take up their quarters about half-past eleven, long before the tide of West-end traffic has appreciably slackened; but the police during the past two or three nights have kept the place clear until after midnight, and there has, consequently, not been a general muster for some time subsequent to that. The people lie about in all directions, some reposing upon pieces of old sacking and covering themselves with newspapers or tattered blankets; others, not possessing even these mockeries for protection against the weather, simply lie down on the bare flags and shiver the long hours away. The police are extremely kind to them—that they all acknowledge—but necessarily the kindness is of that negative kind which consists in non-interference, supplemented by recommendations to seek the refuge of the casual ward. During the last three weeks more than one agency—and notably the London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission—have interested themselves in these waifs and strays of humanity, and have taken steps towards alleviating in some degree their misery. In some instances charity has taken the form of a distribution of bread and hot coffee, and the conveyance of a number of the children to various refuges. But the plan chiefly adopted is that of going round the places where the people congregate, and offering them tickets, each of which entitles the holder to a free admission for one night to any of the ten or a dozen lodging-houses named on the back. Mr. John James Jones, the Director of the Samaritan Society, and his assistants, are in this way distributing from a hundred and fifty to two hundred tickets every night in Covent-garden, Trafalgar-square, and on the Thames Embankment, and, in an unpretentious fashion, the Society thus manages to alleviate a great deal of suffering. Beyond the offer of a night's lodging the Society cannot go. They cannot give food, even of the simplest kind, having no funds for the purpose. The work that is now being carried on is paid for entirely by special donations, and when we mention that during the past three weeks over two thousand persons have been given a night's lodging at a total cost of no more than twenty pounds, it will be seen at once how cheaply the work is done, and how efficiently the smallest contributions may help. Most of the people who receive the tickets for the first time are disappointed to find that they are not to be fed as well as lodged, but they are all the same generally thankful for the small mercy which at present it is possible to offer them. Not that they are in this respect quite uncared for. The costermongers of Whitecross-street, for instance, hard pushed as they generally are to make a living, last week collected amongst themselves the sum of three pounds, and this was spent in the purchase of sixty gallons of tea and coffee, and several hundred rations of bread and cheese, which were distributed in Trafalgar-square during the small hours of Tuesday morning to a ravenously eager but perfectly orderly crowd of between four and five hundred destitute persons, who formed in queue beneath the balustrade, and were marshalled along to the east side of the Square, where the distribution took place. It was very evident from the manner in which most of the poor people devoured their portions that they were in a condition little short of starvation, and the kindly costers who made the distribution were careful to give an extra quantity of bread and cheese to those whose appearance denoted the direst extremity of poverty. Some there were who certainly did not seem to be in very urgent want, but, indeed, very much the reverse. No applicant, however, was refused, and the generosity of these humble benefactors of their poorer fellows was enhanced by the kindly and unostentatious way in which the act of charity was performed.

The lodging-houses to which the recipients of the London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission's tickets are sent are to be found by hundreds all over London, some of them so small as scarcely to accommodate a dozen inmates, others, like those in Great Peter-street, Westminster, being built specially for the purpose, and having sleeping room for from two to three hundred people. Even in these temporary abodes there are degrees of poverty. A person who has no more than twopence must be content to pass the night on bare benches in a great room, cheered only by roaring fires. A little higher in the scale are the dormitories, admission to which costs threepence and fourpence, and the fortunate possessor of fivepence or sixpence may have the privilege of sharing a room with only three other occupants. In most of these places there is a kitchen, where the lodgers may cook any article of food they may have bought outside, and a plentiful supply of water enables those who so desire to gratify their cleanly instincts. Forbidding and gloomy these lodging-houses certainly are, but the sanitary inspectors of the various districts keep a pretty sharp eye upon them, and oblige the proprietors to comply with the regulations. Such as they are, they are—except the workhouse, to which so many refuse to go—the only refuge for such outcasts as those of whom we have spoken: and inasmuch as so large an amount of good can be done at so small a cost, the Societies which use these lodging-houses as the means for temporarily relieving distress certainly deserve special support in this branch of their work. One fact may be mentioned in conclusion, and it is that the police speak warmly of this system of distributing tickets as a means not only of helping the people, but of clearing the places where they mostly congregate.

AS a religious teacher and an expositor of Holy Writ, Dr. Saphir holds an honourable place among living preachers. He is sometimes seen and heard on the public platform, but the pulpit is his great throne of influence. His Hebrew extraction and cast of mind, coupled with special training, and peculiar lingual facility, have fitted him for the vôle which he has filled and is filling so well. His many books, which are all of an expository character, have been virtually shaped in the first instance as sermons from the pulpit.

Dr. SAPHIR is a native of Hungary, and is now fifty-six years of age. Like Paul, he is a Hebrew of the Hebrews; but, also like Paul, though earlier in life, the truth about Jesus Christ as the Messiah of God was revealed to him; so that the types and shadows of the Old Testament were merged in Christ the Great Fulfiller, as the streaks of dawn lose themselves in the effulgence of the risen sun. The human instrument of his conversion was the late Dr. Schwartz, of the Continental Mission of the Established Church of Scotland. This good man could little have imagined, as he led the boy Jew to the feet of the Saviour, what yeoman service he had rendered to the Christian Church. Resolving to devote himself to the ministry of the Word, the young convert entered on his studies at Berlin, and afterwards at Glasgow, where he graduated. Thence he proceeded to the Divinity Hall of the Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh. Having completed his course, he was ordained to the pastorate in 1854, being then only twenty-three years of age.

For two years he laboured in the Gospel among Germans in Hamburg and Glasgow, showing them from the Scriptures that Jesus is the Christ, and that they need not look for another. It was at this early period of his ministerial career that he began to employ pen as well as voice in the service of his Master. A series of tracts written in German, and intended to influence the Jewish mind, was written and published. These tracts have been translated into English, Dutch, Hebrew, and the Jewish-German dialect, and have been extensively circulated. They struck the same national keynote as we find thirty years later in the writings of another illustrious convert from Judaism to Christianity, Rabinowitz. Who can say how far these tracts of Saphir may have moulded the causes that resulted in the Rabinowitz Reformation?

(From Photograph by Mr. T. Rodyer, St. Andrews.)

At the end of two years Mr. Saphir accepted a call to a Presbyterian Church in South Shields. After a useful ministry there extending over five years, he removed to the London suburb of Greenwich, where, in the pulpit of St. Mark's Presbyterian Church, he ministered in word and doctrine for the space of twelve years.

His pastoral work here, as in subsequent spheres of service, can scarcely be measured by ordinary standards. He drew together a congregation, ever growing in numbers, but quite peculiar in its composition. His unique gifts in the way of unfolding the sacred oracles attracted earnest Bible students from far and near. Dr. Saphir has a very high conception of the functions of those who preside over Christian assemblies. We recollect once hearing him say that the early Christians did not come together for worship, but for the study of the Word of God. The time had come when, in the words of Christ Himself, "neither in this mountain nor in that" need men come together to worship God. That could be done as acceptably at home, or by the way, as in the public assembly. But for mutual exhortation and encouragement, in the opening up of the revealed will of God in Christ (especially in those early days when the Christian Church was struggling through its infancy), the assembly was of vast importance. Acting on this central idea, Dr. Saphir has ever magnified his office as a well-instructed scribe, set for the defence and exposition of the truth. At Greenwich, to these large and highly intellectual congregations, he delivered discourses which have since been given to the world in the volumes entitled "The Lord's Prayer," "Christ and the Scriptures," "Lectures on the Hebrews," &c.

As an indication of the charm that is exercised on many thoughtful minds by this kind of preaching, we may say that the church at Greenwich had to be twice enlarged during Dr. Saphir's ministry. The congregation included many persons of wealth as well as mental vigour, and the sums contributed for good objects, chiefly for the Presbyterian Mission in China, were very large. It was no dry and barren exegesis that characterised the preaching at St. Mark's, but the living truth was brought to bear on living souls, and the fruit thereof was seen in practical efforts for the extension of Christ's kingdom at home and abroad. A mission in a poor and needy part of Greenwich was carried on and flourished under Dr. Saphir's stimulating ministry.

At the end of twelve years he left Greenwich to undertake the founding of a Presbyterian congregation in the populous district of Notting-hill. Here, again, he was eminently successful in gathering the people to hear the lively oracles expounded. Here, too, the impelling power of sacred truth, applied to the heart, was seen. No less than £35,000 was raised by the Notting-hill congregation, in the course of seven years, for various missionary and other good objects. Failing health compelled Dr. Saphir to relinquish his post here, and for a season he took complete rest. Somewhat strangely, he was pressed to accept the partial pastorate of the church at Halkin-street, Belgrave-square, previously presided over by Dr. Sinclair Paterson, who now fills his former pulpit at Notting-hill. An assistant pastor relieves Dr. Saphir of much of the routine duty, and his share in the public service of the church is confined to the preaching of the Sunday morning sermon. Here he continues to bring forth out of the Scriptures things new and old, to a goodly company of Bible students.

The worth of such a ministry is not to be measured by mere numbers, but by the outgoing and wide ramifications of its influence through those who come within its scope. It is a ministry, too, that is of overwhelming importance in these days of shifting and uncertain belief. Those who go to Belgrave Church may reckon on being stablished in the faith—not, indeed, by the mere iteration of hard and fast dogma, but by a comprehensive comparison of Scripture with Scripture, and by closely compacted argument based on fulness and breadth of critical research. Dr. Saphir has an ample acquaintance both with the constructive and destructive theology of the day; but he prefers rather to expound the Scriptures than to defend them, and in this we think he shows the truest wisdom.

As we have already stated, Dr. Saphir has influenced his generation as much by his books as by the living voice. He has been much encouraged by hearing from time to time of striking instances of spiritual result from the reading of his books by persons widely scattered over the earth. As a notable example, we may cite the case of the late Dr. Fleming Stevenson, of Dublin; in the biographical sketch prefixed to the latest edition of "Praying and Working," there is a warm acknowledgment of the spiritual stimulus he received from the writings and friendship of the subject of our sketch. Besides the books we have mentioned, Dr. Saphir has published many valuable expository works, not the least useful being that entitled "Conversion." In succeeding columns we reproduce a striking passage from "Christ and the Scriptures."

THE BOOK AND THE PERSON.*

By Rev. ADOLPH SAPHIR, D.D.

"In the volume of the Book it is written of Me." Martin Luther asks, "What Book and what Person?" "There is only one Book," is his reply—"Scripture; and only one Person—Jesus Christ."

There subsists an essential and vital connection between the eternal Word of God, who in the fulness of time was made flesh and dwelt among us, revealing the Father and bringing salvation, even eternal life, to the sinful children of men, and that written Word which testifies of Him, of his person and work, of his sufferings and glory. It is impossible for us to understand the nature of Scripture unless we view it in relation to the Son of God, the Messiah of Israel, the Redeemer of God's people; for He is the centre and kernel of the inspired record.

The Book lives amongst us—old, but not antiquated; venerable on account of its age; powerful in never-failing youth and vigour. The echo of David's voice is still heard in the chambers of meditation and prayer; the counsel of Solomon's wisdom and experience is still aiding the wanderer in the complicated paths of life; young Timothy is still taught from his very childhood out of these hallowed pages; the Apostle Paul, according to the wisdom given unto him, is still unfolding to us the whole counsel of God; whilst the beloved disciple, in fulfilment of the Lord's prediction, still tarries with us, and lifts us up, as on eagles' wings, to adore the eternal Son, and to wait for his return.

The Person, the blessed Jesus, is a living One in the midst of us. It is a striking peculiarity of our age, that the attention of thoughtful minds is so pre-eminently fixed on one point, and this the central one. It is the centre of the world's history, the centre of the life of the Church, the centre of all questions which agitate the consciences and hearts of immortal men, as it is the centre of the Divine counsels. What else can I mean but the history of Jesus Christ on earth? In no age have there been so many attempts made to construct, so to speak, the history of Jesus. In no age has the cry been raised from so many quarters, "Ecce Homo!"—Behold the Man! Is it that there is a growing consciousness among men, that He was "Wonderful," that never man spake like Him, and that the influence He exerted on the world is something that is mysterious and unique?

Nor need we be astonished at the strange misconceptions and grievous errors into which men fall, who are trying to understand Jesus as they understand other historical men. For the name of Jesus is "Pele," Wonderful, Enigma. His person, his character, his life, cannot be explained by the ordinary rules. They refuse to be classified under the ordinary categories. He is the Great Miracle, the Eternal in Time, God and Man. He is not even in his humanity intelligible, except on the territory of revelation, or to speak more distinctly, on Jewish ground. From the Jewish Scriptures we must learn what is meant by his being the Son of David and the Son of Abraham; what the words "Son of Man" imply, and the word "Anointed," "Messiah," of whom Moses and the prophets spake. For the history of Jesus does not begin with his birth in Bethlehem. The first verse of Matthew sums up the Old Testament history; nor can the sequel of the Gospels, Epistles, and Apocalypse be understood without it. His goings forth are from of old. He who understands not the election of Abram, the exodus of Israel, the Angel of Jehovah, the types of the Tabernacle, the High Priest, and the Sacrifices, the meaning of the shepherd-king, the son of Jesse, and of the sure mercies of David, must find insuperable difficulties in the life of Christ. All attempts to understand Jesus Christ, separate from the Old Testament, are most unphilosophical, and can tend to no satisfactory result. For Jesus Christ is the fulfilment of Moses and the prophets. He is not the Christ of history, but of a special history — the Divine history of Israel. True, He is the Light of the World, He is the Desire of all Nations, He is the Centre and Life of Humanity; but He is all this because He is the Son of David, the Son of Abraham, for salvation is of the Jews. The Gospel narrative is like a high tableland, but we cannot be spared the ascent from Genesis to Malachi.

When the beauty of Christ's character, and the simplicity and depth of his teaching, attract men's minds, they flatter themselves that Jesus is the efflorescence of humanity, that history has produced Him, that nature is glorified in Him. But salvation is of the Lord. Jesus is above all, because He is from above. He came in the fulness of time, and belonged to Israel; the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob is the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. When Jesus quotes the Scriptures, this does not merely prove to us that He regarded them as authority and truth, but it reveals to us the organic, vital, and necessary connection between the Christ and the Nation; and if there are any who are not able clearly to understand the meaning of his life and the secret of his mission, to whom his death appears as a mysterious problem, and who walk in doubt and gloom even now that the Church testifies of Him continually that He lives above for us, that He lives on earth in us—in no other way can they be brought into the clear and full light than as the disciples on their way to Emmaus. Beginning at Moses and all the prophets, the risen Jesus expounded to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself.

It appears like reasoning in a circle when we say we receive the Bible because of Christ, and we receive Christ through the Bible. But the difficulty disappears when we view Jesus Christ in connection with the nation of Israel, and with God's dealings towards them, as recorded in Scripture; and then we see that there is a nation different from all nations—the Jews—chosen by God that He may reveal Himself to and through them; there is a Man different from all men, the Lord from heaven, Jesus the Son of David, the Son of God, Messiah of Israel, and Head of the Church; and there is a Book different from all other books, the record of God's dealings with Israel, culminating in the manifestation of that Redeemer whose goings forth are from of old, even from everlasting. The difficulty disappears when we remember, secondly, that the same Spirit of God convinces us of the supremacy of Christ and of the supremacy of Scripture.

* From CHRIST AND THE SCRIPTURES. Morgan & S

And, accordingly, we find that as the hearts of men are attracted by Jesus Christ, as the only Prophet, Priest, and King, their minds are filled with reverence and love for the Scripture. The Reformation is based upon the two principles—Christ only, Christ above all; and the Scriptures only, the Bible above all human authority.* Luther found peace for his troubled conscience in Jesus as the Righteousness of God. And because Jesus had become all in all to him, he laid such stress on the Bible, where he had found Jesus. It was Jesus who riveted his heart, and it was Jesus on whose account and in whom he felt, as he expressed it, wedded to the Bible.

For higher than the Bible is—not reason, not the Church, not the Christian consciousness, but—the Holy Ghost, who reveals Christ in the written Word, so that it becomes to us, what it truly is, the Word of God, the voice of the Beloved.

CHURCH FELLOWSHIP.

By Rev. W. LANDELS, D.D., Edinburgh.

(Concluded from last week.)

In the early days of the Church, when she best fulfilled her mission, no earthly distinctions were allowed to interfere with the intercourse of her members. Anyone who reads the Acts can see that in the Church at Jerusalem there was no haughty holding aloof from intercourse with a Christian brother because of his poverty. And what a sad falling off it is even from the manifestation of fellowship there given when the intercourse of Christians is regulated by miserable worldly distinctions! Think of a wealthy office-bearer, who unites with a poor brother in observing that ordinance which is the communion of the body and blood of Christ, and gives him a cordial welcome into the Christian brotherhood; and who, when that poor brother puts forth his hand in friendly greeting, haughtily draws himself up and refuses the proffered hand, and intimates, if not in words yet in manner which cuts that poor brother to the quick, that such familiarity cannot be allowed. Or who meets with a fellow-member, say on a public highway or a railway platform, or any other place where proud worldlings are present, and either does not deign to notice, or vouchsafes to him only the slightest nod of recognition; but goes off and enters into close and familiar conversation with a Godless, worldly man of his own social status. In the one case there is equality of social position, and that is deemed a sufficient ground for friendly intercourse: in the other there is only the partnership of brethren in Christ, and that, of course, is no sufficient reason for his laying aside his haughty reserve as free converse requires! How, in such case, can we help concluding that his social position is more important in his estimation than his relation to Christ, and to those who are his? One wonders how the Lord looks on such conduct in the members of his body—whether it is pleasing to Him to see those who belong to the family of God holding aloof from all social intercourse with their own brethren, and associating on familiar and friendly terms with those who are children of the devil and enemies of God.

Where church fellowship exists and is recognised, these wretched worldly distinctions are doomed to disappear. The bond which unites the Church is not equality of rank, or station, or property, but common Christianity. It is not a society of wealthy men, or fashionable men, or influential men, or respectable men, but of men who love Christ and are faithful to Him. That we have been made partakers of a Divine life—that we are possessed of a character which is more to be prized than earthly distinctions—that we are allied to the King of kings—that we are the heirs of a heavenly inheritance,—that is the bond that unites us. Between the members of such a society exclusiveness is out of place. What are our earthly distinctions compared with the bond which makes us one? And shall we introduce the haughtiness and distance of the world into the house of God? Is that our love for our poor brother? Remember, it is only in his church relations he can forget the disadvantages of his poverty. Everything in the world reminds him painfully of these. All our social customs are of such a nature as to make him feel of how little consideration is the man who happens to be poor. Their influence is so depressing to one in his position, that mental debasement is the natural result of poverty. He sees constantly around him those with whom he can never hope to associate on a footing of equality. His hard hand may not clasp, in friendly greeting, the jewelled fingers which toil has never stained. If he would speak to the rich, he must do so hat in hand, and be satisfied with the most curt or patronising reply. Only in his church relations can he hope to escape such humbling distinctions. There, and there only, may he stand up with modest dignity, a man among men, a child of God among God's children, forgetting his social inferiority in his spiritual status, knowing that in the sight of God prince and peasant are one, recognising but one Master, even Christ, and greeting all as brethren. And shall we invade with our worldly exclusiveness that last asylum of the poor—the one refuge where he may escape from the persecution of poverty?

Let worldly customs be maintained in the world if it must be so—let the rich man treat his poor brother as if he belonged to an inferior race—let wealth be made the standard of respectability by a mammon-worshipping generation—let the rich be flattered and the poor despised and trampled on—we look for nothing better there; but mar not the fellowship of saints by such base distinctions. Such a spirit should have no place among the disciples of Christ. Partakers of the same spiritual life, there should be no restraint in the intercourse of rich and poor, but each should associate with the other freely, as if they felt themselves linked together by the closest and strongest ties—remembering that rich One who became poor on their account, and sacrificed Himself that He might ransom them both, and who to all his followers hath said, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

northern churches there is a dim and partial recognition of the fact that one expression of the fellowship is the rendering of temporal help when required. It was evidently so understood in the Jerusalem Church in her early days, and the understanding was magnificently manifested in the community of goods to which we have already referred. In that community, however, we can see no countenance given to the modern socialism which seeks to secure by legal enactment equality of position. The right of every man to retain or dispose of his own as he saw meet was recognised even in Jerusalem; and the Apostolic writings testify to the existence of master and servant, rich and poor. The community of goods was not enforced by legislative authority, and did not imply any man's right to appropriate to his own use whatever he deemed his proper share. The rights of the individual were not transferred to other individuals. But the Church took the place of the original proprietor, and by its appointed agents distribution was made to every man as, in their judgment, he had need. Nor did the termination of this thing necessarily imply a decrease of spiritual life. It might be accounted for by experience and reflection, not restraining indeed, yet regulating their exuberant generosity.

Without any cooling of their mutual love they might discover methods by which it would be more wisely and beneficially expressed. While believing that everything should be held for the common good, and the ministration thereof conducted on principles by which the common good would be best promoted, circumstances might arise which showed that the common good was not best promoted by all sharing alike. ...To insist on this, however, is practically needless. The Church is not much disposed to practise a Utopian liberality; and there is still much more need that her desire for possession should be regulated than her tendency to distribution restrained.

Accordingly, it needs to be said that while church fellowship does not require a community of goods, it does mean that Christians are not to hold their possessions and use them for their own gratification merely, but for the good of their brethren. Whatever they have they hold in trust for great ends, and He who has committed to them the stewardship will call them to account for the manner in which its duties are discharged, and will not give his approval when the property which belongs to Him has been spent in selfish gratification, while his members are allowed to be in want. For "whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"

But it is not in gifts only that the partnership of Christians may be shown. The Christian of means and position has many opportunities of rendering help to his fellows, and is bound to use those opportunities in doing good to all men, especially to those who are of the household of faith. Help may be rendered sometimes by introducing to a situation or providing one for those who are out of employment; sometimes by a timely advance to those who are struggling with difficulties; sometimes by giving a part of his orders to those who are just commencing business, and have still their connection to form. In manifold ways it may be done, such as will present themselves readily the welfare of his brethren as their fellowship with him requires that he should.

* The historical, Jewish, prophetic, character of Scripture was not clearly apprehended by the

We have but touched the edge of a vast subject. And now we have only to say, in conclusion, that what is necessary to our realising what church fellowship means, and the removal of all hindrances to its manifestation, is our living in greater nearness to our living Lord, and thus imbibing more of his Spirit. In proportion as the life of the Head shall fill and actuate all the members of the body, in that proportion shall we realise and make manifest our oneness with each other. There may not be exact agreement of thought on all questions; for even fulness of spiritual life does not destroy our individuality. Our fellowship implies no monotonous order. It leads not to any dead level of uniformity, but acts with the freedom which is life's characteristic, and develops into harmonious variety; just as the life in nature runs out into grass, and flower, and tree; and makes neither blade of grass, nor flower petal, nor tree leaf, exactly the counterpart of its neighbour; and yet amid all the variety preserves the unity of life. Diversity in unity—such is the order of spiritual life.

Among those who are so closely related, how appropriate is the Apostle's appeal and exhortation: "If there be therefore any comfort in Christ, if any consolation of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any tender mercies and compassions, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be of the same mind, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind; doing nothing through faction or through vain-glory, but in lowliness of mind each counting the other better than himself; not looking each of you to his own things, but each of you also to the things of others. Have this mind in you which was also in Christ Jesus."

THE "DOWN-GRADE" AGITATION.

No. III.

It would seem from some writers that the difference between the old theology and the new is very slight, while others assert it to be very great. The Christian World has thus summarised the opinions of some eminent Congregational ministers as given in The Congregational Review:—

> Rev. J. C. Harrison thinks that the vast majority of the ministers are quietly preaching the old Gospel with unwavering faithfulness.
> Dr. Reynolds, of Cheshunt College, says that the history of theology is "one constant protest of new thought and new language against the old thought and old language." He considers that there is no evidence of any change in the attitude of Congregationalists to the "veritable Deity of the Son of God," and other cardinal doctrines.
>
> Dr. Allon's impression is that "fundamental evangelical faiths" are "more widely and firmly held than ever they were." But, as a Free Churchman, he does not hold that the creeds of the fourth or of the sixteenth century are ultimate forms of theological thought; and he has a constant fear of an over-insistence upon the conceptions and methods in which he was cradled.
> Rev. H. Arnold Thomas's opinion is that Christianity has never been preached with greater sympathy, discernment, and fulness than at the present time, and he sees no reason at all to suppose that ministers care less to understand, or to declare to men, what is essential and characteristic in the Gospel of Christ.
> Dr. Hannay frankly admits that the type of doctrine which underlies Mr. Spurgeon's own preaching is not held by the greater number of Congregational ministers, but, taking the ministry as a whole, he believes, without reserve, that it holds essential spiritual facts and doctrines in the grasp of an intelligent and masculine faith.
>
> Dr. Mackennal does not think the churches and ministers have largely departed from the evangelical faith, but that the relative place occupied is altered. Life in Christ is now the note of that sentiment as distinctly as justification through Christ was. The heart of the denomination, he believes, is sound.
> Rev. Eric A. Lawrence, of Halifax, thinks that ministers are departing from the evangelical faith, as the term has been appropriated by the ultra-orthodox school of religious thought, whose right to it he disputes. But they "emphatically and increasingly" preach Christ as God manifest in the flesh, as the living Friend and Saviour of man, as the "one foundation," and the one sure hope of glory.

It will be seen that Rev. Joshua Harrison (as we should expect that he and all such men would do) clings to the Old Gospel, and honours those who preach it with unwavering faithfulness.

Dr. Reynolds and Dr. Allon say that modern Nonconformist preaching is new not only in language but in thought. They are, then, so far, at variance with Mr. Harrison.

Dr. Hannay goes further, and defines the change of thought as a departure from that type of doctrine preached by Mr. Spurgeon. Yet his printed sermons bear witness that Mr. Spurgeon's preaching is distinctively evangelical.

Dr. Mackennal, still advancing, defines one very important difference. Justification through Christ has given place, as the keynote of evangelical sentiment, to the doctrine known as Life in Christ (which teaches the non-immortality of the soul, and the annihilation of the wicked).

Rev. Eric A. Lawrence thinks that ministers are departing from the evangelical faith, as that term has been generally understood.

Taking Rev. J. C. Harrison as the representative of evangelical orthodoxy, it is evident that an important departure has been made. It may be a question with some whether it is an advance upward or downward; but from the point of view of Mr. Spurgeon, and those who stand with him, it is evident (these eminent men themselves being witnesses) that a pretty long stage upon the Down-Grade has already been traversed.

The Christian World more than justifies all Mr. Spurgeon has said, and in the most uncompromising manner declares that we have ascertained nothing, and that we have been happily released from the dangerous anchorage to creeds and confessions, and have gone to sea in search of truth. Thus it speaks:—

> The Autumnal Sessions at Leeds......furnished many worthy, yet respectful, protests against the apparent inclination of Mr. Spurgeon to control the faith of the churches......But, on the other hand, they abundantly justified Mr. Spurgeon's assertion that the present time is indeed witnessing a great and radical change in the theological attitude of the Independent Churches and their ministers. From the chair itself came mention of the decay of dogma, and that which Dr. Mackennal pronounced decayed Dr. Fairbairn stigmatised as effete. Mr. Forsyth more than hinted that the preaching of theology had had its day, and Mr. Guinness Rogers frankly avowed that it was of no use for them to pretend that their theology was the same as Mr. Spurgeon's, or the same as it had been twenty years before. By such acknowledgments Independency is virtually cast adrift from its dangerous anchorage of creeds and confessions, and allowed to make headway before the winds of God upon the open sea of thought......We could want no more luminous illustration [of a theology scientifically reconstructed down to date than] that furnished by the open acceptance of the doctrine of evolution by prominent speakers on the platform of the Union......Dr. Wilkins admits the correctness of at least the physical half of that theory, while Drs. Mackennal and Fairbairn apparently receive it in its entirety. Yet, with the reception of the doctrine of Evolution, the old doctrine of the Fall is necessarily thrown overboard, and with it no small portion of the Calvinistic creed

It is startling to be told by a newspaper that leading and trusted men of the Congregational body have thrown overboard the old doctrine of the Fall. If this be untrue, it ought to be contradicted. We must decline to believe it to be true until they themselves declare it. It is no less startling to be told by a newspaper calling itself Christian, that the narrative of the Garden of Eden is an allegory, and that to turn it into literal history is "to ruin it for all ethical purposes."

If we want to know the truth we must be fair to all: "Nothing extenuate, nor aught set down in malice." One most important necessity is to define our terms. All admit that there is such a thing as evolution; and even when written with a capital E, it does not necessarily become a lie. It is therefore incumbent on those who call themselves Evolutionists, and those who denounce Evolutionism, to come to a clear understanding as to what they mean; or, like the Moabites and Midianites in the wars with Israel, they will surely be found beating down one another.

So of the Fatherhood of God. Mr. Aitken has just issued a volume of sermons entitled "The Love of the Father," in the preface of which he honours the Broad Church party "for the effective re-assertion of this great truth." We believe that party has done incalculable harm. But Mr. Aitken distinguishes four degrees of Fatherhood, and discriminates between sonship in Adam and sonship in Christ. In this last we should all agree with him. This, therefore, must be taken into account in considering his book.

We must distinguish between Revelation and Interpretation. The former is final, the latter is progressive. We have in the Scriptures God's inspired revelation, to which nothing can be added, except by the same Spirit who inspired the holy men of old who wrote them. But neither the interpretation of Augustine, nor of Calvin, nor of the Puritans, is final; and the present agitation is, to some extent if not altogether, a reaction against crude or exaggerated statements in the past.

The incompatible errors of Conditional Immortality on the one hand, and Universalism on the other, are a reaction against the wild and revolting representations of the tortures of the damned in Popish pictures, often but too faithfully reproduced by Protestant preachers. Some sermons preached even fifty years ago are not preached now, and could not be.

The erroneous doctrine of the Universal Fatherhood of God is a reaction against the arbitrary and tyrannous Sovereignty which was supposed to elect or reprobate the souls of men according to a despotic will, and which, without a reason, consigned some infants to the everlasting burnings, and others to the everlasting joys of heaven.

Other partial or exaggerated representations of the truth have in like manner given rise to other reactionary errors.

Tracing it to its root, what, then, is the essential difference between the old and the new theology? It is the difference between the Sovereignty of God and the Fatherhood of God in his relation to mankind. The old theology regards the children of Adam, apart from Christ, as subjects of the King, not as children of the Father. It teaches that Adam, though a son, has by his rebellion forfeited the position of a son, and stands in the relation of a King's son who has broken the law, and has now not even the place of a loyal the privileges of sonship can never be regained by man as a child of Adam, because the wages of sin is death; and only by faith in Christ Jesus can man become a son of God.

The new theology has, to a large extent, changed all that. It has thrown the government of God into shadow, and has made the family prominent, and regards Adam's fallen children as still sons of God.

This change of view has necessitated a changed view as to the Atonement. To the old theology the Atonement, in the sense of an expiatory sacrifice, is not only a possibility, but a necessity. To the new theology it is not only not a necessity, but is an encumbrance.

Instead of Atonement ("for what I have done his blood must atone") it becomes at-one-ment = reconciliation. The idea of expiation is entirely alien to the new theology. It is not, therefore, surprising to find that it has no light upon this cardinal truth. It admits that the death of Christ is the cause of our salvation; but how, or on what principle, it neither knows nor cares to know. It discourages all inquiry into the question.

The old theology, on the other hand, finds atonement, expiation, vicarious sacrifice, vital to its doctrine and teaching from beginning to end, as it is to the Bible, from Abel's lamb to the "Lamb as it had been slain, in the midst of the throne." The offering of Isaac; the Passover; the Great Day of Atonement, with its sin offering and its scape goat; the ordinance of the red heifer; the two birds, of which one was slain, and the other set free to fly in the open firmament of heaven—all become luminous in the light of the suffering Messiah. The sin offering, consumed with devouring fire without the camp; the peace offering, on which God and man feed at the same table; the burnt or ascending offering, which all belongs to God: all are essential to illustrate the Christian life, from pardon to holiness, from justification to sanctification, from the pilgrimage in the land of promise to the home in the City which hath the foundations, whose Builder and Maker is God.

But all this, hitherto so precious to believers, is of no account in a new theology, taught by men who are still identified with bodies which claim to be evangelical.

Y.W C.A. FOREIGN DEPARTMENT.

Ladies who visit in hospitals and workhouses will be glad to know that there is a good lending library in connection with this branch of the Y.W.C.A., with books in all the principal European languages, which will be lent to visitors who have foreigners in their wards. If they have to be sent by post, however, stamps must be sent for postage. Ladies, too, who come in contact with foreigners may be helped in the finding of situations and homes for their protégées, through the foreign registry office. The spiritual interests also of lonely foreign girls are cared for by lady workers, who correspond with them in their own language. Invalid ladies who could help in correspondence, even though debarred from more active work, are invited to communicate with the Hon. Secretary (Foreign Department), 316, Regent-street, W., and also ladies who are going to the Riviera or other health resorts for the winter. A great effort is being made to extend the work on the Continent, and the first step is to get the names of Christian ladies in each place, in order to confer with them as to the possibility of under-

CONFERENCE AT HAMMERSMITH.

At the Conference of the ministers of the free churches of the western suburb of London, held in the Broadway Lecture Hall on the 25th and 26th October, over forty assembled at the day sittings. These included some invited guests—i.e., Revs. Newman Hall, Edward White, R. Balgarnie, W. Guest, Henry Simon, and others.

Rev. Dr. Stoughton presided at the opening session, and threw his own gentle and loving spirit over the assembly. He deplored the lack of vigour in our churches and the fewness of conversions in their midst. But he emphatically expressed his undiminished confidence in the Word of Revelation as the source of our knowledge of all that brings life to the soul.

Rev. J. Reacher (Wesleyan) opened the first subject given for consideration—viz., "Confession." He dwelt chiefly on the shortcomings and failings of themselves as ministers, and he urged many soul-searching questions in relation to them. We urge prayerfulness on our people; do we neglect prayer ourselves? We speak to them of heavenly-mindedness; are we heavenly-minded? We denounce their self-indulgence; are we self-indulgent? In view of our failings and sins, continued the speaker, we will fall down before Christ, and acknowledge our wrongs, and seek mercy in dependence on the great sacrifice.

Rev. Robert Balgarnie followed in fervent prayer, after which came an address on "Thankfulness," by Rev. J. Byles, of Ealing (Congregationalist). He summoned the assembly to the duty of happiness. The note of the New Testament was joy and thankfulness. This was the spirit of Christ Himself, and He would that his disciples should share his joy. The early disciples had it, as witnessed in the Acts of the Apostles; and the Epistles struck the same note. Whence did their joy arise? From unfailing faith in their Master, and from the sense of his presence and power. The same sources of joy were open to us. The speaker believed we were on the "up grade," and not on the "down grade"—that to-day is better than yesterday, and that to-morrow will be better than to-day. If any felt that such remarks were tinted with the colour of the rose, all admitted that this standard of joy and praise was that to which we ought to attain, and that the way through the valley of humiliation, whither the confession of sin had led, was the way to the delectable mountains of full faith and joyous realisation. Much prayer followed a very earnest conversation, one after another the brethren successively leading the devotions.

The afternoon sitting was presided over by Rev. T. M'Cullagh (Wesleyan), the subject of Conference being "The Conditions of Spiritual Blessing," opened by Rev. C. Graham. It was maintained that the Christian's essentials are, the sense of need, the renunciation of all sin, yielding ourselves wholly to God, and simple faith.

At the evening meeting, in the Broadway Church, Christian workers and office-bearers were included in the Conference. Mr. G. D. Freeman presided, and opened with an address full of weighty thought and forcible suggestion. The succeeding speakers were Revs. Dr. Moore, W. F. Adeney, and J. Reacher.

On Wednesday morning, Rev. R. Macbeth presiding, the important subject of "The Work of the Spirit" engaged the attention of the Conference. The subject was divided into two parts (1) "The Doctrine of the Holy Spirit: Its Importance and Recent Developments." This was opened by Rev. C. Moinet (Presbyterian) in a very able paper. Starting from the point that the Church is the creation of the Holy Ghost, and that his inspiration is its life, the speaker maintained that a feeble spiritual life impoverishes the doctrine of the Holy Spirit, and impairs the integrity of other doctrines, and disturbs the relations of the Church to them. Life and doctrine are so closely united that any injury done to the one is sure to affect the other. The Spirit. It is that to which all others converge and in which they culminate. Here they receive their final interpretation, and find their point of contact with the heart of man.

The doctrine seemed to the speaker to be beset at present by two dangers: (1) an unscriptural theory of the Church, and of Sacraments, wherein the ministry is exalted into a priesthood, and the Sacraments are made to usurp the place of the Holy Spirit; (2) the other danger is in reducing Christianity into a means of culture, and in minimising the supernatural as far as possible. The doctrine of the New Testament is: "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you," and we were to observe the order—first, the Holy Ghost, and then, and then only, the power.

The next division of the subject, "The Gift of the Holy Spirit, its reception and manifestation," was taken up by Rev. W. Page (Baptist). He emphasised the fact that we are living in the dispensation of the Spirit. That its gifts are ours to realise and enjoy. There may be a fresh importation of power as there was a fresh diffusion of the Spirit after the day of Pentecost, as seen in Acts iv., and in other places. We need a fresh diffusion of the Spirit continually. Last year's sunshine will not ripen this year's harvest. We have need of fresh fire for every service. Let us wait for it, for the gift involves conditions necessary to its reception, and these take time to grow. We must wait in simple faith in Christ, with singleness of purpose, with the heart holding out for the blessing, and with the desire to retain it.

At the afternoon sitting a paper of much suggestiveness was read by Rev. Alfred Norris on "The Hindrances to the blessing." He touched on many points in ministerial and church life in a very practical manner.

The Conference culminated in the evening meeting, which was largely attended. Rev. W. Roberts presided. Rev. J. Branwhile French, as secretary, gave a résumé of the earlier proceedings of the Conference. An address followed, by Rev. G. S. Russell, preparatory to the Lord's Supper, of which nearly the whole company, both in the area and in the gallery, partook. It was a most solemn and delightful season.

WORK FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

The fourth autumnal conference of ladies and workers engaged in Preventive and Rescue work among young women and girls took place on Thursday week in Exeter Hall. With the exception of an address given by Mr. E. W. Thomas in the afternoon, all the speaking was confined to ladies, of whom the entire audience consisted. Rev. J. F. Kitto opened the morning meeting by reading Luke xix., and offering earnest prayer that the real difficulties which faced Christian workers in an effort of this kind—the coldness and apathy of those who profess to be Christians—might be overcome. Mrs. F. A. Bevan said they had met to help each other by prayer and mutual counsel calmly to consider questions in connection with which there are grave difficulties, and to learn by mutual experience the best way to meet them.

Lady Hope, in dealing with the topic how to provide healthful and cheerful occupation for young women when working hours are over, said that the most important thing was the life. She expressed cordial sympathy with the work, and desired to assist in it as far as possible. Other suggestions were thrown out in the course of the morning and afternoon by Miss Macpherson, Mrs. Carpenter, Mrs. Fisher, Mrs. Bevan, and others, one being the value of gathering young women for prayer, for singing, and to Bible-classes. Testimony was borne to the possibility of this, and to the good resulting from it. Sewing classes, cooking classes and meetings by which young women could cheer one another, were also recommended. Mrs. Bevan closed the afternoon conference with a brief paper on

FRANCE: A MISSION FIELD.

It is a solemn fact, that within twenty-one miles of our own shores there is an interesting and healthy country as much needing evangelising as many of those at the extremities of the earth, and that this country is almost entirely neglected by English Christians, as far as their own personal efforts are concerned. There are many families who could come here and live upon their own resources, even if very moderate, with ease and comfort, in bright and cheerful spots, and spread the light of salvation around them; and there are doubtless many young men who have home ties not permitting them to go so far as China or India, who could come next door in France and work, and, if needed, transport themselves in a few hours to England to obey home duties.

Many, judging from the uninteresting country between Calais and Paris, form a very incorrect idea of the country as a whole, but those travelling by Havre or Dieppe pass through Normandy, a province one of the most attractive in France, and presenting many features similar to our own country, with a varied outline of swelling hills, sunny slopes, winding dales, with hedgerows, orchards, and thatched cottages. Not a few other parts of the country would form a pleasant home, with fresh associations and spiritual needs abounding, so different to well-cared-for England. I take for granted that I am addressing those to whom Christ and his Gospel are paramount.

In speaking of the spiritual condition of France I do not ignore the many honoured pastors and evangelists throughout the country. I am minutely acquainted with their stations; but considering that there are only 650,000 Protestants (perhaps an extreme estimate) amongst its 38,300,000 people, this is only one fifty-ninth of the whole. Much more than half of the Protestants are either indifferent or rationalistic, and even of the rest the great majority need to be evangelised. True believers, likewise, need to be led into the fulness of the truth in Christ.

We have travelled in or through the greater number of the departments, and recently, with the help of the map, "La Franca Protestanta," I have gone over the whole country, and now wish to point out large districts where the light of the Gospel never penetrates (as far as I can judge).

To take Normandy: while there are numerous villages along the coast of the Seine-Inférieure where Protestants may be found, but without pastors, the eastern part of the department, and joining on to the north of the Eure, is destitute. There is a large circle formed by the south of the Eure and the east of Calvados and Orne without the light of salvation. Then there is the whole of the interior of the Manche and south-west of Orne destitute. So far for Normandy.

Then turning westward to Brittany, with its rocky ravines, rolling landes, and small enclosures, its heaths of brown (genêt) and wild sea coasts, and some of its scenery much like Scotland, we have to take into account that in the extreme west, divided off by a line drawn from St. Brieux to Lorient, the Breton is spoken. The Côtes du Nord, excepting north of the railway, Morbihan, Ile and Vilaine, and Loire-Inférieure, with the exception of one central town in each—destitute. In Mayenne there is no resident evangelist; also west of Sarthe and north and south of Maine and Loire. How far the Christian and evangelising element extends of English resident on the north coasts of Normandy and Brittany I cannot say; I fear to a very small extent.

To complete the review of the northern departments of France, I would specify the northern part of the Nord, the whole of the centre of Pas de Calais, the west and south of the Somme,

And what does all this signify? Hundreds and thousands of our neighbours living and dying without Christ, and we possessing the knowledge which would enrich them to all eternity!

And these are an interesting people, with all their varieties of character, possessing a mind clear and clever, demanding reasons simple and striking ere they give their adherence to a proposition. They have a heart peculiarly sensitive to generous emotions, with much activity, liveliness, impetuosity, and some inconstancy. They are impatient of words and ideas, when not clearly connected with what is real and positive; these are the favourable features of their character. I leave to those who have formed a less favourable opinion to fill in the background. If we are to win their ear for better things we must approach them by sympathy, throw overboard our cold island reserve, and learn how to find entrance into their hearts by showing them our own, as dear Mr. McAll has done in Paris.

DR. SOMERVILLE IN BOHEMIA.

As many of our readers are aware, Dr. Somerville is at present conducting a mission to Jews and Christians in Bohemia, Austria. He has had interested audiences of Protestants in the towns where he has been,—Prague, Kuttenberg, Kolin, &c.,—the congregations and their pastors according him a hearty reception. Considerable difficulty was experienced in making arrangements for a meeting for Jews, and it was only after Dr. Somerville had been for three weeks in the country that one was held in Prague.

The chief concern after the hall had been engaged was to obtain the necessary acquiescence of the police authorities. Austrian law is so restrictive as to put every obstacle in the way of such gatherings. The police not only require to know the subject of address, but to have in writing beforehand either the address itself or an outline of its contents, and bills cannot be issued until, after an interval of twenty-four hours, approval is obtained. A requisition for this Jewish meeting on 18th October was handed to the police, but on the evening of the 16th word came that the authorities objected on the score of non-compliance with the requirements of the law,—that they must have the substance of the address, and that the collection intimated for the poor Jews of Prague could not be allowed, as no one had been named in the bills to receive and disburse the money. Some considered this prohibition absolute, but others thought it worth making further effort. The large placards had been printed, the printer receiving instructions that if the police did not interfere, these were to be posted early on the 17th.

Dr. Somerville felt himself restrained from impatience in connection with this matter, seeing that success or failure at Prague would probably rule for the future all similar attempts in Austria and Hungary. Next morning, on looking out, he saw to his astonishment a placard in the street, intimating the meeting. This seemed an audacious violation of police regulations, and how it happened, as all were innocent of intention, was not known. Paul and Silas and the stocks began to rise like figures on a lime-light slide before the eyes of Dr. Somerville. Friends arrived, and one volunteered to go to the police with the new application and sketch of the lecture, Dr. Somerville sending by them the passport letters he had taken with him from the Lord Provosts of Edinburgh and Glasgow, copies of which were made by the police. After considerable delay, the chief of the police courteously yielded, only requiring that some one be appointed to receive the collection. It was wished to give the money to the Chief Rabbi, but he was out of town. Another Rabbi to whom application was made, declined to have anything to do with it. A Scotch friend, however, became responsible, agreeing to hand it over to some Jewish agency. The chief of the police stated that he could not infringe on the

than the Roman Catholics, were jealous of their prerogatives, and made protests if in any way their supremacy were not acknowledged. It will surprise friends at home to know that the police, as representing the Government, required that, at the meeting, there should be neither sacred song nor prayer at beginning or end, permission being refused to use even the Lord's Prayer, with an introduction to the effect that God is the God of Abraham, Israel, and Jacob.

When Dr. Somerville arrived at the "Convect Saal" at seven o'clock the place was already filled, the meeting being mainly of men, of whom the majority were Jews. All previous services of the Mission had been in Bohemian, but this was to in German, the language spoken by the Jews. There was at least 550 present, the largest auditory Dr. Somerville had had, The commissioner of police, who had attended all the services in Prague, was the only person seated on the platform. The speaker gave as his subject, "What Christianity owes to the Jews," stating that his desire was to promote good feeling between Jews and Christians. He commenced with a story of his conversation with a Gibraltar Jew. The audience listened in profound silence during all the rehearsal of his dialogue, and its echo by his interpreter, till he had reached the conclusion of the incident when the kissing scene came on. When he said he thought a better understanding might be come to between Jews and Christians were there a little more of this method of getting at each others' hearts, the assembly burst out in vociferous plaudits, which continued for a considerable time, and gave him the hope that the evening was gained. Thereafter Dr. Somerville enlarged on the benefits Christianity had received from the Jews, passing on to consider that the Messiah, in whom Jews and Christians put their faith, though a reigning and conquering Messiah, was to be so by being first a suffering Messiah. Then showing how much the Jewish types served to set forth in symbol the peculiar and vital doctrines of the Christian faith, he described what the Christians believe from their Scriptures as to the future of the Jews, concluding with a reference to the importance of having a well-grounded hope for the eternity so near at hand.

There had been entire stillness in the meeting till this moment, when once more the large audience burst forth its plaudits, which were renewed again and again, to the astonishment of the preacher and his friends. He felt as he did at Berlin, that a great result had been obtained, and that all the labours and anxieties had been overbalanced by the lovingkindness and grace of God. In fact, this Jewish lecture had made the Mission more known to the community, through its very difficulties, and those things that seemed most adverse had turned to advantage.

LONDON VEGETARIAN MISSION.—A two months' campaign has been arranged for each suburb, N., S., E., and W. The largest halls have been secured as far as possible, the meetings already held in the north having been mostly crowded. Wheatmeal bread is distributed at intervals to all, in attractive shapes, with fresh home-grown fruit. A list of the meetings to be held in South London during the next two months may be had from Mr. W. S. Manning, Superintendent London Auxiliary of the Vegetarian Society, 62, Ludgate-hill, E.C.

NEW GUINEA.—At the usual monthly meeting of the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society, at Aldersgate-street, on Friday last, Rev. W. Wyatt Gill gave an interesting address on "Christianity in New Guinea." The New Guinea Mission was founded in 1872, and since then mission stations have been started nearly all along the south-east coast between Motumotu and East Cape. During this time 202 native Christian teachers from various islands of the Pacific have been placed on New Guinea, and of this number no less than 104 have died, owing to the climate. As a result of the labours of Rev. James Chalmers, Rev. W. G. Lawes, and others, there are several hundred native Christians in New Guinea, of whom over thirty are at present missionaries to their fellow-countrymen who lie in darkness. The population of New Guinea is estimated at about two millions, WORKING LADS IN WHITECHAPEL.

Knowing the interest that your readers have taken in our work amongst the lads of London, I venture to give a few particulars, showing the progress made, and the present position of the work. The front buildings of our Institute were opened by the Princess of Wales two years ago. They comprise reading-room, library, refreshment and class-rooms, a small gymnasium, and two large dormitories. The Institute forms a pleasant resort after the day's toil, with the means of recreation and educational improvement.

Most of our members are errand-boys or apprentices earning a few shillings a week. Some idea will be formed of the extent and influence of the work carried on, when it is known that since the opening of the new building 1500 lads have attended. The majority of these, not only take advantage of the facilities afforded for gymnastics, cricket, and swimming, but attend the evening classes, lectures, &c. Last winter we carried on eighteen classes, comprising such subjects as reading, writing, arithmetic, shorthand, drawing, singing, wood-carving, carpentry and other mechanical work, French, music, &c. This winter we hope to increase the number, but we require additional friends as helpers. All the educational work is conducted by gentlemen who give their services. We now need at least ten more teachers to devote one hour weekly. Any friend who will kindly assist in this way will be heartily welcomed, and will, I believe, find himself richly compensated by the appreciation of the lads, and the satisfaction of helping the industrious poor.

The Institute is quite unsectarian, but the work is carried on upon a Christian basis, the aim being to influence the heart and life of the lads, and win them for Christ. Bible-classes are held regularly, and a short evening service, besides special services occasionally. Early this year Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith conducted a week's mission. The meetings were largely attended, and we are pleased to say that fruits remain in hearts renewed and lives changed by the Holy Spirit.

This brings me to a second pressing need—help in our religious work. There is a good opening on Sunday afternoons and evenings; indeed, we have just completed a Lecture Hall seating 550, which would be available for services. A great work is being done now, but it might readily be doubled, if we only had the necessary helpers and funds.

Beneath the Lecture Hall, has lately been erected a large swimming bath, which will be used as a gymnasium in winter. The premises are therefore now nearly completed, but it has been a tremendous effort. £12,000 has been raised by great exertion and sacrifice on the part of a few, but £5000 is still required for the building fund. This financial difficulty prevents any extension, and indeed sadly hinders the present agencies. A lady friend, an earnest Christian, who recently visited the Institute, suggested that we should get one lady in each principal city and town throughout the kingdom, who would receive help for our work. The idea deserves to be carried out for this reason: Lads are constantly coming up from all parts of the kingdom to Londom. These country lads most need such an Institute to save them from the dangers and temptations of our great city, and where they will meet with kindly oversight and real friends. A further plea for the support of country friends is that we have provided for these lads dormitories whereby they are saved from the evil associations of the common lodging-houses. We should be happy to supply circulars and all information, and such help would be greatly appreciated.

WILD BIRDS.—A Bill has been passed in India by the Viceregal Council for the protection of wild birds, the object of which is to check the killing of certain birds for whose plumage there is

CORNWALL HALL, NOTTING HILL.

This Mission, in connection with Talbot Tabernacle, has been in existence about ten years, and is doing excellent work. The Hall itself was formerly a dancing saloon of the lowest description. The neighbourhood, that of the Portobello-road, is an exceedingly poor one, and the Mission is brought into contact with all sorts and conditions of distress and vagabondage. Besides the large Hall where the meetings are held, there is a cottage which is used as a Working Man's Rest, and this is open every week night throughout the winter. Here good fires are always kept up; and papers, periodicals, chess, and draughts are provided, and hundreds eagerly avail themselves of the comforts of this shelter. During last winter the soup kitchen was open for five months, and proved a great boon to the poorest of the neighbourhood; it will be open again, the Lord willing, directly the cold weather regularly sets in.

The Free Night School, for men over eighteen, is held twice a week, and has proved a means of great blessing, for many are got in here who never would hear the Word in any other way. The school never closes without a Gospel address, and a special appeal to those without Christ; the hardest of the hard, and the vilest of the vile, have thus been brought to know themselves as sinners, and to find their all in Christ. This is a class of men who, without homes, have to walk the streets all night, unless they obtain the 4d. required for a lodging, and it is amongst these that the principal work is done. Open-air services are a great feature of the work, and the small band of workers have been greatly encouraged by the results. Mr. O. E. Winslow, 4a, Chepstow-place, Pembridge-square, Bayswater, W., is the secretary.

GREAT SERVICE in LITTLE WAYS.

The other day the body of Joseph Dunman was interred in Brompton Cemetery. He kept a small seed shop in Lambeth Walk, in the midst of a crowded population of the poor. Many of his neighbours attended the funeral in their little carts, showing the respect felt for him by persons of all creeds and of none. He was a faithful witness for Christ. He found many opportunities during business hours of testifying for the truth by word and by distributing tracts.

He could not preach, but he felt he could invite others to hear. Every Sunday evening, for about an hour before and at the beginning of service, he used to walk up and down in front of Christ Church, Lambeth (Rev. Newman Hall's), and invite strangers to enter, offering them a seat and a hymn-book. He has sometimes induced as many as ten or twelve to enter on one evening. During the year hundreds have thus been brought under the sound of the Gospel, of whom several have testified that they have yielded their hearts and lives to God through him. At the "after prayer-meeting" he often addressed young men with simple and touching effect. His own conversion illustrated the good results of little efforts. He used to be a toll-keeper on Waterloo Bridge. The minister of Surrey Chapel, on crossing the bridge, frequently gave him a little book and exchanged a few words with him. When the toll was given up, and he was at liberty on Sunday, he went to hear the preacher who had thus become known to him, and thus he was led to Christ.

He was not fifty years old when, after a few days' illness, he was called home; yet his life was long if reckoned by usefulness. The humblest in station may be encouraged to work for the Master by such an example; and preachers may learn that not by sermons only, but by methods far simpler, they may be instrumental in the conversion of those who may themselves become, in the true sense, ministers and evan-

A Y.W.C.A. WORKROOM

A little more than a year ago a workroom was started in connection with the Princess House Branch of the Y.W.C.A., at 108, Brompton-road. The workers desire to praise God for the marked blessing He has given to the undertaking. A competent, experienced dressmaker, and earnest Christian worker, is at the head of it. Every day begins with Scripture reading and prayer, or a little prayer-meeting, in which each takes part. The hands are neither overworked nor underpaid, and the work is well and thoroughly done. Most of the evenings are spent in mission work in connection with the Princess House, but perhaps the special seal set to the enterprise is that a missionary candidate is now there to learn dressmaking, preparatory to going out to a self-supporting mission in India.

The "Princess House," therefore, now consists of a restaurant and lodgings at 106, Brompton-road, a dress and mantle department at 108, and a large mission-room running across the back of both premises. Further particulars may be had from Miss Sinclair, 108, Brompton-road, S.W.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

During the recent summer months this Mission has entered upon new ground in the county of Oxford, with very encouraging results. In the month of June last a tent was pitched in Banbury by Messrs. Newell and Hall, and after about a fortnight's work removed to another spot in the same town, five weeks altogether being spent in this place. There was a fair attendance at the services, and the blessing of God manifestly rested upon the work.

The evangelists then removed to Bourton, a village about four miles north of Banbury, where they spent two weeks, and were encouraged by several interesting cases of conversion. From Bourton they went to Wroxton, another village, where throughout the whole time of their stay—four weeks—the services in the tent were remarkably well attended. On Sundays there were as many people outside the tent as inside, the tent affording accommodation for about three hundred. This, for a village of 600 inhabitants, betokens a general interest.

The next place after this was Boddicote where tent services were held for a week, and finally, the work was brought to a close by ten days' work at Adderbury. At each place God gave testimony to the word of his grace in the conversion of sinners.

After concluding the tent work, the evangelists returned to Boddicote, where they held a special mission in the Baptist Chapel. At this place, which will hold about four hundred people, the average attendance had been eight or nine people. During the week-night services the numbers averaged one hundred and eighty to two hundred, and on Sunday the chapel was well filled. Recent reports show that the attendance still continues good, so that the impulse given by the special mission has a permanent result, Subsequently special services were held in the Corn Exchange, Banbury, the evangelists being joined for a few days by Mr. Hurditch. Many have given clear evidence of a deep and real change. We commend the work to the prayers of our readers, that efforts which are to be continued may be abundantly blessed of God.

ROMANISTS IN CHINA.—In a recent issue of The New Zealand Herald some details are given as to the progress of Roman Catholicism in China. The activity of the priesthood is showing itself in the growth of institutions for educating the young. It is stated that in the whole of China there are 2,000,000 people of the Roman Catholic faith, whilst there are thirty bishops, and about 500 missionaries; and there is an average increase in the number of members of the

"THE JOYLESS CITY."

There are many who on reading the above heading fail to understand or realise what it means. They have never seen East London, which Mr. Walter Besant has christened "The Joyless City," with its 1,500,000 inhabitants. Impressed with this fact, some leading men in the West-end have often shown much anxiety concerning the social condition of the residents of the East-end. It was well remarked for instance, by one of our leading statesmen: "The problem of the day is, how to bring Belgravia down to Bethnal-green." Hurried visits have been paid to the East since Her Majesty came through the principal thoroughfares, but these visitors can have little idea of the philanthropic work which is carried on. The work of Mr. Archibald Brown is well known; so also is that of Mr. F. N. Charrington, Mr. George Holland, in Whitechapel, and Dr. Barnardo; but there are many other institutions not so well known which are doing a vast amount of work of a social and spiritual character for the improvement of the masses.

One of these institutions is the Bethnal Green Free Library, which is the story of the "grain of mustard seed" re-told. Commencing with 500 volumes ten years ago, it has gone on increasing, and now is a magnificent library of 20,000 volumes. In the first year the daily readers were few, and might almost be counted on the fingers; but now they are so numerous that considerable anxiety is felt by the committee how to provide for them: not less than 47,000 attended last year. The building is under the trusteeship of such well-known Christian workers as Mr. Robert Baxter, Lord Kinnaird, Mr. F. A. Bevan (treasurer), and Rev. Dr. Tyler.

The title, however, of Free Library, hardly conveys the full meaning of the scope and character of the institution, for, in addition to its library and news-room, it is doing an important work by the delivery of lectures on health and science, and by providing entertainments and music of an elevating character. Associated with all this is the Christian work which is carried on. The institution has developed itself into one of the greatest service to the East-end City missionaries, open-air preachers, Sunday-school teachers, Bible students, and Christian workers generally, for whom special facilities are provided for study.

It is a very encouraging sight every week-night evening to see such a large number of them in this special department perusing the various commentaries, or historical and classical books bearing on Scripture, and making notes with pens and paper gratuitously provided by the committee for the purpose. Another pleasing feature is the work amongst the factory hands, many of whom are employed in our large city warehouses. For this class of readers there is also a special department, and through the liberality of the committee of the Religious Tract Society and other friends, there is always a fresh supply of literature.

Altogether a noble work is being carried on by the Bethnal Green Free Library, and the committee are now seeking for help from well qualified persons for gratuitously presiding over the respective departments. This is already well done in respect to young girls, of whom there is a large attendance on special nights of the week under the care of an earnest Christian worker. There is a flourishing shorthand class for young men and also classes for astronomy and chemistry. Fully in keeping with the social character of the institution a well-furnished and comfortable room is set apart for the exhibition of pictures, curios, maps, and a large number of objects interesting to Bible students. This room is frequently thrown open to Christian workers, and for conferences, when these objects are exhibited by Mr. G. F. Hilcken, the librarian, who takes remarkable interest in all departments obtaining exhibits for this museum. The question might well be asked, How is this work carried on? It is supported by voluntary contributions, and the main object of the committee is that the whole building shall be utilised to its utmost extent for the benefit of the inhabitants of East London. In this way it is deserving of the fullest support, and the sympathy of every section of the Christian Church.

A TOWN ONE YEAR OLD.

The first anniversary of the town of Johannesburg, in the Transvaal, was recently celebrated. Of this town The Cape Argus says:—"Twelve months ago Johannesburg had no existence beyond the tin shanties of prospectors. To day it is as much a town as anything that we have to show. It has its wide streets, its hotels, its five newspapers, and it is peopled with some of the most energetic and buoyant people in South Africa." The Presbyterian Church is to be opened on September 22, the Wesleyan Chapel on the Sunday following, and the English Church a week later. The town thus rapidly improvised is situated thirty miles from Pretoria, in the centre of what is supposed to be one of the most promising of the Transvaal goldfields, to which there has been a rush from all parts of South Africa.

Rev. Andrew Allan, who left for South Africa some months since, in connection with the Free Church of Scotland, is settled in Johannesberg. He writes in the Monthly of that denomination:—

"Everything gives the prospect of this being a permanent centre. Gold is here in great abundance; and it will take generations to work out the mines. The population of the town is variously estimated at from seven to ten thousand. Houses are going up at a great rate, and by September it is expected that very many of the families of the people will be up. I suppose the impression at home of the gold-fields is that the people are a very rough, disorderly, and rowdy set, perhaps rather a low class of people. They will be astonished when I say that they are the very opposite. The business of this town, even the gold digging and gold speculations, is conducted in as orderly and regular a way as the business of London is. This is no poor man's digging at all. Only those who have capital can go into it. And the class of people about it are, many of them, of the better class of society; and all of them generally of manners, bearing, and intelligence, above the average society at home. This is certainly a different state of matters from what I expected. The very best intelligence and vigour of the country are flowing into such a centre as this. The people at home are not alive at all to the importance of these fields. In a little time this will be a great town."

THE PERILS OF THE SEA.

The new issue of The Lifeboat, the journal of the Royal National Lifeboat Institution, again reminds us of the perils by which those who go down to the sea in ships are continually surrounded. New lifeboats, to take the place of others of smaller or inferior type of construction, have been this year sent to several places on the coast, and at Burry Port, Carmarthenshire, and Stornoway, new lifeboat establishments have been opened. Casualties occurred on or near the coasts of the United Kingdom in the twelve months ending June of this year to 3764 vessels; this number, however, is smaller by 641 than that of the preceding year.

The record of services performed by the boats is full of a pathos which should touch all hearts, especially now, when winter gales are beginning to blow The Society's office is at 14, John-street, Adelphi, W.C., the secretary being Mr. Charles

FAITH'S VISION.

The ocean of trouble before us
Lies dark and grey to-night;
It may be the path to glory,
When seen by the morning light.
For the Lord of Life and Glory
Is our earthly Father too;
And his bounties fall upon us
Silently as the dew.

The mountains of separation,
When his feet upon them stand,
Will be as the mountains of spices,
Whose fragrance fills the land.
For the Lord of Life and Glory
Hath treasures yet in store;
And the sea of his lovingkindness
Rolls on to a boundless shore.

The shadow that broods o'er the valley
Which lies before us all,
Is cast by the brightness shining
From the heavenly city wall.
For the Lord of Life and Glory
Will unveil Himself full soon,
And the twilight of earth will vanish
In the splendour of heavenly noon.

MR. GEORGE CLARKE IN DUBLIN.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]

This evangelist has left Dublin, after wha appears to be a most successful mission humanly speaking. Since Mr. Moody's missio I never saw such crowded houses at the Unio buildings. Every night there were from 3000 t 3500 attending the service, and people of al classes heard the word.

The afternoon meetings grew daily in numbe and in interest, but I very much questio whether many of the "upper ten" came t hear him. One clergyman had the pleasure o seeing his wife and sister brought to the Lord and there were many remarkable cases o conversion.

On the last evening the address was speciall to those who had received Christ during th mission. About five hundred were present i seats reserved for them in the body of the church and there you saw people of different classes o society—of different ages, of various creeds, including Romanists, men and women, and man young people, about twenty-five soldiers, an probably quite as many policemen. Two officer received blessing; perhaps there were others but two confessed the Lord Jesus.

Mr. Clarke gave one or two very wise counsel to the new converts: (1) That they should go a once and inform their clergyman or ministe how gracious God had been to them; (2) Tha they should confess Him in daily life; (3) Tha they should meet together in private houses i groups of ten or twelve, and have prayer an Christian communion together; (4) That the should take up definite work for Christ.

We had an inquiry meeting every night, and earnestly wish one could be held in every cit and town once a month. I see difficulties an even objections to doing it congregationally. T me it was a great blessing; it showed me m littleness, my ignorance, and my perfect inabilit to deal with anxious souls. It was a cross, an you had to endure coldness and snubs, and jus look completely to God for guidance. Than God, it was a great blessing to my own soul.

NORWICH BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.—Th secretary (Mrs. Robert Adcock) has just sent fort the eleventh annual circular, and, after giving list of public institutions regularly visited, it i stated that "many sick and aged have been r cipients of the Gospel message in their own home through the fragrant ministry of the Bible Flowe Mission." In addition to 4195 bouquets of (fr and everlasting) flowers, a large number of woolle and other articles have been distributed, each on

THE PEOPLE'S BIBLE.*

We welcome another volume of Dr. Parker's suggestive work. It is a model of condensed and compact composition. There is no padding. Every sentence means something worth thinking of. It does not run in ruts. The author turns false proverbs inside out and shows their falseness; and supplies half a dozen new and true aphorisms for every erroneous one that he explodes. The author analyses men. He has no sympathy with the idea that we are to revere or reprobate the Bible characters without discrimination. He treats the Scripture as if it were worth searching; he traces behaviour to motive, learning character from conduct, and laying bare the lessons which lie latent in men's lives.

We have said this work is suggestive; herein it is strong. It is not exhaustive; herein it is weak. In some cases, at least, men are judged by incidents or periods in their lives, not by their lives as a whole. Thus we read of the devotion, the moral courage, of Jonathan; the heroism of standing for David and the right, against Saul his father and the wrong; and this is true to a certain extent; but only so. Jonathan said to his friend, "Thou shalt be king and I shall be next unto thee, and that also Saul my father knoweth." But he was disappointed; he fell with Saul on Mount Gilboa, and his body was nailed with that of his father to the wall of Bethshan. David said to Abiathar, "He that seeketh my life seeketh thy life, but with me shalt thou be in safeguard." And so it came to pass. But Jonathan did not abide with him. He returned to his house. He went back to the city. He clung to Saul whom God had rejected, and he shared his fate. The more we rejoice that Jonathan went so far, the more we regret that he did not go far enough. May we ourselves learn the lesson of that lovely but unperfected life.

The character of David is more fully delineated, and the lines, though few, are bold and free, and generally accurate. Dr. Parker avoids the error of Dr. Blunt in his Coincidences, who, carried away by his theme, sees a coincidence where none exists, and regards Ziba as honest and Mephibosheth as a traitor. In the exposition before us, Ziba is truly represented as the traitor, and Mephibosheth as the true son of faithful Jonathan. Yet Dr. Parker fails to mark the petulance and the only partial justice of David: "Why speakest thou any more of thy matters? I have said, Thou and Ziba divide the land." Thus treating the traitor equally well with the true man. The exposition stops short of this, and regards David's last treatment of Mephibosheth as exhibiting "the finer features, the more exquisite lineaments, of this manifold character." This seems to us a mistake. The treatment of the character of David, in regard to his great sin, and otherwise, is, however, taken as a whole, most masterly and useful. "The People's Bible" is somewhat too comprehensive a title for this series of pictures, and yet a far fuller, more complete, and more correct conception of the Bible may be gained from these pen and ink sketches, than from many a commentary which dilates upon each book, chapter by chapter, and verse by verse.

THE OPIUM TRAFFIC.—On Friday last, at the noon prayer-meeting of the Y. M. C. A., Aldersgate-street, Rev. Goodeve Mabbs gave an address on the subject of our Opium Trade with China, its iniquitous and disgraceful character, the serious hindrance which it presents to the spread of the Gospel among the Chinese, and the need for Christian people heartily to unite in praying and working for its suppression. Much interest was shown in the address; and, at its close, earnest prayers were offered that the trade might be brought to an end, and that Great Britain might be delivered from the guilt of it.

A NEGRO ON AFRICAN MISSIONS.*

A Christian negro, who has diligently studied the problem of the future of his race, deserves to be listened to with respectful attention by all who desire and pray for the salvation of Africa. Much has been written by others about the African. It will be useful to hear what he himself says. Mr. Edward W. Blyden, LL.D., the author of the work entitled, "Christianity, Islam, and the Negro Race," in which the African problem is ably discussed, is a pure negro, whose home is in Liberia. He was formerly the representative of that Republic at the British Court.

In the beginning of this volume there are things which will grate upon the feelings of evangelical Christians; but as the reader proceeds, the unpleasant impression wears off under the conviction that Dr. Blyden is not only a sincere lover of his race, and, through careful study, a believer in its great possibilities, but also one who is fervently solicitous for the Christianisation of Africa. He knows too much of the evil effects of rum, and gunpowder, and European vices, to have much patience with the nonsense which is still talked in some circles about the benefits of opening up Africa to Western trade. He says:—"People who talk of the civilising and elevating influence of mere trade on that continent do so because they are unacquainted with the facts."

Dr. Blyden feels strongly upon the unwisdom of attempting to Europeanise the negro, and upon the hindrance to the lasting success of Christian missions which has resulted from the failure of Christian missionaries to remember, in some cases, that Christianity is not a Western religion. He deprecates treating the negro as a naturally inferior race, and ever giving him a foreign model to copy. He quotes the judgment of a native clergyman as also expressing his own, that "God does not intend to have the races confounded, but that the African should be raised upon his own idiosyncrasies."

It is in no spirit of carping criticism, but with a desire to induce, in larger proportion, a more thoughtful and intelligent line of action, that Dr. Blyden speaks of "the missionary, often young and inexperienced, having no model before him but that which he has left at home, endeavouring to bring things in his new field as nearly as possible into conformity to the old."

In some respects, notably as regards the Gospel characteristics of love and faith, Dr. Blyden contends that the negro is capable of producing a higher type of Christian than that of his brother of a whiter skin. There is certainly no lack of faith in his own race in Dr. Blyden. We can but hope that he is a prophet as well as a dreamer when he says: "Africa may yet prove to be the spiritual conservatory of the world, just as in past times Egypt proved the stronghold of Christianity after Jerusalem fell, and just as the noblest and greatest of the fathers of the Christian Church came out of Egypt, so it may be when the civilised nations, in consequence of their wonderful material development, shall have had their spiritual perceptions darkened and their spiritual susceptibilities blunted through the agency of a captivating and absorbing materialism; it may be that they may have to resort to Africa to recover some of the simple elements of faith; for the promise of that land is that she shall 'stretch forth her hands unto God.'"

It is not necessary to endorse everything in Dr. Blyden's thoughtful work in order to be able to commend it to the discriminating and prayerful study of all who are actively interested in winning the millions of Africa to a saving knowledge of our adorable Lord and Saviour. A. S. D.

Y.W.C.A., KENTISH TOWN.—The address of this branch of the Y.W.C.A. is Kinnaird House, 33, Patshull-road, N.W. Formerly it was No. 19, but the street has lately been re-numbered.

GOSPEL MISSION AT LEAMINGTON.

A genuine work of religious revival has broken out in this town in connection with the work of Mr. Spencer Walton, evangelist. The Mission was unitedly worked by the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A.; certainly the committees did not spare any effort to further it. Night after night the numbers increased, until the large public hall was not only crammed but numbers unable to obtain admission. The addresses were searching, and the preacher most outspoken. At the close of his addresses numbers remained behind to be dealt with. It seems to have been a very deep work of conviction in the hearts of many.

Two special addresses were given to men only, when great numbers congregated to hear the message of life; on both occasions God's power was unmistakably felt. Mrs. Osborne, of South Africa, spoke in the Albert Hall to women only; the place was crowded out, and a large overflow meeting held as well. A blessed spirit of prayer seems to have pervaded the daily prayer-meeting, and on several occasions the request presented at the beginning of the meeting was turned into praise ere it closed. Mr. John McAuliffe came for the last week, and his help at the "side meetings" as well as in the overflows was invaluable.

A conference on "Christian Life" and the "Claims of the Heathen" was held for three days during the second week. The conference was marked by large and interested gatherings, which met three times each day. Among the speakers were Rev. Colin Campbell, Rev. F. Webster, Rev. J. Sloan (Glasgow), Rev. J. J. Luce, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, Mr. R. Radcliffe, Mr. J. N. Forman from America, and others. The privileges of the Christian were vividly set forth, and the loud call for workers in heathen lands sounded in no uncertain way. It is hoped that not a few will volunteer for the mission field as the result.

THE UNEMPLOYED.

On Thursday evening of last week, Mr. Charrington placed the Great Assembly Hall at the disposal of the unemployed to ventilate their grievances, and presided over the gathering, which numbered some 3000. The chief speakers were Mr. Charles Durant (late M.P.), Mr. Henry Varley, and Mr. Champion. The first-named maintained that there was no more truly Christian and religious purpose than assembling together to consider the well-being of our fellow-creatures. If Christianity had nothing to say on this problem the working men may well ask what Christianity was worth. Mr. Durant, as well as Mr. Charrington, denied the truth of the allegation of officialdom that there is no exceptional distress in London at the present time.

The unemployed have not been accustomed, at their meetings, to listen to speeches like the one which on this occasion Mr. Varley delivered. At the outset he pointed out that so long as the House of Commons is composed to such a large extent of lawyers, naval and military officers, distillers and brewers, so long would the social condition of this country remain terribly unsatisfactory. He was loudly cheered when he declared that to drinking and gambling could be traced a considerable amount of the poverty and misery of the working classes. He nobly championed the cause of the sober, industrious man, who, with his wife and children, are on the verge of starvation, owing to no fault of his; but simply because he could find no honest employment. Mr. Champion, who followed Mr. Varley, was not the only Socialist who spoke. Several others, as also a number of the unemployed, gave addresses.

The result of the meeting was that a resolution was adopted urging the Local Government Board to immediately organise relief works for those out of employment.

For the Young.

WHAT THE MINISTER DID NOT HEAR.

BY MISS L. FEARNLEY, READING, BERKS.

The service had been very solemn; the pastor had felt it peculiarly so. Young men and maidens had joined with old men and children in singing—

> Should swift death this night o'ertake us,
> And our couch become our tomb,
> May the morn in heaven awake us,
> Clad in light and deathless bloom.

And as the pastor looked into the faces of the young people he had watched grow up from infancy to the dawn of man and womanhood, and saw their lips joining in the solemn words which close that grand old hymn, his heart went out in a fervent "Amen"—which, had they known, would surely have met with some response in their then thoughtless hearts.

The last notes of the hymn died away; the benediction was pronounced, and before the pastor raised his head the chapel was nearly empty.

Outside were little groups engaged in conversation. But the pastor hastened homewards, not stopping to speak, but giving a smile and a nod of recognition to each in passing. His heart was heavily burdened that Sabbath night for the salvation of the young people of his charge. He was wondering, "Have my words had no effect? Nay, have the words of the Master Himself been utterly without effect?" Thus sad and disheartened, Rev. John Harrison walked homewards.

Two members of his congregation were just before him, earnestly engaged in conversation about something. This is what the minister heard as he was passing: "I was taking the pattern of her dolman in chapel—I think I can manage to cut mine like it; did you notice it?"

"No! I do hope Madame will have my dress ready for Mrs. D.'s party; I am very anxious lest she should not."

"Dear me," said Miss G., "I hope Mr. Harrison did not hear us; he will be horrified." But Mr. Harrison had heard, and the hearing gave him pain.

Gertrude Hay and Hannah Green had been members of his congregation from childhood. Evidently his ministrations had not taken great effect. "Should swift death this night o'ertake them." "The Lord forbid!" was the fervent prayer for them and all the unsaved ones in connection with Zion Congregational Church.

But there was another conversation of a far different nature taking place elsewhere, a conversation which the minister did not hear.

It ran as follows:—"The sermon was very solemn to-night, Maggie; indeed I felt it was going to be from the first hymn being sung, and Mr. Harrison's prayer seemed meant for me."

"How strange!" replied Maggie. "Do you know, Bella, I feel just the same; indeed, to tell the truth, I have not been comfortable for several weeks past, and to-night the singing of the closing hymn made me feel very solemn and anxious about the future."

"I wish," said Maggie, "you could summon courage to tell mamma how we feel; I know she would be glad; but I can't begin to speak on religious matters."

"I am afraid my courage would fail me speaking to aunt," said Bella; "but could we not venture to speak to Mr. Harrison? He has classes very often, to which he invites any who are anxious—and I know I am of that number, and you too—eh, Mag.?"

"Yes, Cousin Bell, I do want to be better; wouldn't it be nice if some little bird could take a note to Mr. Harrison, so that he might know and begin the subject first?"

Maggie Logan was the only child of wealthy and indulgent parents. Mr. and Mrs. Logan had adopted the orphan child of Gregory and Alice Logan, and she and Maggie were as sisters. With everything of a temporal nature to make life enjoyable, the two girls, each in her eighteenth year, had happily found that "one thing was needful" to make their happiness complete. Little did the pastor of Zion Chapel imagine, as he sat with bowed head in his study that night, brooding over the conversation he had heard between Gertrude Hay and Hannah Green, that the morning's post would bring him "glad tidings of great joy."

We will leave our friends Maggie and Bella conversing together, entirely ignorant that Mrs. Logan had heard every word of the conversation we have written, and much that we have not recorded. Her dressing-room door being open, she had caught the first few sentences, and was anxious to hear more.

"The dear girls!" was her thought. "Mr. H. will instruct and help them far more than I can, and if they can speak more freely to him, they shall do so. They shall never know from me that I have heard a word of their conversation." So Mrs. Logan sat down and penned an epistle to her pastor.

. . . .

"You look worried, dear," observed Mrs. Harrison; "I am afraid you are looking at the dark side of things. 'A penny for your thoughts,' just now."

"'Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?' These are my thoughts, dear, at this moment."

Mrs. Harrison kissed her husband's forehead. She saw he looked troubled, and her face caught and reflected the shadow. However, he smiled and asked, "Is that instead of the penny, madam?" A reply in the affirmative ended the slight diversion from gloom which was again taking its place on the brow of the minister, when Annie, the servant, brought in a letter for "The Rev. J. Harrison." It read as follows:—

Beechwood, Sunday Night.

My dear Pastor,—My daughter Maggie and my niece Bella are, I find, in great anxiety about their souls. I think Maggie has been anxious some few weeks; as far as I can gather, both have been led to serious thought through your sermons. I overheard a conversation between the two girls from my dressing-room immediately after chapel to-night. I believe this evening's sermon has made a deep impression on both minds. They said (at least Maggie said), "I wish a little bird could take a letter to Mr. Harrison, to let him know how we feel, so that he could begin the subject first." They also said that they could speak more freely to you than to me—and so, my dear Pastor, I thought it the best thing to acquaint you with the fact. I do not wish the dear girls to suffer more anxiety than necessary, neither do I wish that the anxiety be removed until each shall find "joy and peace through believing." I will make some errand for them to your house to-morrow morning. I shall trust to your skill in concealing from them your knowledge of their state of mind. They have not the remotest idea of it.

My dear Pastor, I am very, very glad to-night, glad God sent you here. May many a mother have the like joy is the prayer of your sincere sister in Christ, Agnes Logan.

Mr. Harrison handed the letter to his wife. It need not be said that husband and wife rejoiced with exceeding great joy, and earnestly prayed that the expected visitors would leave "Fern Cottage" rejoicing in a Saviour's love.

. . . .

We will return [illegible] a few minutes to Maggie and Bella. All unconscious of the letter, which Mrs. Logan herself posted, to prevent any member of her household knowing, they agreed to pray that God would in some way lead Mr. Harrison to mention the subject of religion to them.

"You know, dear," said Maggie, "Mr. Harrison is never very funny, and I, for one, have always run away as soon as possible in case he should question me about these things—I never once gave him a chance to converse with me alone."

"Nor I," said Bella; "but we should be very thankful now, shouldn't we?"

"Yes, indeed," said Maggie; "but we must hasten down to supper."

Directly after supper, the girls asked if the servants might come in to prayers, as they did not feel well, and after prayers they retired; but not to sleep—

> "Should swift death this night o ertake us,'

was Maggie's thought. The words of the text troubled Bella: "What wilt thou do in the swellings of Jordan?"

The next morning, after family worship, Mrs Logan asked her niece, Bella, if she would take a basket of strawberries and a few new-laid eggs to Mrs. Harrison, the minister's wife, with her best love. Bella looked suspiciously pleased but Mrs. Logan knew better than to notice that.

"Aunt, dear, can you spare Maggie to go with me?" she asked.

"Oh, you David and Jonathan," said Mrs Logan, laughing merrily; "yes, Maggie may go You may have the day at Fern Cottage, if Mr. and Mrs. Harrison wish it."

So Maggie and Bella set off.

Very soon they reached the house of thei pastor, who had to be very careful, lest he shoul give rise to suspicion, for his heart was overjoyed at seeing them.

After a chat with Mrs. Harrison, a romp wit the children, and a walk through the garden Mr. Harrison took the two girls into the library to inspect the books and look at some pictures Amongst them was a picture of a boat out a sea in a thunderstorm, and at the foot of the picture was written—

> "Should swift death this night o'ertake us."

"Bell, look here," said Maggie, "doesn't thi remind you of—of—of—"

"Of what, Miss Bella?" asked Mr. Harrison But Bella had turned over the leaf, and so h appealed to Maggie.

"Can you tell me of what that picture reminded your cousin, Miss Maggie?"

"Perhaps it would remind us both of the sam thing, Mr. Harrison," answered Maggie; "indeed, I know it does."

"Well," said Mr. Harrison, "we will pu it in the form of a riddle, and if I guess rightl in three times, then I will ask you one; is agreed?"

"Very well, sir," said the girls.

"Let me see," said Mr. Harrison, "th riddle is—of what do the lines at the foot of th picture, 'The Doomed Ship,' remind the Misse Logan?"

"Is it of your sailor brother, Miss Bella?"

"No!" answered both girls.

"Is it of sailors generally, then?"

"No!" was the answer.

"I wonder," said the pastor, taking a hand each, "if those lines remind you of the closin hymn last night? If that be so (ah! I see I a right)—come, you are not afraid of me, I hav watched you grow from very children."

Bella and Maggie Logan were weeping, the arms clasped around each other. When the could speak, Maggie confessed her great longin after peace. She said, "Bella and I both wis to be Christians, and last night we were longin for someone to tell you, and we both asked G to open up the way, and when—He—did—"

"You were too timid to take the advantage, said Mr. Harrison. "Ah, well! never mind th now." Little by little he drew from them th difficulties that so troubled them, the princip one with both being their great sinfulness in long rejecting the Saviour. This met, the re was soon made clear, and before dinner w announced, two happy faces met Mrs. Harriso and into her motherly ear was poured t glad news.

"Oh!" said Maggie, "Mamma will be delighted that Bell and I have decided Christ. You know we had not the courage tell her, but we can tell her all now. I'm su God put it into her mind to send us to-day There was a happy time at the altar that nigh

Mr. Harrison is praying for Gertrude Hay an Hannah Green. He will pray more hopeful now; and though light frivolous talk will never cease to pain, whether on Sabbath or week-days, the pastor of Zion Church will remember the case of Maggie and Bella, and take courage. There are many good things said

GIPSY AND VAN CHILDREN.

SIR,—In my visits to the van dwellers, gipsies, and other travellers, I occasionally meet with kind parents that desire to send their children to school, but many schoolmasters will not receive them, owing, as they say, to "want of room," which I take to mean "want of pay." I met with a van-dweller the other day at Leicester fair who had sent his children twice to a public day-school in Derby, but in each case, although clean and well-dressed, they were sent back home. Surely these poor children, who may exert a baneful influence over the country, need education as much as village children, whose influence for good or evil is chiefly confined to the village in which they live.

At the recent Nottingham goose fair there were between fifty and sixty, at Leicester fair about thirty, and at the Market Harboro' fair thirty-seven, families of van-dwellers, and, roundly stated, there will be between five and six men, women, and children, in each van, and out of this number there will be over two children of school age not attending any school. At the recent Northampton fair there were in three vans and a small dray alongside of each other, twenty-five men, women, and children of all ages and sizes: five of the men and women could read and write, but only three out of the nineteen children could read or write a sentence.

Introduce the poor children to day-schools by the nearly free passbook system, as I propose, and sanitation to their homes, which has the good will of schoolmasters and sanitary officers, and for which I have been promoting simple and easy legislative measures since 1878, and then our travelling children will be an honour to us as a Christian nation, instead of a blot upon England's escutcheon.

The Bill would have been law by this time, and the children receiving an education, but for the unfortunate "blocks" of last session.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.—On arrival at Great Yarmouth on Wednesday week, the Mission ship Cholmondeley reported that during a very heavy sea the second mate, named Goffin, was washed overboard and drowned. He was unmarried, but was the only son and supporter of his widowed mother. It is essential that the important labours in which the Mission is engaged should be carried on in winter as well as summer—indeed the presence of the cruising dispensary is specially necessary in the stormy season, since accidents are of more frequent occurrence.

THE RATCLIFF "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

AT the present time, when we hear so much about the "unemployed," it is natural to think of strong working men, the fathers of families on whom many depend for daily bread. But our work brings us into contact with hundreds of unemployed women, who, even if they have not an aged parent or young children to support, are at any rate feeling the terrible pressure of hard times, and with whom it is a daily struggle to keep body and soul together. It is distressing indeed to stand in our little Hall every morning, and hear the heartrending stories one after another, nearly always ending with "If I could only get some work I should get on again."

Only a day or two since, amongst those who waited their turn for advice or help, there was an honest-looking woman, clean and tidy even in her dire poverty. Her hands were perhaps the best testimony that her days were spent in toiling for bread. With her she had a bright but hungry-looking child of fourteen years of age. All their possessions were in a small bundle which she carried, their only clothing being what they wore. There was no whining discontent in the straightforward story, told so quietly, and yet with an eager appeal in the telling. Ten years ago the husband—a tailor by trade—had died, leaving the mother with seven children to do for them as she could. Through pinching poverty she worked for them until, in turn, they were sent to service or married. Then came sickness, and this child, who had remained with her mother, was taken first by one married sister and then another. But they too are poor, and when the woman grew strong she again took her child, and by daily work both were supported. Latterly work has failed, and they have lived from hand to mouth. "I have tried to keep my child from a knowledge of sin, but it's dreadful, walking the streets to look for work; it's like walking about in hell."

We at once received the poor child into the Training Home, but the only help we could give the mother was the offer of two or three nights' lodging at the Night Shelter, when, perhaps, some honest employment may be found for her. With many expressions of thankfulness she left us, saying, "I shall go with a good heart now, my child, knowing you are out of temptation, and well cared for." Such a story is better left without any setting off of ours. God help those honest mothers who, with anguished hearts, see and hear the temptations offered to their child-daughters! Others, equally young, come with their own pitiful stories, who, alas! in the hour of their temptation, had been shielded by no motherly indignation. Sometimes they come carrying a tiny baby in their arms, and thus the difficulty of knowing how best to help the poor girl is increased tenfold. Sometimes the sins of the parents are visited with such awful consequences upon the children, that young creatures in their early teens seem so possessed with unclean spirits that faith almost staggers in trying to deal with them, and we long with inexpressible yearning for the personal touch of the Master.

Everywhere now men's hearts are failing them for fear, and many things tend to make the outlook dark this winter, but nevertheless we have much, very much, to encourage. Wesley's words spoken on his death-bed are often in our hearts and on our lips:—"The best of all is, God is with us. MARY H. STEER, Hon. Supt.

THE SNOWDROP BAND.—A mission with this title has been formed, the members of which agree that, wherever they are, and in whatever company, they will, with God's help, earnestly try, both by example and influence, to discourage all wrong conversation, light and immodest conduct, and the reading of foolish and bad books. Those wishing to join should communicate with Mrs. Watson, Southwold, Tapton-crescent, Sheffield.

YOUNG MEN IN SHOREDITCH.

ON Thursday week two interesting meetings were held at the Shoreditch Town Hall in connection with the opening of the new and spacious building of the local Y.M.C.A. This branch has grown rapidly since its formation in February of last year, and in such a well-equipped home it ought to do splendid work for the young men of the neighbourhood. Mr. East, the secretary, reported that much blessing had already been experienced in connection with the work, and they were anticipating great things in their enlarged premises. The total cost of alterations and furnishing has been £800, and of this a considerable amount has yet to be made up.

Mr. George Williams presided at the afternoon meeting and Mr. Carter, Jun., in the evening. A number of local pastors and other friends representing different denominations were present, and cordial addresses were given in advocacy of the work.

BOUND FOR CHINA.

ONE of the party of China missionaries who left London on October 6, in the Kaiser-i-Hind, was Mr. J. A. Stooke, late secretary of the Y.M.C.A., Bath. Writing from the Suez Canal he sends some particulars of the voyage thus far. We extract the following:—

At Gibraltar four of our party landed, and visited the Soldiers' Home and Soldiers' Institute. Capt. Armstrong is a most earnest Christian worker. After looking over the Home and taking tea with him, he very kindly took us through the town to the new institute, superintended by Mr. George Holmes; here we joined in singing and prayer, commending the great work to our Father, God.

On Tuesday, October 18, we arrived at Port Said; all our party landed and made straight for the British and Foreign Bible Society Depôt, where we were most cordially received by the superintendent. Our guide led us through the town, including the Arab quarter and new mosque. This place is considered a second Sodom. In conversation with Messrs. Eoll and Francombe, they told us no one could estimate the iniquity carried on in this benighted place; almost every nation is represented. Our hearts ached, as we journeyed through the bazaars, to see the crowds—most of them gambling or lazily sitting about. Before boarding our steamer we enjoyed a happy time with our friends in the meeting-room here, and left earnestly longing that many labourers may give themselves to work amongst these various peoples.

Morning and evening on board we have prayer, Bible readings, and Chinese lessons. Whenever practicable, conversation is carried on with the passengers; they seem, however, extremely shy of us, as novels and cards are all the rage. On Sunday last we were pleased to see a large company at service in the second saloon, to whom we preached Christ and Him crucified.

FINSBURY Y.M.C.A.—An interesting tea and reception meeting was held at Finsbury Park Hall on Monday week, by the kindness of Mr. Gurney Sheppard. There was a hearty response to this gentleman's generous invitation, and a happy, profitable evening was spent. There were received into the ranks fifteen young men, nine as members, and six as associates.

PRAYER FOR TEMPERANCE.—A universal week of prayer for the revival of temperance effort is arranged to be held, under the auspices of the World's Women's Temperance Union, from November 7 to 13. The committee of the Union earnestly call upon all members of Christian churches in every land to unite in prayer and petition for the overthrow of the drink curse and opium traffic. It is specially urged that Saturday and Sunday, November 12 and 13 (the closing days of the week of prayer), should be the days on which the Church of Christ should earnestly take the lead, and ministers and others should preach and speak, as well as pray, for the speedy and manifested triumph of the temperance movement.

MR. SPURGEON and the BAPTIST UNION.

The withdrawal of the foremost preacher of the day from the Union of his denomination, is an event of very great significance and importance. It is like Moses removing the tabernacle from the midst of the people, and pitching it outside the camp. It is an impeachment, not indeed of the churches individually, but of the soundness in the faith of some of their ministers; and a reflection on the attitude of the influential and prominent men of the body, who naturally take the lead in the periodical assemblies of ministers and delegates. As such, it is of urgent necessity that the Union should define its position, and either clear itself of complicity with the unsound doctrine charged upon it, or avow itself as recognising and admitting it. We hope the deservedly respected President of the Union will feel the urgency of the case, and take such steps as he may deem advisable to meet it.

With the deepest personal regard for Mr. Spurgeon, and respect for his faithful courage, and sympathy with him in the disrespect so unworthily accorded to him from some quarters, we cannot but regret the step he has taken. We think the question should have been brought to a distinct issue, and a conference arranged between himself and those who feel with him, on the one hand, and the representatives of the Union, on the other. By his withdrawal Mr. Spurgeon leaves the field in the hands of the advocates of the views which he condemns, and the members of as many of the two thousand churches as have ministers holding the views which he describes, under the baneful influence of another Gospel which is not another.

Dr. Clifford has written an article in The Pall Mall Gazette, in which he replies generally as to the doctrines held, and expresses on his own behalf, and that of the Union, the greatest regard for Mr. Spurgeon. Had such a manifesto as this been officially made, it might have prevented Mr. Spurgeon's action. Even now it might lead to some correspondence or conference which may restore the Union as such to the confidence of the Christian public, and prove that the evil has not become so widespread as Mr. Spurgeon has supposed.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on missions, to be conducted by Rev. J. H. Haslam, M.A., at Ewell, to Nov. 9, and at Richmond, Nov. 12 to 16.——For blessing on a mission at the New Hall, Landport, Portsmouth, to Sunday, Nov. 6, being conducted by Mr. J. A. Vicary, of Bristol. ——For blessing on a mission in connection with the Y.M.C.A., Charlbury, from Nov. 10 to 27, conducted by Mr. George Andrews, of the Evangelisation Society.——Mr. Stephen Burrows desires earnest prayers for a mission tour in Ireland, and also in connection with his return to Naples in December.——For blessing on the coming Christian Convention, in Manchester, Nov. 22 and 23.——For blessing on a mission at St. Leonards-on-Sea. to be conducted by Mr. J. B. Bain, commencing on Nov. 9.

DEPARTURE OF MISSIONARIES.—A remarkable scene was witnessed at the Royal Albert Docks, Plymouth, on Thursday week, when over seventy missionaries, destined for China, Japan, and India, left by the steamer Khedive. They go out from the Church of England, Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, and China Inland Missions, and are the advance-guard of a large number of missionaries who will follow from these societies during the winter. A special train conveyed to the docks 450 friends of the voyagers, among them many distinguished gentlemen connected with the various societies. The scene on board and on shore when the Khedive moved off was very affecting, valedictory hymns being sung on the quays, and hearty cheers given, mingled with shouts of "God save China!" "God bless India!"

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. J. Mackenzie, late Deputy Commissioner for Bechuanaland.

As may be seen from our list of announcements, a meeting will be held in the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, on Monday, November 7, to welcome Dr. Barnardo on his return from Canada and the Great North-West.

We are informed that the students of the Pastors' College have passed a unanimous and hearty resolution in which they "repudiate statements that have been current insinuating that some of their number have tendencies towards a loose theological belief," and, whereas, they "express warm sympathy with their president (Rev. C. H. Spurgeon) in the bold stand he has taken for the truth of God against the evil which goes by the name of Modern Thought."

A very misleading statement with respect to Mr. Spurgeon and the London Baptist Association has appeared in The Freeman and other journals. The last quarterly meeting of the Association was held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. After the morning session the ministers dined together as usual, at the invitation of the pastor and his office-bearers. Mr. Spurgeon himself was too ill to be present, but his brother, Rev. J. A. Spurgeon, was there, and referred with deep feeling to the course of the "Down-Grade" controversy. Says The Freeman:—

> Subsequently Rev. James Douglas (of Brixton) proposed a resolution concurring in the views of Mr. Spurgeon, but it found no seconder.

If these last words were strictly correct, it would follow that Mr. Spurgeon stands almost alone among his London brethren of the same denomination. We are happy to say, however, on the authority of one who was present, that the phrase we have emphasised is an entire misrepresentation of the fact. The suggestion (it was not a formal motion) was not seconded, it is true, but only because it was impossible at the close of the dinner, when time was exhausted, to take up a subject involving debate. There are many Baptist pastors in London who deeply sympathise with Mr. Spurgeon in his loyalty to evangelical truth.

We have received from the Oxford and Cambridge University publishers copies of the Revised Version of the Holy Bible and of the New Testament which are now issued at much reduced prices. The Revised Version of the New Testament can now be obtained at 6d. and the Revised Bible at 1s. 6d. per copy, instead of 1s. and 3s. 6d. respectively, which have been the lowest prices hitherto.

We must mention some splendid new issues of the Old Version from the Oxford Press, Amen-corner. (1) An edition in pica, on India paper, printed to commemorate the fiftieth year of the reign of Queen Victoria — the lightest large type Bible ever published. (2) A bourgeois large 8vo. Oxford Fac-simile Series No. *1, with concordance, dictionary, compendium of natural history, &c. (3) The same, on India paper, without the addenda, making a most desirably light and convenient pulpit Bible. (4) A ruby 16mo. Revised Version, crown 8vo., a new and very convenient size. The best morocco editions of these books are recherché in the extreme.

The Daily News correspondent writes from Paris that he has read the advance sheets of M. Renan's "History of the Israelites." Before now this accomplished Frenchman has occasionally written more accurately than he was himself aware of. From the forecast of the forthcoming work we may look for much that will aid the defender in the conflict that is at hand respecting the Old Testament Scriptures. The wrath of man has been, all through history, made to praise God.

To the extraordinary demand from Canon Taylor, made at the recent Church Conference, that Christianity should be withdrawn from parts of Africa and Asia in favour of Mohammedanism, The Spectator has well urged that Islamism, with its serfdom and large concessions to lust, feeds every kind of natural pride, and exactly suits the passions of tropical regions, where men refuse to accept Christianity because of its precepts of chastity. The drink traffic which threatens Africa and Asia is not a product of but in spite of Christianity; and it is little less than scandalous that a clergyman should plead for a teaching which denies the mission of the Son of God.

If Canon Taylor before giving his lecture had consulted Indian missionaries he would have learnt that, instead of "Mohammedanism being an imperfect Christianity," it fosters a spirit of proud blasphemy against Christ, and while it teaches abstinence from strong drinks, it allows the use of maddening drugs. We shall probably hear more of his objection to modern missions that Christianity is "too spiritual." It will be an evil day when the Church listens to this veiled unbelief.

Writing with respect to the influence of Englishmen in India, a correspondent, lately in the Madras Civil Service, says:—

> As to the fact of Englishmen generally despising the Natives, few would question it. As proof, I would cite the difficulty that Lord Lawrence had in suppressing the use of the word "nigger," so constantly used in his presence. Sir George Trevelyan says that mutual sympathy and self-respect between the two races is simply impossible until there is a marked improvement in the tone of the Europeans. The Anglo-Saxon spirit of self-approbation becomes rampant in India. It is painful, indeed, to observe the deep pride and insolence of race which is ingrained in our nature, and which yields only to the highest degree of education and enlightenment. The lower in the scale of society, the more marked become the symptoms of that baneful sentiment. A native of rank, whom men like Sir John Lawrence or Sir Herbert Edwardes treat with the courtesy due to an equal, will be flouted and kicked about by any planter's assistant or sub-deputy railway contractor whose path he may chance to cross. In vain do the missionaries preach the Gospel of love, and humility, and self-sacrifice, so long as the Bengal Harkara preaches the gospel of national hatred, national insolence, and national cupidity. In vain does one class of our countrymen call the converts "Christian brethren," so long as another class persists in dubbing them "damned niggers."

These facts are deeply painful to the Christian mind, and they appear to us to emphasise the immense value of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society, which seeks to bring the Gospel to bear on this mass of English officialdom.

We learn with pleasure that the Cork Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals have warmly taken up the subject of the treatment of cattle during transit across the Channel. In our recent remarks on this subject we had the Atlantic cattle traffic specially in view; we should be glad to know that some society or person of authority is taking steps to ameliorate the condition of these dumb brutes during their two weeks' passage across the ocean.

We greatly regret to hear that Dr. Churcher, the medical missionary at Tangier of the Mission to the Kabyles, has sustained severe injury to his eyes. In the dark his face struck against a projecting iron bar, which smashed his spectacles into his eyes. He is now at Gibraltar under treatment. Our heavenly Father has surely not permitted this terrible calamity to happen to our beloved friend without some gracious purpose. Let us make united intercession that if it be the will of God his sight may be perfectly restored, and that this lamentable accident may be overruled for great blessing.

We have received a bewildering mass of correspondence relative to "A Prophetic Letter," which is for the most part very discursive, and would call forth a still larger number in reply. We have not space to pursue the subject. The fact remains that the exclusion of George Müller, and those in fellowship with him, is still the test of fellowship with the exclusive Brethren, though nearly forty years have passed away since the Darby-Newton controversy arose, and few of this generation know anything at all about it. Indeed, we never met a score of persons who had any intelligent knowledge of the errors charged against Mr. Newton, and which he more or less definitely retracted.

Those errors consisted in false conclusions drawn from the Psalms as to the wrath of God resting on the Lord Jesus on account of his connection with the race of Adam, and more particularly with his covenant people—Israel. Such mistakes would have been avoided, we believe, had it been remembered that the Son of God became incarnate, not by direct generation from Adam, but that He entered the human family by the direct interposition of Divine power. He was truly man, but He was the only One of his mother, the Choice One of her that bare Him. "That Holy Thing that shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." Glorious Edward Irving would never have conceived his outrageous error concerning Jesus, nor B. W. Newton the faint echo of it which he afterwards withdrew, had they remembered "the mystery of his holy incarnation."

In our judgment, God and time have decided John Darby's case against Bethesda, in George Müller's favour. For Mr. Darby increasingly lost spiritual power and influence from that time until he died; his course being marked, wherever he went, by divided families and unhappy homes; while George Müller has been increasingly owned and used of God, and honoured by his people; and at an age to which few men attain, is still evangelising round the world, leaving his spiritual children in all nations.

It is doubtless the fact that many truths expounded by the exclusive Brethren have largely influenced for good the evangelical Christians of this half-century; but had they remained in harmony with other Christians, instead of cutting them off, the influence of love would have been added to that of truth.

A correspondent, referring to the prevailing distress, writes to us as follows. We commend the suggestion to our readers as worthy of extended adoption:—

> Everyone will admit that exceptional need demands corresponding effort. May I tell you one way of helping that has presented itself to the mind of myself and a friend? We are accustomed to give presents to our dear ones at Christmas (as most people are who can at all afford to, I suppose); but this year we intend partially denying ourselves this pleasure, by giving gifts that cost less, and devoting the surplus to "charitable purposes."

When "A Bachelor" undertakes to give "hints on household management," one is tempted to exclaim, "Is Saul also among the prophets?" Yet the gentleman who makes this daring attempt in The Pall Mall Gazette of Saturday, says some things that seem to bear the test of criticism, viewed from the Christian standpoint, though they may be regarded as flat heresy by some. Referring to the vexed domestic servant question, he says:—

> At the outset I revise the formula, "No followers allowed," and read it thus: "Every facility given to well-authenticated followers." A lady recently told me that the one thing in her house she dreaded most was the sound of a man's voice in the kitchen. I replied that this was to me the most joyful of all sounds, provided I knew the owner of the voice, and was sure he came after the cook, and not after the spoons. When I know that an honourable courtship is going on in the kitchen, the house, to my mind, is etherealised. Recognise, dear ladies, that your servants have like passions with yourselves, that they hunger for love and sympathy, and look forward to marriage (even as you yourselves do) as the crown of earthly life. This is the one touch of nature that will bring you into contact with your servants.
> Secondly, I give three very necessary things to my maids—fresh air, exercise, and healthy pleasure. One day out a month is slavery, not honourable service. Don't you think the cook longs to change the glare of the kitchen grate for the glow of the sunshine, and the housemaid the dust of her brooming and cleaning for the sweet smell of meadow and hedgerow? It is absolutely necessary to be generous in this direction; sometimes I send the servants out in the carriage, or lend them my boat to row upon the river, and I always think that the housemaids sing all the more blithely, and the man whistles with more tuneful vigour, after an outing of this kind.

Other excellent doctrines this radical writer propounds, the decay of which may have something to do with the disrepute into which "domestic service" has fallen in these latter days. Of course there are two sides to this as to other questions; but on the whole we think that the heads of households have the solution of the problem very much in their own hearts and hands.

Miss Annie Macpherson desires to let her friends and correspondents know that she hopes to open the new house, 29, Bethnal Green-road, on Wednesday, November 16. Cards of invitation will be issued shortly. The old Home of Industry, 60, Commercial-street, will be continued another two years for work among young women and the Jewish population around.

Dr. Mivart's remarkable paper in The Nineteenth Century for July on "The Catholic Church and Biblical Criticism" has not been permitted to remain un-censured, and in the current number of The Dublin Review the Right Rev. Dr. Hedley gives the Roman Catholic professor a gentle hint that as a layman he is not qualified to deal with questions concerning ecclesiastical tribunals. "Liberality," says Bishop Hedley, "is a dangerous bait; the periodical press is a dangerous opportunity, and generalisations on theological questions are too often, in the hands of a layman, like the weapon of a savage, which comes back and hurts the man that casts it forth." Rome will permit Professor Mivart to deal with the anatomy of the frog, but it cannot permit him to deal with the Bible at first hand.

There were aspects of the ministerial Conference which last week was held at Hammersmith that merit attention. It took as its model the Conference held this time last year at Hastings, but differed from it. That was exclusively for Congregational ministers, whereas the one at Hammersmith was mainly for ministers of the locality—Wesleyan Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, and Presbyterians. We are told that not a jarring note was heard. All united in the same confessions, and all joined in the same solicitudes respecting the great world of evil on the one hand, and their consciousness on the other of utter insufficiency to meet it except by abiding in the truth, and by obedience to the leading and monitions of the Divine Spirit. Such a scene of union in prayer and identity in sentiment was very remarkable.

A few utterances in the Conference may be noted. "If ever the English Nonconformists come to doubt the plenary authority of Scripture then farewell to their spiritual strength." "The imperfect teaching of the evil of sin is the great defect of modern teaching." "No Holy Spirit, no church." "Over organisation is a present danger." "It is doing well, not much, that should be aimed at by ministers." "Disparagement of the past is a great temptation and danger." "No entertainment could give joy to true churches like the conversion of souls to God." "We cannot by unspiritual methods make the Gospel acceptable to unrenewed men." "It is the leaven of Sadduceeism that now forms the greatest peril of the Church."

The burning question of work for the working-man (who must not be hastily identified with the noisy demonstrators of Trafalgar square) is forcing itself to the front with startling rapidity, and must be faced at once. Owing to the constant stream of immigration from the country districts to the towns, the population of the latter is becoming terribly congested, and much destitution is one of the natural results. So long as the world lasts the poor will be always with us; but merely to relieve temporary distress does not go to the root of the matter. Apart from more purely Christian effort, an extensive and well-directed scheme of emigration would seem to be the present remedy.

A suggestion is made by a correspondent of The Times which, so far as it goes, sounds both reasonable and feasible. On the one hand are large numbers out of work, on the other very many of the employed are overworked, especially on the railways, tramcars, and omnibuses: why, he writes, should not these two evils, to some extent at least, cure each other? Let such a number of additional men be employed as will prevent more than a fair week's work being exacted from each in return for a week's wage. But it may be asked, "What of the dividends?" It does not, however, necessarily follow that these would be appreciably lowered, and shareholders would at least have the satisfaction of knowing that their profits were not being made at the expense of worn out human bodies and minds.

Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness are visiting the South of England. They hope at Eastbourne, Bournemouth, Torquay, and other towns to hold missionary and prophetic meetings. Miss Geraldine Guinness hopes, God willing, to go to China as a missionary early next year.

The Universal Week of Prayer for the overthrow of the curses of drink and opium, which is being inaugurated under the auspices of the World's Women's Temperance Union, is a welcome sign of the times. In these days of instantaneous communication by electric means, the scheme of simultaneous supplication all over the world is quite practicable, and the attempt thus to bring home to all minds the necessity of waging a determined war against these incalculable evils is one well deserving the warmest encouragement.

It is often highly instructive to "see ourselves as others see us;" and an article recently published in a French paper dealing with the habits of the working-classes in England affords much food for reflection. In it the writer remarks that on Saturday evenings and Sundays working men spend their time and money mostly in the ale-shops, the consequence being that for the rest of the week there is the utmost scantiness of solid food for the family. It suggests as a remedy that the wages should be paid either more frequently, or direct to the men's wives. The evil would be largely mitigated if wages were paid on Thursdays or Fridays instead of Saturdays, as the men knowing they must work as usual the following day would be less likely to drink to excess, and thus more money would reach their wives. As it is, men "drink their way home," and but too often a very small share of the wages reaches the home at all. We commend this suggestion to the consideration of all employers of labour.

We greatly regret that we are unable to report any real improvement in Mr. Denham Smith's state of health. Great prostration is still the predominant feature. He lies in much the same condition as a week ago, in that peaceful "waiting" attitude that has throughout been his, and sustained by the prayers of God's children, while cheered and comforted by their love.

The arrangements for the proposed General Conference on Foreign Missions, to be held in London in June next, are making satisfactory progress. Forty-eight British and Irish societies have appointed delegates to represent them, and it is expected that American and Continental societies will co-operate.

The great object of the Conference is to stimulate and encourage all evangelistic agencies, in pressing forward, in obedience to the last command of the risen and ascending Saviour. The ends aimed at may be classed under three heads:—(1) To turn to account the experience of the past for the improvement of the methods of missionary enterprise in the foreign field; (2) To utilise the experience acquired for the improvement, as far as possible, of the methods for the management of Foreign Missions in the home department; (3) To seek the more entire consecration of the Church of God, in all her members, to the great work committed to her by the Lord. A special subject for discussion will be:—"How to bring the influence of Christian men at home, and of missionaries abroad, to tell on the consecration of commerce, especially in its relation to heathen countries; a movement not less important and hopeful now than that which revolutionised the conscience and legislature of our country in the beginning of the century in regard to slavery.

Prayer is earnestly desired that the plans and arrangements may be such as will conduce most largely to the success of the movement. We trust our readers will further it in every possible way. Circulars may be had on application to the Secretary, General Conference on Foreign Missions, Bible House, 146, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C. Rev. J. Johnston, one of the secretaries, leaves for America this week, with a view to enlist the co-operation of Christians on the other side of the Atlantic.

The death of the head master of Uppingham, Rev. Edward Thring, deprives the nation of one of the ablest and most energetic of the educators of her youth. He was a born leader of men, and the respect and affection which he inspired in his boys is undoubtedly one of the noblest monuments that he has left behind him.

The three first meetings of the Sunday evening services at Exeter Hall, by Dr. Grattan Guinness, have been sealed with blessing. The inquiry-room has been crowded every night, and many we believe have been brought to a saving knowledge of the truth. The earnest prayers of our readers are desired on behalf of the young men who swarm by thousands in our London streets, that this effort may bring them by hundreds to Christ.

MR. H. THORNE AT BIRKENHEAD.

The visit of Mr. Henry Thorne to Birkenhead, to conduct a mission from October 9 to 24, in connection with the local Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., has been most successful in every way. A large number have been brought to rejoice in the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour, and it has been a time of refreshing to God's children. The feature of the mission has been the unity that has existed amongst the Christians of various denominations who have helped on the work. The interest in the meetings increased every day until, at the last meeting held in the Rink, upwards of 3500 people were present.

The meetings, for which special subjects were announced, drew large crowds, and the spacious hall could have been filled three times over to hear Mr. Thorne give the "Story of his Life." At the meeting for "Women only" an overflow service was addressed with much acceptance by Miss Greenwood, whose help was much valued all through the mission by her fellow-workers amongst the women. Every night workers have been busy in the inquiry-room, pointing anxious ones to the Lord Jesus Christ, and it has been the joy of all to see many going away rejoicing in the knowledge of sin forgiven, and of backsliders being restored.

A meeting was held on the 22nd to which those interested in Y.M.C.A. work were invited to discuss with Mr. Thorne the advisability of erecting a new building, the premises now occupied being altogether unsuited to the effectual carrying out of the work. A fund was opened, and nearly £800 was promised or guaranteed to be raised.

PALESTINE.—An account of work in connection with the Methodist Mission to Palestine is given in a little occasional paper which may be had of Rev. George Piercy, 276, Burdett-road, E. The workers (Mr. William Lethaby and his wife) are first limned, and we have then a graphic description of their present sphere of labour, and of the work itself, by Mr. Lethaby. This lies amongst all classes of people in that land of many peoples and tribes. The dispensing of medical skill and medicines is blended with instruction for little Arabs in day and Sunday-schools, and with the reading and explanation of the Scriptures, as opportunity offers. Some of the boys have become already proficient, and in more than one case the utmost eagerness is shown in seeking to know and understand the Scriptures.

REV. F. B. MEYER AT HASTINGS.

Mr. Meyer's first text here was Isaiah liii. 6 With rare power and sweetness did he tell of th lost sheep, and of what the Shepherd bore i order to bring it back. Towards the close of hi address, he repeated several times, "I am heale by his stripes." A thoughtful young man sa that night in the hall, and as these words wer repeated he was enabled to lay hold on them fo himself, and was saved on the spot. Now he i very happy in Christ.

Another night a young man, a Roman Catholic was at the meeting. Nothing was said in the address for or against the Church of Rome, but he saw himself a lost sinner, accepted Jesus as his Saviour. He has now joined a band of earnest Christian young men. A political friend of his was saved at Mr. New's mission a few months ago. Judge the surprise and joy of the latter at meeting our friend in a prayer-meeting last Monday night.

CHURCH HOME MISSION.

This Mission undertakes to send preachers in connection with the Church of England to hold occasional services in needy districts. Some gleanings from the last report may be of interest to our readers:—

"The meeting at —— on Friday evening was a meeting of great power, and was followed by a prayer-meeting. Altogether, I was very grateful for the blessing God evidently gave; so far as I know, there were no actual conversions, but believers seemed to have got a lift."

"That evening Mr. H. —— drove me across the hills to his mission-room, distant four and a half miles. There, at a small hamlet, in the midst of wild and bleak hills, there was a congregation assembled for the Mission service that ought to have delighted anyone—about fifty hardy-looking lime-burners, great, strong, powerful fellows, just the class of men one wishes so much to get hold of."

"I thought I would let you know that I thoroughly enjoyed the services; in fact, I think it was the happiest week I ever spent. I seemed to get completely lifted out of self, and as if a new power had taken possession of me that enabled me to plead with an earnestness that I never before experienced, and which was, I believe, blessed to some souls."

"I preached five sermons in churches, one sermon in schoolroom, and addressed the children in three schools. In addition, I was able to speak many 'words in season' to individual souls, and found good seed sown in former missions had not been sown in vain. I had one 'after-meeting,' and a large number stayed."

"In all the three places I visited the Church Home Mission is spoken of as a great blessing. Would that I could have preached with more demonstration of the Spirit and power! But the thought consoles me that the Lord can use the humblest instrumentality for the furtherance of his own glory. I much enjoyed my intercourse with the Lord's dear servants with whom I stayed at each place, and feel I was watered myself in endeavouring to water others."

The work is simple and unostentatious; it attracts sympathy from many faithful Christians, but is not done in the glare or excitement of popularity; it has continued now for thirty years, and has been graciously used by the Master for the conversion of sinners and the edification of saints. The treasurer of the Mission is Mr. F. A. Bevan. The honorary secretaries are Canon Cadman, Marylebone, and Dr. John Gritton, Sidcup, Kent.

THEATRICAL MISSION.—The Duke of Bedford has signified his interest in the work of the Theatrical Mission by forwarding to Mr. Courthope Todd, the founder and director, a cheque for £100 on behalf of the building fund of the Institute. By means of this liberal contribution the debt is reduced to a little over £2000.

FROM LONDON TO JOHN O'GROATS.

By GAWIN KIRKHAM.

Last February I went from London to Land's End, spending eighteen days in Devon and Cornwall, lecturing on my Dutch picture, "The Broad and the Narrow Way;" an account of that visit subsequently appeared in The Christian. As John o'Groats is usually associated with Land's End as the other extremity of the United Kingdom, it was but natural that the desire to see it also should spring up in the mind. In the providence of God the way was opened, and I started with my picture, taking with me Mr. Charles L. Young, the secretary of our Mildmay Auxiliary (open-air mission) whose devotion to the picture and its expounder has a touch of the romantic about it. The journey extended to 1773 miles, and occupied sixteen days. The picture was exhibited and explained thirteen times to about 5000 people in Dumfries, Edinburgh, Montrose, Aberdeen, Banff, Keith, Elgin, Lossiemouth, Dufftown, Nairn, Inverness, Tain, and Wick; bringing up the total number of expositions in eighteen years to 839.

THE SABBATH IN SCOTLAND.

A stranger in a new country is naturally on the look-out for points of comparison and contrast, and the more quiet and restful appearance of a Scottish city, compared with an English one, in reference to Sabbath observance, is very noticeable. We spent one Sunday in Aberdeen, and another in Inverness. To one accustomed to the bustle of London on the Lord's Day, the absence of vehicles on the streets and the general restfulness is very striking. Inverness specially excels in this respect, for I thought that the sound of wheels in Aberdeen was greater than when I visited it eleven years ago. And I gathered in conversation that the old method of observing the day of rest is gradually changing in the large cities. Even in quiet Inverness, with its lovely surroundings, the opening of the post office for the delivery of letters, and the arrival and departure of the mails, seemed out of harmony with the character of the day, though the time so occupied was but brief.

SCOTTISH PREACHING.

We were only permitted to hear two sermons, but they were so good that we longed to hear more. The first was in the Free South Church, Aberdeen, by Rev. George H. Knight, its minister, who discoursed with singular clearness, power, and tenderness on being risen with Christ (Col. iii. 1). Seldom have I heard the believer's standing put more forcibly, and if that was a fair specimen of pulpit teaching north of the Tweed, it will be a long time before there is a "Down-grade" controversy in Scotland. The other was in the United Presbyterian Church, Inverness, where, in the absence of Rev. George Robson, the pulpit was occupied by a Mr. Ross, whom we were informed was a member of the congregation and a student. If spared, he will undoubtedly be heard of beyond the congregation over which he may be placed; for, as he discoursed upon "the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith" (Matt. xxiii. 3), he displayed all the characteristics of an able preacher. There were accurate definition, careful analysis, pointed application, and fervent appeal; but if so obscure a hearer might venture to criticise so eloquent a preacher, I could not put away the suspicion that such a style of preaching is in danger of putting the hearer on the track of salvation by works, rather than magnifying the grace of God, which saves men through simple faith in Christ alone. I confess to a great liking for Scottish preachers. They may occasionally lack simplicity by a superabundance of learning, but there is a winsomeness of tone that touches a chord of sympathy in the hearer's breast.

THE FISHERMEN.

Two-thirds of my audience in the Public Hall at Lossiemouth were fishermen, and I never addressed so many at one time before. My sympathies were stirred on their behalf, because all that week the weather was so stormy they could not put to sea, and they were thus living in enforced idleness. But though there were so many with nothing to do, there was no hall or room where they could gather for either amusement or instruction, and they were thus left to the temptations of the public-house. Scotch people are well known to be "clanish," and the fishermen are no exception. They like to settle in the same part of the town, and I was told that it was a rare thing for them to marry outside their own community.

JOHN O'GROATS.

We were favoured with a fine day for our visit to John o'Groats. Wick was the furthest point of our route by rail, and we were driven the remaining eighteen miles. The name is preserved in a modern hotel, but the extreme point of land is a mile and a half further. This point, Duncan's Bay Head, is in some respects similar to the Land's End in Cornwall. The rocks in each case rise some one hundred feet from the sea, but here they are solid, level, and covered with turf, while there they are pointed, uneven, and jutt out in a sharp point into the sea. A lighthouse, or, rather, a double one, occupies the Skerries, an island off the mainland, as there; and further away we see the Orkneys, as at Land's End we see the Scillies. Shells innumerable lie on the beach, driven by the strong tide from the Atlantic through the Pentland Firth.

The visitors' books at the hotel contain many memorable names, though the leaf signed by the Prince of Wales has been stolen. We saw the familiar signature of Dwight L. Moody, the American evangelist, and the mound in front of the hotel, where the original John o'Groat's house stood, was pointed out as the spot where he preached when visiting the place in 1874.

SCOTTISH SCENERY.

As we followed the path of duty rather than pleasure, we did not see very much of picturesque Scotland; but some "bits" on the Highland railway between Nairn and Perth will long live in my memory for their autumnal beauty. Red flashes in the woods in the Pass of Killiecrankie, and about Dunkeld, reminded me of the American woods in autumn, while the golden leaves of the poplar, birch, sycamore, and beech were singularly unearthly in their dying robes. The Grampian Mountains, too, were impressive, as they showed their heads crowned with the newly-fallen snow.

A SCOTTISH WORTHY.

I have made notes of Sacramental fasts, Evangelistic Missions, Y.M.C.A. work, the Crofters, and other matters, but content myself with a closing reference to an interview with Hector Macpherson, who was Duncan Matheson's companion in the Crimea. He resides at Nairn, and, though 73 years of age, is singularly fresh considering what he has passed through; and his heart is so warm to the Lord on the one hand and to his fellow-creatures on the other, that it was a rare treat to hear him tell of the Lord's mercies, and recount his evangelistic efforts in the days of the late Duchess of Gordon, who gathered round her such a noble band of earnest workers. His recital of the revival of 1859 made us long for a renewal of those "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

HOW TO HELP THE POOR.—Sir,—Kindly permit me to inform your readers that I have arranged a system of tickets for lodgings, coal, bread, and cocoa, which are available in all parts of the metropolis, by which means the charitably-disposed can dispense their own bounty. Copies of these tickets, with full particulars, I shall be glad to send to anyone taking an interest in the destitute poor.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

John James Jones.

STEPPING STONES.

The raging torrent rushes by,
The night is dark, the storm is high;
To Thee, my God, I feebly cry,
"My strength is gone!"

From heaven He bends a listening ear;
"My child," He says, "you need not fear;
There lie beside you even here
The stepping-stones."

"But, O my God, I cannot see
My way, the end, or even Thee;
This storm is far too great for me—
My strength is gone!"

Again the loving voice replies:
"My child, why raise these bitter cries?
I tell you, close beside you lies
The stepping-stone.

"Those promises, so rich and sweet,
I gave, that your poor weary feet,
Just in your time of need, might meet
The stepping-stone.

"I know you cannot see my face,
But you can feel my wondrous grace,
If you will trust now, in this place,
The stepping-stone."

The raging torrent still is strong,
The night still dark, the storm still long;
But, Father, I can raise my song—
Thy strength is come.

THE GOSPEL IN BRAZIL.

Rev. Emanuel Vanorden, of Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil, has arrived in London, after an absence of ten years, in order to recruit his health, and, as far as he is able, to interest God's people in the great work he has at heart. Mr. Vanorden twenty-four years ago was converted in London, through the faithful labours of the late Dr. Ewald, of the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews. He completed his studies in the United States, and was ordained pastor of the Noble-street Presbyterian Church, of Chicago, and in connection with it opened a Sunday-school, which has now 750 names on its roll. The teachers still remember his good services, and annually send him some token of love to aid him in his work in Brazil, where he laboured first as a missionary of the Presbyterian Board, of New York, and for the last ten years as an independent worker in Rio Grande.

The Lord has blessed his work. He has been able to gather a congregation among the Roman Catholics, to publish 100,000 books, pamphlets, and tracts in Portuguese—towards which he has received valuable aid from the Religious Tract Society—and O Pregador Christao, an evangelical paper which has done good service for the cause of Christ. Missionaries of different societies labouring in Brazil have requested the Religious Tract Society to aid Mr. Vanorden in opening a Depository of religious matter in the City of San Paulo, the headquarters of Protestantism in that country, and to provide a Christian literature for the Brazilians, for which they believe him to be specially qualified.

Mr. Vanorden will spend only a few weeks in England and Scotland, and will return as soon as possible to his chosen field of labour. Communications may be addressed to care of Mr. M. H. Hodder, 27, Paternoster-row, E.C.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—On Thursday, Oct. 13, Rev. T. Cook concluded a twelve days' mission to this town, which has been greatly blessed to the awakening of the unconverted, and to the quickening of the Church. A striking feature of the mission has been the large attendance at the holiness meetings. These were held in another part of the town, at Church-road Chapel, and were attenby many members of other churches.

LADS' INSTITUTE, RATCLIFF.

The work among rough lads in Ratcliff-highway was resumed on Tuesday last week. The object is to provide a bright and cheerful place in which these lads between fourteen and twenty years of age may spend their evenings, and be provided with healthy recreation and occupation of mind, the chief aim being to win them for Christ.

Ladies and gentlemen having an hour or two to spare on any evening of the week will be cordially welcomed, as workers are much needed. Mr. J. T. Isaac, hon. sec., Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George's-street, E., will be glad to hear from anyone willing to assist in any way in this most important work.

SWEDISH MISSION ON THE CONGO.

An interesting letter comes to us from Mr. K. J. Pettersson, Swedish missionary, who writes from Kibunsi Station, in the Congo Free State, on September 12. After thanking the many friends in England and America who have sent to him books and papers during his five years' residence on the Congo, Mr. Pettersson relates the circumstances under which the Swedish Mission there was commenced. A desire having arisen among the friends of the Swedish Society to have some share in Central African Missions, it was at first contemplated to combine with the Livingstone Inland Mission. That Mission being transferred to the American Baptist Mission, the Swedish organisation, which is an unsectarian one, resolved to take an independent course. The writer proceeds :—

"In August, 1886, Mr. Westlind and three new brethren were sent to take up the work at Mukimbungu, which was transferred from the American Mission. Here Mr. Westlind had laboured for about four years before his return to Europe. A number by this time had been converted, and a few confessed Christ by baptism. In April last two more new brethren and myself were sent to join the number already in the field. Since our arrival we have made preparations to open a new station on the north bank of the Congo, Mukimbungu being on the south bank. This new station we are calling Kibunsi Station, after the name of the chief town in the district. I may say that the station is really opened, as two of the brethren are already there living among the natives in native huts in the chief town, until I return from my trip to the coast, where I have been to engage workmen, and to make other necessary arrangements. I am now on my way up river, and shall be up there in two weeks more.

"There are now quite a number of converts in the towns surrounding Mukimbungu. Many have come and settled round the station, where they have built their houses on an improved scale. In the day time we have a school with a large number of boys and young men, and also an advanced class, with evangelists, who, part of the day, go round the towns preaching. Every other evening we have a school with thirty to forty young women, who are very eager to learn. I wish every friend of the Mission in Europe could have the opportunity to see these women, their babies with them, spending two hours in the evening after a day's hard labour in the gardens, eagerly trying to learn to read, as they so much wish to be able to read the Word of God for themselves.

"The other evenings in the week, not occupied with this school, there is a meeting, open to all, when the evangelists give short addresses, and with others, who may feel so inclined, engage in prayer, interspersed with hymns. At these meetings some frequently stand up, and throw away their idols, saying they do not need them any more as they have found all they require for salvation and preservation in Christ. We have really times of much blessing.

"The address of our Society in Sweden, in case any inquiries would be desirable, is Swenska Missionsförbundets Expedition, 17, Kungsgatan, Stockholm, Sweden."

A FAITHFUL PREACHER.

George Hughes, the lecturer of Allhallows Church, Bread-street, who was ejected from the vicarage of St. Andrew's, Plymouth, on St. Bartholomew's Day, 1662, was a very popular preacher while in London. On May 26, 1647, he was invited to preach before the House of Commons at St. Margaret's, Westminister. His sermon contained some exceedingly frank language concerning the character of a few of the legislators. Quoting Proverbs xxix. 2, "The people must mourn when the wicked beareth rule," he added: "They say there are such among you, if I may speak in usual terms, impious, childish, cockpit counsellors. If so, such are bad trustees for laws, liberties, and religion. A Roman or Spartan State would provide against some of these, and not hazard kingdoms in the hands of fools."

He then went on to say that he was afraid the famous Long Parliament had not only some foolish, but some grossly immoral men among its members. The others excused the presence of such among them by saying that "the people sent such, they themselves were not electors." Mr. Hughes thereupon expressed a devout wish that the majority of the House had the power to get rid of a black parliamentary sheep. "Such," said he, "will vote God from among you. Let the sight of one root of bitterness among you humble you." "Methinks it is possible for a Christian Parliament, by a law, to purge and prevent such profane, paganish leaven, and to honour Christ's kingdom so much as to make gross sin uncapable of a membership among you."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE CHRISTMAS LETTER MISSION.

Dear Sir,—Begun in 1871, in the district of St. Mark's, Brighton, this Mission has extended to almost all the hospitals, infirmaries, workhouses, &c., of the kingdom; while parochial and district distributions, and others to railway-men, navvies, postmen, miners, soldiers, sailors, &c., &c., have been extensively organised. It is calculated that considerably more than three millions of these illustrated Gospel letters have carried out the Christmas message since the commencement of the work.

We shall be happy to supply full particulars to any of your readers applying to my address; but my special object in writing is to enlist co-operation in the supply of the Christmas Letters (printed by Messrs. Hazell, Watson & Viney, 6, Kirby-street, Hatton-garden) for the workhouses and infirmaries of London, and many of the Northern Counties. Several of these are in need of organisers. The work has outgrown the workers; and throughout the kingdom helpers are required who will organise for single institutions, or who will, from the ease and quiet of home, by procuring, folding, and sending out the Christmas Letters and Cards to their destinations, or to receiving secretaries, help forward the distribution. Children will be gladly welcomed in sending out the illustrated anecdotal letters to other children less certain than themselves of the greetings of Christmastide, and who receive no other letter in the year.

E. Steele Elliott,
Hon. Sec. and Treasurer.
66, Mildmay-park, N.

SEAMEN IN ITALY.—Sir,—We are embarking upon an enterprise in Genoa and in Savona, which, I trust, may prove of use to our British seamen; we need help from home, however, in order to make it very efficient. In Genoa from fifteen to twenty British steamers may be found any day of the week; these steamers represent from three to four hundred men. We have taken some well-situated rooms; yet before reaching them the sailors must pass several wine shops. To offer a counter-attraction with any hope of success, we must have our rooms bright and warm, and well furnished with books, papers, and games. At Savona, we have hired an old room, upon which much must be spent in repairs and in furniture; there, as in Genoa, there are the same flourishing wine-shops with which to contend.—Yours,

Genoa. A. E. Carey, English Chaplain.

Mission Appeals.

Union Hall Mission.—I have opened a special fund for supplying food, coals, and clothing to the poor in the localities of the six halls of this Mission. I am now giving fifty gallons of excellent soup twice a week.—Robert Bilke, Director, Greenhill-road, Harlesden, N.W.

Kensal Green.—Could you ask your numerous readers if they could send us parcels of left-off clothing that we may make them into garments for the many poor children who already suffer from the severity of the climate in Kensal Green and neighbourhood. If addressed to above address they will be received with many thanks. We work in connection with College-road Wesleyan Mission.—H. Nicholls, 32, College-road, Harrow-road, W.

The Famine in Central Turkey.—Sir,—I have received in all up to this date £443 7s. 7d. for the Adana Famine Relief Fund, and £11 for the sufferers at Zeitoon. Those sums have been transmitted to the Treasurer at Constantinople. The flow of liberality in this country has, to all appearance, entirely ceased, but it ought to be made known that the distress is daily increasing, and bids fair to end in widespread starvation. The prospect for the winter is appalling. Gifts of warm clothing, new or partially worn, and of material for clothing, will be gladly received by Mrs. Dr. Small, 3, Stanley-gardens, Notting-hill, W., and money help may be sent to me.—(Rev.) T. W. Brown, Secretary, Turkish Missions' Aid Society, 32, The Avenue, Redford Park, Chiswick, S.W.

Clerkenwell.—For twenty-six years I have been labouring as a Christian minister in the poorest of our East-central district, St. Luke's and Clerkenwell. I am personally acquainted with scores in the greatest privation and want. Their rags and hunger and cold appeal to Christ's disciples. I am without means of responding to the cry. When enabled to help I always do so regardless of creed or no creed: many Romanists and Infidels have not been overlooked. My plan is first widows and fatherless, then those whose husbands are prostrate in sickness. I ask for help in money or clothing. Philip Gast, Pastor of Spencer-place Chapel, Goswell-road; address 12, Noel-street, Islington, N.

Y.W.C.A., Dawlish.—As the building in this town hitherto known by the title "Our Room," has been announced for sale, the Committee feel it very desirable that it should be secured for their use. The sum necessary for this purpose is £750, the rest of the purchase money (£500) being left as a mortgage on the building. Mrs. Henry Gamble, President of the Torquay Branch of the Y.W.C.A., has kindly promised £150; other friends sums amounting to £90. Mrs. Fiske, hon. secretary, Y.W.C.A., The Bartons, Dawlish, will gladly receive donations.

Ham-yard Soup Kitchen (Ham-yard, Great Windmill-street, Haymarket, W.).—The Committee earnestly appeal for increased support for the daily work of the Institution. It is open all the year. The Hospice contains twenty beds for cases of temporary distress, poor convalescents, and others of good character, who need a helping hand to regain employment. Each family registered for relief receives two quarts of good nourishing soup, and at least two pounds of bread, three times a week, for the period recommended. This improved system of relief prevents all abuses, such as the sale of tickets and overlapping. Penny dinners are provided for boardmen in the kitchen, and for children to take home.

Hospital for Women and Children (9 and 32, Lupus-street, S.W., near Victoria Station).—Sir,—May I appeal on behalf of the poor in connection with our Out-patient and Maternity Departments. I was recently called in to a case of great poverty of a woman about to become a mother. She had been obliged to pawn almost everything she had in order to get even one meal. I found her on a mattress, in the corner of a very dirty dark room—no bedstead; quite unable to rise from it, and not knowing where to look for relief. She had been charing up to the very last. This is but one of hundreds of similar cases. Any contributions towards relieving the suffering poor during this severe weather, in either money, blankets, coals, dinner tickets, cast-off clothing, &c., will be thankfully received by Dr. G. de G. Griffith, 34, St. George's-square, S.W.; or by myself. I shall also be glad to see any visitors.—A. B. Rees, Lady Superintendent Hospital for Women and Children, 9, Lupus-street.

BISHOP TAYLOR writes that it is impossible to secure the necessary force of carriers to transport his goods, and that he needs a traction steam-engine and waggons, a couple of ferry barges, and a steam barge, to run the eighty-eight miles of the Congo from Isangala to Manyanga. The Bishop has now working under him in Africa, on the West Coast and on the Congo, about one hundred missionaries, besides a party of twenty-six now on their way out, and constant reinforcements which he is receiving.

The Book World.

Our Holiday Hours. 1s. Cassell & Co. An attractively-bound volume, containing thirty-eight full page, well executed illustrations, with descriptive stories in words of two syllables. A remarkably cheap book.

Dibs, by Joseph Johnson (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society), is an exceedingly pathetic and graphically told story of "city Arab" life in London, showing how real human jewels may be found in strange places, and fashioned by those who will patiently search for them. The illustrations are vigorous and true to the life.

The Pictorial Geography of the British Isles, by Mary E. Palgrave (5s. S.P.C.K.), is a truly fascinating work, containing the crême de la crême of the beauty spots so profusely scattered throughout these favoured isles, with excellent descriptive letter-press. As a book for the drawing-room table we scarcely know of anything better in this department of literature.

Christianity and Evolution: Modern Problems of the Faith. 6s. James Nisbet & Co. This book cannot fail to interest those who inquire into the relations between science and religion. It is made up of a number of articles dealing with the vexed question of Evolution, and its central position is that the ascertained facts of Evolution do not fight against Christian faith. We cannot go the length of homologating every statement—some of the writers seem to us to yield too much—but we can and do commend the articles to the careful consideration of men whose beliefs have been clouded by the scepticism bred of "scientific" speculation.

Non-Biblical Systems of Religion. 6s. James Nisbet & Co. The so-called Science of Comparative Religion is attracting a good deal of attention at present. Knowing this, the wideawake editors of The Homiletic Magazine persuaded some scholars of undoubted ability to hold a symposium on old and new faiths of the world in the pages of their monthly. The result was a series of articles full of information conveyed in an interesting manner, and as comprehensive as the limits under which they were written permitted. These articles are now reprinted in a handsome volume, which should not only give knowledge to its readers, but should also create in their hearts a strong desire to carry light to the races which sit in darkness and under the shadow of death.

The Expositor's Bible. Edited by Rev. W. R. Nicoll, M.A. The Gospel according to St. Mark. By the Very Rev. G. A. Chadwick, D.D., Dean of Armagh. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Revived interest in Biblical exposition is a gratifying feature of our times. In addition to numerous volumes on single books of the Bible, we have Dr. Parker's People's Bible, and now a new series has been most successfully begun. The programme is inviting. Expository lectures—scholarly and evangelical—adapted to the general reader as much as to the clergy, and written by the foremost preachers and theologians of the day, are promised by the editor. If the volumes to come be like the one before us, they may be sure of a warm welcome. Dr. Chadwick has caught something of the vividness of style and onward rush which characterise the writer he expounds. Sober in judgment, markedly Scriptural in tone, well acquainted with exegetical lore, and qualified by patient investigation to give an individual opinion on disputed points, he makes good his claim to help and instruct students of Mark's Gospel.

The New Purgatory, and other Poems. By E. A. Chapman. 4s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin. We are not prepared to stand sponsor for the orthodoxy of this clever lady, though of her literary gifts and imaginative faculty there can be no doubt. In the title-poem the crafty Jezebel is represented as being the special protector, in the ethereal world, of the prophets of the Lord she cruelly persecuted on earth; while Nero, who fiddled when Rome was burning, is a paragon of love and tenderness, and the patron saint, so to speak, of innocent little children. In neither case do we find the faintest hint of purifying fires of any sort. This "New Purgatory" appears to be altogether a delightful place, and its author is far in advance even of the teachers of a "second probation." Some of the smaller pieces are beautifully pathetic, but in many cases Miss Chapman's muse seems to soar on such high pinions that she cannot discern the sterner elements of human life and experience. We cannot commend her as a safe spiritual guide for ordinary sinful mortals; on the plane of merely human affection and sympathy she is an admirable companion.

Is there Salvation after Death? A treatise on the Gospel in the Intermediate State. By E. D. Morris, D.D, LL.D., Lane Theological Seminary. Hodder & Stoughton. 6s. An able and scholarly discussion on the orthodox side of this momentous subject.

The Story of a Surrender (Partridge, 6d. doz.) is the title of a personal narrative by Mr. G. B. Studd, the younger brother of the quondam cricketer. He is in China, and Mr. Stanley Smith writes to Rev. J. T. Wrenford that "he is coming with his brother Charley to us at T'ai-yüen."

A reminder of the waning year comes to us with the issue of the "Christmas Numbers" of "Good Words" and "Sunday Magazine." Good Cheer, by Mr. Fargeon, is a story of love, jealousy, crime, remorse, and punishment. Little Snowflakes contains a varied collection of "Christmas Tales and Talks with the Young."

Factors in Life. H. G. Seeley, F.R.S. S.P.C.K. Under the three heads of Health, Food, and Education, Prof. Seeley gives in plain language many valuable counsels. "Mens sana in corpore sano" is the greatest earthly boon man can enjoy, and those who teach men how to attain it are universal benefactors.

The Children of Madagascar. By Mr. H. F. Standing, Friends' Foreign Mission Association (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society), should find its way into all our Sunday-school libraries. It is sure to be eagerly read, and, after its perusal, no boy or girl can fail to have such an intelligent apprehension of this important mission field as will compel practical interest in after years. We recently gave a pathetic extract from the book as to child slaves in Madagascar.

Building for God. By Mrs. Alex. Russell Simpson. 1s. James Nisbet & Co. This is another little book by the well-known author of "Steps thro' the Stream," "Wells of Water," &c. There is an earnestness and a fervent spirituality running throughout it which will make it a welcome guest in many a home. Moreover, it abounds in illustrations, many of which, though not all, are both apt and fresh. Speakers and teachers who get this book, and search for some of these, will be well repaid.

A Handbook to the Epistles of St. Paul. By Rev. C. H. Waller, M.A. 5s. Shaw & Co. This writer has already won the appreciation of thoughtful Christians by his previous works, but the present volume, covering as it does so large a portion of the New Testament, will be found eminently useful for purposes of reference and study. It gives a terse and succinct view of the arguments and exhortations with which the great Apostle has so powerfully moved the Church of God, and the analysis is a great help in considering the Epistles in detail. It is worthy of careful and thoughtful attention, and cannot fail to enlighten and profit its readers.

Eternal Scenes from the Poets, and their Views of the After-Life. By J. Waldyve Willington, F.R.H.S. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. A more fitting title would be, "Poetical Guesses at the Future of Man." Passages on death and eternity, from Shakespeare, Milton, Dante, Goethe, Byron, Wordsworth, Longfellow, Tennyson, &c., are connected by a running commentary. The writer gives to Wordsworth a deserved prominence, but quotes lamentably few poems distinctively Christian; while inspired poets, such as Isaiah, David, and John, are not appealed to at all. Mr. Willington's own views of the eternal state are certainly misty, and the general effect of the book is somewhat depressing.

Faint yet Pursuing, and other Sermons. By Rev. E. J. Hardy. 6s. T. Fisher Unwin. If we had been among the hearers of these discourses we should have grumbled greatly at one thing—their brevity. Mr. Hardy is not a systematic theologian, but he is a most effective and pleasing teacher of Christian ethics, the fruit of Christian love and trust. This volume is full of the very pith and marrow of true and undefiled religion. Those who have read the author's popular book, "How to be happy, though married," will expect to find here practical exhortation expressed in a striking and attractive way. But they will find, besides, true spiritual insight, concentrated wisdom, and a most reverent handling of the greatest of themes.

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. are about to publish a new work by Dr. H. Lansdell, entitled, "Through Central Asia." The book gives in narrative form much that has been published in a more detailed and statistical manner in the author's larger work; adding, however, several engravings, and retaining the allusions to patriarchal and Persian customs which throw light on the ethnography of the Scriptures.

An impressive Gospel address, delivered by Mr. H. Wreford, in the Victoria Hall, Exeter, on the theatre fire in that city, and its lessons, is published by Mr. W. Walters, 53, Paternoster-row (1d.).

The late Hon. Ion Keith-Falconer.—Rev. Robert Sinker's Life of the late Hon. Ion Keith-Falconer is already well advanced, and promises to be of unique interest. It will be published during the coming spring by Messrs. Deighton, Bell & Co., of Cambridge and London.

Messrs. Wymann & Sons announce the publication, in November, of a new Illustrated Monthly Magazine, price fourpence, entitled "Baby, a Magazine for Mothers, and those who have the care of Children, being a guide to their Management in Health and Disease."

Messrs. Whightman & Co., 104, Regency-street, Westminster, S.W., have published a new and improved edition, price one penny, of their useful little manual on Arithmetical Tables. It seems to contain everything that one ought to know with respect to the computations common in all departments of daily business and home life.

The Witness of Sceptics to the Truth of the Bible (1d.) is a valuable addition to the Anti-Infidel Library, by Mr. H. L. Hastings, published by Houghton & Co. In parallel columns with the Scriptural prophecies are quotations from the writings of eminent sceptics like Gibbon and Volney, which attest the completeness of their fulfilment. The compilation, as well as a series of leaflets entitled "Grapeshot," will be of great service in the war against infidelity.

A most admirable little pocket companion is The Ambulance Pupil, by a member of the St. John's Ambulance Association. Crosby, Lockwood & Co., Stationer's Hall Court. The writer gives, in a clear and succinct form, first a summary of elemental physiological information, and then simple instructions how to act in cases of accident and misadventure, or sudden seizure by illness. There certainly ought to be a copy of this handy and compendious instructor in every household.

The Hexaglot Bible.—A company is being formed having for its object the republication of the Hexaglot Bible; which, as many of our readers will be aware, means the Bible in six languages. It is intended to produce the six quarto volumes, of which the work is composed, at the cost of three guineas, one-fourth of the original price. Of the value of the work to the Biblical student there cannot be the slightest doubt. Hebrew, Greek, Latin, English, German, and French, are arranged in parallel columns, all visible at a single opening. By running the eye along the lines, the skilled reader is able to compare the original Hebrew with the Greek of the Septuagint, the Latin of Jerome, the German of Martin Luther, the French of David Martin, and the English of the Authorised Version. There is scarcely an instance in which such a comparison does not throw light upon, and bring out more clearly, the sense of any passage thus put under review. Such a use of the work may be more instructive than the perusal of any commentary.

NOVEMBER MAGAZINES.

THE CENTURY.

In this issue, which opens a new volume (T. Fisher Unwin), the beginning and the end of the disastrous Civil War are focussed in a remarkable way. The instalment given of Lincoln's Life is that in which we find him at his Ohio home, between his election to the Presidency and his assumption of office. The noble and statesmanlike way in which he bore himself in that great crisis of his country's history, shows his great qualities, and proves that he was the man for the hour. "Grant's Last Campaign" is the war paper, and we have seldom read anything more pathetic in the annals of national strife than the account of the interview between General Grant and General Lee, when the latter surrendered his vanquished Southern army into the hands of his victorious but magnanimous opponent. The story is most admirably told by Col. Porter, himself one of the leading actors in the drama. Those who would form a just and unbiassed opinion of the so-called "Nihilistic" uprising in Russia ought to read the paper entitled "The Last Appeal of the Russian Liberals." The writer proves beyond doubt that this opprobrious term has been wrongly applied to many "who seek to obtain reforms by peaceable and legal methods." In this country, at least, we cannot be indifferent to the movements that are convulsing Russian society. We learn with pleasure that the writer of this paper, who has spent some years in Siberia, among the exiles, is about to give in The Century the results of his investigations.

From the same publishing house comes St. Nicholas, which has a beautifully illustrated and informative paper on "Elephants at Work." The young people who like "excellent fooling" will get it here in abundance.

GOOD WORDS.

Mr. G. Holden Pike tells in brief the story of Mr. George Hatton's labours in Central London, especially the efforts among discharged prisoners, which have justly earned the approval of the authorities. This work is carried on so quietly, that it does not receive the public attention or the support that it deserves. The editor contributes some excellent short readings on "God glorified in Common Life."

SUNDAY MAGAZINE.

Archdeacon Farrar has a paper on "The Seraphim and their Six Wings." On this he founds an exhortation to reverence, modesty, and zeal in the servants of God. Mr. Pike recalls some of the philanthropic doings of the late Princess Alice. Flora Shaw contributes the first part of a descriptive account of Tangier, finely illustrated. Mrs. Reaney gives a very attractive picture of the Convalescent Home at Folkestone for poor East-enders, which has grown out of her Sunday afternoon services at Stepney. Under the caption of "An English Boy," Mary Harrison tells over again the story of young Edwin Bainbridge and his tragic death. She says:—"New Zealand will never again hear the name of Tarawera without thinking of the name of the simple English boy who saw its tremendous doom, and calmly preached and prayed and wrote, thinking of his comrades and of his friends at home, and conducting himself tenderly, bravely." In his "Monthly Survey," the editor refers to the "Down-Grade" controversy, and thinks Mr. Spurgeon has to a great extent taken divergences in expression for divergences in faith.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Our Little Dots. 2s. Religious Tract Society. With short pretty stories of easy reading, in large type, and full of excellent pictures, this is just the book to rivet the attention of the little ones.—The Child's Companion. 2s. Religious Tract Society. This old-established magazine for children keeps pace with its many compeers. The stories are sound and interesting, and the illustrations are excellent.—The Child's Pictorial. S.P.C.K. The great feature of this serial is the coloured pictures, and in the completed volume these make a splendid show. No child who possesses a copy will be likely to spend a dull evening this coming winter.—Early Days (2, Castle-street, E.C.) excellently combines instructive and entertaining literature with pictorial illustration.—The budget of Messrs. Partridge & Co.'s annuals is fully up to the usual mark, and that is saying much. There is nothing to beat them for a due admixture of solidity and artistic skill.—The Infant's Magazine is a perfect picture gallery for the nursery pets.—The Children's Friend caters splendidly for the boys and girls.—The Friendly Visitor and Family Friend well justify their names, and ought to find a ready entrance into the homes of Old England. All the foregoing can be had in different bindings, 1s. 6d., 2s., and 2s. 6d. each. Nothing new can be written in praise of the long-established favourites, The British Workman and The Band of Hope Review, which have done so much, year by year, to further the interests of temperance among the toiling masses.— Little Folks (3s. 6d. Cassell & Co.) is the very aristocrat of children's magazines not of an exclusively religious character; unless, indeed, we place on a par with it St. Nicholas (half-yearly volume, 8s., T. Fisher Unwin), which, perhaps, bears off the palm from a purely artistic point of view. Our American friends seems to keep ahead of us in delicacy and brilliance of illustration, as well as piquancy of prose matter.—For a wonderful combination of the philanthropic, the practical, and the pictorial it would be hard to beat Dr. Barnardo's Our Darlings (3s. and 5s. Shaw & Co.). It makes a superbly handsome volume.—The Cottager and Artisan (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society) is replete with Gospel stories, poems, and bright household reading. It contains a large number of excellent illustrations, amongst them being one of the best portraits of the Queen which we have come across.—Little Star. Stoneman. Admirably adapted for the very young; full of pictures and simple stories which they will readily appreciate. It has an attractive exterior, and should find its way into many tiny hands.—The Welcome Hour. E. W. Allen. This year's volume equals its predecessors, and that is saying much; for "The Welcome Hour" has a high reputation to keep up. Its historical sketches and notes of travel are especially good. —Sunshine. Edited by W. M. Whittemore, D.D. G. Stoneman. This bright little periodical is full of sunshine, truly, and it will bring light and gladness in many to homes. The pretty pictures, the interesting stories, and the good wholesome teaching in every page, make it a real boon for our young people.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Messrs. J. F. Shaw & Co.:—Brave Hearts and Willing Hands; Lessons for Workers from Nehemiah, Haggai, and Ezra, by Captain Dawson.—The Love of the Father; Sermons on the Parable of the Prodigal Son and other subjects illustrative of the Fatherly Love o God, by Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken, M.A. 3s.

Mr. J. E. Wilson, 21, Cornhill, E.C.:—God and I: A Manual of Devotion, compiled from the Book of Psalms. Third Edition.

Messrs. Marcus Ward & Co., Limited, Farringdon-street, E.C.:—Christ, the Life of Lives, and other Poems, by Rev. W. Wallace Brown.

Messrs. Macniven & Wallace, 138, Princes-street, Edinburgh:—Personal Reminiscences and Biographical Sketches, by the late Rev. James Dunbar. With a brief Memoir by his Wife.

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton:—The Judge's Sons, by Mrs. E. D. Kendall. 2s.—Candalaria: a Story of The Rocky Mountains, by J. Owens. 3s. 6d.—More True than Truthful, by Mrs. Clarke. 5s.

Messrs. Gall & Inglis:—Muriel; or, Ways and Means, by M. Vandegrift.—Fairy in a Spider's Web, by A.L.O.E. —Struggling Upward, by S. J. Jones.—Where to say No, by Rose Terry Cooke.—Larry Gilbert, by S. K. Reeves.—Marley Hall; Sandy Ross; Felix; Arctic Stories; The Cousins.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Very heavy failures are announced in the Scotch whisky trade.

The United Kingdom Railway Temperance Union reports a successful year.

In the Congregational Union there are now 400 more abstainers than non-abstainers, a great increase over two years since.

The Western Temperance League held its fiftieth anniversary at Sheet, Somersetshire. It has now 400 branches in affiliation.

Rev. William Mottram, who succeeds the late Rev. G. M. Murphy at Borough-road, and at the Lambeth Baths, has been a member of the Western Temperance League for twenty-two years.

The Aberdeen Trades' Council have agreed to join the temperance workers in trying to secure candidates for the vacant seats in the Town Council who are not connected with the drink interest.

Prisoners leaving Strangeways Prison are invited to refreshments at the Boys' Refuge near, and advised for their good. The temptation to resort at once to the public-house is thus much weakened.

Under the auspices of the Women's Union, Church of England Temperance Society, a course of lectures on the "Right and Wrong use of Stimulants" is being delivered by Dr. Schofield at Hampstead.

The Bishop of Southwall addressed a letter to each clergyman in Derbyshire, asking them to preach sermons and make collections on October 30, in aid of the Church of England Temperance Society.

We know a godly grocer who, on retiring from that business for another, waited months and refused tempting offers rather than consent to his successor having a grocer's drink licence. The house was his own. We commend his example to any in similar circumstances.

Dr. Norman Kerr writes expressing his deep regret at the recent warning by the Bishop of Bedford against the use of unintoxicating wine at the Holy Sacrament. The doctor believes if the bishop knew the hard fight "converted inebriates" have to make he would change his opinion.

The Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association was founded twelve years ago. The basis is Christian but unsectarian, and the object to teach self-control and self-denial, especially as exemplified by giving up stimulants of all kinds. The Police Court Mission has been at work three and a half years. Upwards of 3000 women and girls have had kindly words and offers of help given them. More than 7000 temperance pledges have been taken, and those who have signed have been watched over and strengthened in their efforts to lead a new life.

FOREIGN.

Measures for the establishment of an Imperial Health Bureau, and for reform of the spirit excise law, are to be brought before the Austrian Reichsrath next session.

The Toronto Exhibition has been distinguished by the absence of drink bars. The law was amended a year or two since to prohibit the sale of liquor at such exhibitions, and the effect at Toronto has been most beneficial.

The inhabitants of Salem, Massachusetts, have just unveiled a statue to the great apostle of temperance, Father Mathew, and the Boston newspapers have been rejoicing over the fact that Romanist and Protestant could unite in doing honour to such a man. Strange to say, in the city of Cork where Father Mathew was born, and where he laboured with such remarkable success, his statue is remarkable for the fact that it is surrounded by a network of spirit shops, the meshes of which continue to increase in number.

WESLEYAN WEST CENTRAL MISSION.—The following are the weekly engagements in connection with this Mission:—St. James's Hall—Fridays, at 12 o'clock, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse; at 7.30 p.m., Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. Sundays, at 11 a.m., Rev. Mark Guy Pearse; at 3.30 and 7 p.m., Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. Wardour Hall—Mondays, at 8 p.m., Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. All seats free. Collection at every service and meeting.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mrs. Janet Clark (of Streatham) conducte services at the Baptist Chapel, Lower Tooting, o Monday and Tuesday evening of last week. good number of prople attended, and very earnestl listened to the words of life, so simply and effectively spoken and sung.

Mr. J. M. Scroggie in Glasgow.—The evangelistic services being conducted in the east end o Glasgow by Mr. Scroggie grow in earnestness an numbers as the work proceeds. One speciall gratifying feature has been the attendance o young men. Many have decided for Christ.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken has concluded a mos successful mission in Luton, in which there ha been much blessing. His next mission is in hi old parish, in Everton, Liverpool—St. Polycarp November 6 to 12; Christ Church, November 1 to 29. Prayer is requested for blessing on the wor there.

Somers Town.—In connection with the Presbyterian Church at Somers Town a special missio has lately been held at King's-cross Theatre. Th services were conducted by Rev. Z. B. Woffendale The attendances were very good, and the earnes addresses given by the different speakers were listened to with deep attention, many being brough under conviction of sin, and led to Christ.

Westbourne-grove Y.M.C.A.—At the opening meeting of this branch for the winter session addresses were given by Mr. Arthur Burson, o Exeter Hall, and Rev. H. Grattan Guinness. The hall was crowded, and many could not obtai admission. At an after-meeting anxious soul were dealt with, and pointed to Christ. "The hand of God," writes the secretary, "is with us a this branch of the Y.M.C.A."

Mr. G. C. Stebbins, so well known in this country as a Gospel singer and composer, has relinquished his post as leader of the praise in Tomkins' Avenue Church, Brooklyn, in order to rejoi Dr. Pentecost in his evangelistic work. Mr Stebbins was much esteemed by the Brookly congregation, and deep regret is felt at his leaving but he could not resist the call to give himsel more fully to evangelistic service, in conjunctio with his tried companion in this work. According to latest accounts, the two evangelists were holding meetings in Amesbury, Mass., and with promise o good success. Thence they were to proceed to Portland, Maine.

Glasgow.—Mr. D. J. Findlay, 42, Grant-street, Glasgow, says, in a recent circular:—The past year at Garscube and St. George's-cross has indeed been one of blessing, and our hearts have been made glad continually by the gracious working of God in the midst. A continuous stream of blessing followed the preaching of the Gospel in the hall until the end of July, when we removed the meetings to the new tent. The campaign continued nightly for eleven weeks. John Climie preached during August, and other faithful servants of the King came to the help of the Lord from time to time. The meetings were more largely attended than in any of our past twelve seasons of tent services, and the power of the Lord was with us all the time, so that we were not permitted to mourn over one barren night. Our annual Tent Conference, which met on Saturday, 1st, and Lord's Day, 2nd October, was a season of very special blessing. Now our tent is safely housed for the winter, and the services are transferred back to Garscube Hall, where already we are feeling the want of space to be a painful inconvenience. Two weekly meetings for young people have recently been added to the work of the Hall, and from these we look to gather precious fruit for the Master's glory.

DEATH OF ANOTHER CONGO MISSIONARY. —News has come to hand of the death of Mr. J. E. Biggs, a Baptist missionary on the Congo, and the son of Mr. J. Biggs, of Orpington. Mr. Biggs died on August 26 last, from bilious intermittent fever, at Kinshasha, Stanley Pool. Dr. Sims, of the American Baptist Missionary Union, attended the deceased during his illness, and reports that the fever commenced in the usual way on August 17, when the temperature of the blood marked 105·4 degrees. Mr. Biggs was a colleague of Rev. T. J. Comber, and only recently he wrote to the secretary of the Mission a very hopeful letter. The committee of the Baptist Missionary Society are engaged in making the most careful inquiries and investigations as to the best course of treatment to be adopted in Congo fever cases, and special medical instructions have been despatched to the missionaries. Further medical representatives will, it is hoped, be shortly secured and sent out.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, NOV. 6.—JEREMIAH VII.

EIL and S.C. regard vii.—x. as one prophecy, he subject of which is, "The vanity of putting rust in the Temple and in the sacrificial ervice, and the way to safety and life."—Keil.

2.—Stand in the gate of the Lord's house.— There can be little doubt that we have in these our chapters the very words addressed by eremiah to the people as they flocked into erusalem from the country, to attend the solemn ervices of the Temple."—S.C. Many suppose Dean Payne Smith among the number) that hese four chapters constitute the message reerred to xxvi. 1—8.

4.—The temple of the Lord are these.—"The reefold repetition of the same word is the most arked way of laying great emphasis upon it. Are these' means the whole complex mass of uilding."—Keil. See for a somewhat similar xhibition of pride in the Temple, Luke xxi. 5.

10.—We are delivered to do all these abominaons.—"Jeremiah accuses them of trusting in he ceremonial of the Temple, instead of leading oly lives. You break (he says) the ten comandments, and then you go to the Temple, and hen the service is over you say, 'We are devered.' We have atoned for our past actions, nd may start afresh with easy minds upon a ew course of wickedness."—S.C. This is the eligion of ritualism at all times: to quiet the onscience by ceremonial "services," and to ave untouched the question of fundamental oral reformation, i.e., regeneration.

12.—But go now unto my place which was in hiloh.—"See Psalm lxxviii. 58—64, which refers o the same thing. Apparently, it was this rgument which so roused the indignation of the eople (xxvi. 6—11)."—S.C. There are few more elling arguments against the pretensions of the hurch of Rome, based on the promise of the ontinuance of Christ's presence with his hurch (Matt. xxviii. 20), than to show that a imilar promise to Israel (Haggai ii. 5) did not eep the Jewish Church from apostasy. See om. xi. 21.

18.—The queen of heaven.—"Originally a cification of the moon."—Keil. It is not a ttle significant of the parallelism of Gentile ith Jewish apostasy that the Church of Rome eifies the Virgin Mary under a similar name.

21.—Put your burnt offerings unto your sacrices.—"The meaning is, increase your sacrices as you will. Add burnt offerings to peace fferings. All is in vain, so long as you neglect bedience."—S.C.

22.—I spake not unto your fathers.—This does ot mean that God did not at Sinai appoint the evitical sacrificial system, but that it was only ppointed when obedience had failed, as may be een in Exod. xix.—xxiv. and xxxii. Obedience, ot sacrifice, was God's primary object. The inai covenant, strictly speaking, consisted of he ten commandments only (Deut. iv. 13).

MONDAY, NOV. 7.—JEREMIAH VIII.

1.—At that time...they shall bring out the bones. —"The reason for so doing was, as Jerome bserves, the practice of burying ornaments and rticles of value along with the dead. Seeking or such things, enemies will turn up the raves."—Keil.

4.—Shall they fall, and not arise?—"Both lauses are impersonal. (So R.V.: 'Shall men ll, and not rise up again? Shall one turn way, and not return?') The argument is, that hen men fall they do not lie on the ground: hen a man loses his way, he retraces his steps." —S.C.

8.—Lo, certainly in vain made he it; the pen f the scribes is in vain.—Critics are generally greed that this should be rendered (as R.V.), Behold, the false pen of the scribes hath rought falsely;" meaning, "Such persons, by alse interpretation and application, have pererted the truth of the law into a lie."—Keil.

10.—For every one from the least, &c.—These erses 10—12 are almost identical with vi. 12—15.

17.—For, behold, I will send serpents.—"The invading army sent to execute God's sentence is now compared to snakes."—S.C.

22.—Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no physician there?—"Gilead was a mountainous region east of the Jordan. It anciently abounded in spices and aromatic gums" (Gen. xxxvii. 27). —Smith's Dictionary of Bible. "Naturally where the balsam was found, there would also be people skilled in the application of it. Gilead was to Israel, what Israel spiritually was to the whole world. Has Israel, then, no balm for herself? Is there no physician in her who can bind up her wound?"—S.C.

TUESDAY, NOV. 8.—JEREMIAH IX.

1.—Oh that my head were waters.—"This verse belongs to the preceding chapter, with which it is joined in the Hebrew."—S.C. Commentators see here only the words of the prophet, but "saith the Lord" (ver. 3) points to his being but the mouthpiece of the Lord Himself, and Luke xix. 41, where Jesus "beheld the city and wept over it," confirms this.

4.—Every brother will utterly supplant.—"An allusion to the name of Jacob (Gen. xxv. 26, xxvii. 36). It might be rendered, 'Every brother is a thorough Jacob.'"—Dean Payne Smith.

5.—Will not speak the truth.—Contrast with this the essential characteristic of "the new man" (Eph. iv. 25): "Putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour."

13.—They have forsaken my law which I set before them.—The root of Israel's failure.

23.—Thus saith the Lord, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom.—"With the preceding verse the prophet ended his description of the fall of Jerusalem, and now to the end of chapter x. he urges upon the people the practical conclusion to be drawn from God's righteous dealings with them."—S.C. The three things (wisdom, strength, riches) on which men most pride themselves have proved vain. Henceforth let the knowledge of God (see John xvii. 3) be sought.

26.—Better rendered in R.V., "All the nations (i.e., Gentiles) are uncircumcised, and all the house of Israel are uncircumcised in heart." See Rom. ii. 28, 29.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 9.—JEREMIAH X.

2.—Be not dismayed at the signs of heaven.— "Eclipses, comets, meteors and the like, which seemed to the heathen to portend national calamities. To attribute any importance to such things is to walk in heathen ways."—S.C.

11.—The gods that have not made the heavens and the earth.—This verse is in Chaldee, apparently to afford the Jews the very words which they were to address to the heathen.

14.—Every founder is confounded by the graven image.—"On which he has exhausted his skill, and which still remains an image."—S.C.

16.—The portion of Jacob is not like them.— "I.e., the God who has fallen to the lot of Jacob as inheritance."—Keil. Comp. Ps. xvi. 5, "The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance." Israel is the rod of his inheritance.—"The rod is the sceptre, and Israel the people, over whom Jehovah especially rules."—Henderson.

17.—Gather up thy wares.—"Rather, 'thy bundle' ('thy bundle from the ground,' R.V.). It means, not goods for trading, but a few articles for necessary use which could be made up into a bundle and carried in the hand."—S.C.

21.—The pastors are become brutish.—"The shepherds" (R.V.); i.e., the kings, rulers, and governing classes generally, including the priesthood, but not confined to them.

24.—Correct me, but with judgment.—"Jacob is still God's people, though erring; he prays, therefore, that God would punish him only so far as would bring him to true repentance."—S.C.

THURSDAY, NOV. 10.—JEREMIAH XI.

"The prophecy contained in chapters xi., xii. seems to form a whole, and may be called 'the curse of the broken covenant.'"—S.C.

3.—The words of this covenant, which I commanded your fathers.—"It is clear from the succeeding context that these are the words of the covenant recorded in the Pentateuch, known from the reading of the law."—Delitzsch. Strictly speaking, this covenant consisted only of book of the covenant" (Exod. xxiv. 4—7) probably included Exod. xxi.—xxiii., which was a practical expansion of the law in its application to daily life, and as on this book the covenant was ratified by blood, it is well to take the word covenant here in this larger sense.

4.—Obey my voice...so shall ye be my people.— A reminiscence of Exod. xix. 5, "If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be unto Me, &c." God's old covenant with Israel was strictly conditional on obedience to a law set before them. In the new or better covenant (Heb. viii. 8) He undertakes Himself to put his law within them, and to be their God.

13.—Altars to burn incense to Baal.—"Such a public establishment of idolatry actually took place in the reign of Manasseh (2 Kings xviii. 4; 2 Chron. xxxiii. 3)."—S.C.

15.—The holy flesh is passed from thee.—The LXX. reading is adopted by Keil, "Shall vows and holy flesh avert thine evil from thee?" R.V. translates it thus in margin: "Why hath the beloved wrought abomination in my house? Shall vows and holy flesh take away from thee thy wickednesses?"

16.—A green olive tree, fair, and of goodly fruit.—See Rom. xi. 24.

18—23.—"An account of the designs of the inhabitants of Anathoth against the prophet's life."—Keil.

FRIDAY, NOV. 11.—JEREMIAH XII.

1.—Righteous art Thou, O Lord.—"Probably this outburst of expostulation was occasioned by the plot of the men of Anathoth. The sense is very well given in the margin of A.V., 'Yet let me reason the case with thee.'"—S.C. The prosperity of the wicked in this life was often a difficulty to the Old Testament saints. See Job xxi. 7; Ps. xxxvii. and lxxiii.

5.—If thou hast run with the footmen.—"In this verse and the next the Lord so answers the prophet's complaint as to reprove his impatience by intimating that he will have to endure still worse. Both parts of ver. 5 are of the nature of proverbs."—Keil.

6.—They have called a multitude after thee.— "Rather, 'they have called aloud after thee.' In the troublous times coming upon Jeremiah his own relatives will join the 'hue and cry' after him, as Luther well translates these words."

7.—I have forsaken mine house, &c.—"Jehovah shows that the downfall of the nation was occasioned by no want of love on his part, but was a just necessity caused by his people setting themselves as a roaring lion against Him. No sooner is his protection withdrawn than enemies on every side begin the work of retribution by trampling down that land which was once God's heritage."—S.C.

14.—And pluck out the house of Judah from among them.—Fulfilled through the edict of Cyrus on his taking Babylon (Ezra i. 1).

SATURDAY, NOV. 12.—JEREMIAH XIII.

"The date of this prophecy is fixed by the mention of the queen-mother in ver. 18 (not 'queen,' but 'queen-mother,' R.V.). This was the mother of Jehoiakin (2 Kings xxiv. 8), Nehusta, who was associated with him in the government and carried captive with him to Babylon (xxix. 2). With this date—the three months' reign of Jehoiakin—all the indications of time in the narrative very closely agree.

4.—Go to Euphrates, and hide it there.—"His place of refuge may have been near the Euphrates."—S.C.

7.—Behold, the girdle was marred.—"The mouldering of the girdle in the earth by the Euphrates signifies not the moral but the physical decay of the covenant people, which again was a result of the moral decay of the period during which God had in long-suffering borne with them, notwithstanding their sins."

16.—Before your feet stumble upon the dark mountains.—"Lit. 'Mountains of dusk'—i.e., mountains shrouded in dusk, the emblem of unseen stumbling-blocks, on which one stumbles and falls."—Ibid.

23.—That are accustomed to do evil.—Or lit. (as in margin), "taught to do evil." It is the same word used Isa. liv. 13: "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord." Here, however, the teaching comes from another source. (See

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. F. E. Wigram recently stated that in India, where a tremendous upheaval is going on, his observation had convinced him that Mohammedanism is making no progress.

The congregation at the morning service in Canterbury Cathedral on Monday week consisted of only one person. This is said to be an unparalled circumstance, the smallest congregation hitherto having been four.

The Bishop of Bath and Wells has been strongly advocating a more complete system towards the evangelisation of the masses, and says:—"There must be much more sympathy with the wants and modes of thought and peculiar habits and differences, and even prejudices, of working men."

A correspondent of The Western Daily Mercury states that the Archbishop of Canterbury has declined to overrule the Bishop of London's decision to withhold a licence from Rev. Stewart Headlam. Mr. Headlam has received a letter from the Primate saying he has come to the conclusion that he has no rights in the matter, and that the Bishop's authority is final.

BAPTIST.

Rev. D. P. Macpherson, Myrtle-street Chapel, Liverpool, attracts large congregations.

The Baptist Magazine for November contains a portrait, with brief biographical sketch, of the late Rev. T. J. Comber, pioneer of the Congo Mission; also an excellent biographical sketch of the late Rev. W. Poole Balfern.

Owing to the overcrowded state of the Tabernacle, St. Luke's-street, Hull, Rev. Frank Russell has commenced meetings for the masses at the Alhambra Music Hall. On Sunday, October 23, about one thousand attended in the afternoon, and one thousand two hundred at night.

The jubilee of the Sunday-school in Great George-street, Salford, was celebrated on Saturday week, when there was a large attendance of old scholars and teachers, including Mrs. Peter Bury, who in 1837 collected in her own home a small class which gradually extended so as to require more accommodation.

The Baptist Mission in the Shantung Province, China, have in the single district of Tsing-cheu Fu fifty-five churches, all being self-supporting, ministered to by native pastors and teachers, maintaining themselves entirely, and not drawing any of their support from the funds of the society. More than three hundred and sixty converts were baptized during the past year.

Rev. Francis James, missionary from China, preached at the Baptist Chapel, York, on Sunday week. Instead of the regular service in the evening a public meeting was held. Besides the address of Mr. James, Mr. J. R. Hill, and Mr. Robert Kay, both Wesleyans, also spoke. "It was," writes a correspondent, "a gratifying sight to see Wesleyans and Baptists meeting together, and putting aside all controversial questions, endeavouring to spread the Gospel in a land which truly enough is in sore need of it."

CONGREGATIONAL.

Congregationalism, says The Brooklyn Eagle, has now ninety-five churches in the State of Pennsylvania, and has made a net gain of 80 per cent. in church membership since 1880.

Rev. Joseph Boyle, on retiring from the pastorate of Barbican Church, Hoxton, where he has ministered for twenty-five years, was presented with an illuminated address and a cheque for £100.

A new mission hall, in connection with Tyndale Church, Gloucester, has recently been opened. The hall, which will seat about one hundred and fifty persons, is situated at Saintsbridge, in a new and extending neighbourhood.

Rev. Joseph Cook says that if the American Board had not adopted the orthodox resolutions on the "future probation" theory it would have opened the way into the mission field of men who would "sow Asia with contradictions."

Rev. J. Guinness Rogers purposes to deliver a series of three lectures on "The Congregationalism of to-day" in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on three consecutive Tuesdays, November 22, 29, and December 6, for the benefit especially of ministers and church officers.

Miss Fothergill, of Darlington, who has been most successful in conducting young women's services in different parts of the country, has during the last few days been engaged in helping and stimulating the various spiritual and educational agencies in connection with Cattlegate Chapel, Nottingham, and more particularly the Young Women's Christian Association. These services have been very acceptable.

A meeting of Congregationalist and Baptist ministers has been held at the Memorial Hall, London, with a view to bring about united action between the two bodies. After discussion and the reading of a paper by Rev. J. H. Cooke (Baptist), a resolution was adopted, on the motion of Rev. W. Penfold Cope, seconded by Dr. Henry Allon, expressing an opinion that the time had come for securing the joint action of the two denominations, with a view to the extension of Free Church principles in villages and small towns, and urging the secretaries to see if arrangements could not be made for a conference on the subject.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Mr. J. C. Kingzett and his wife have sailed for Madagascar. Mr. Kingzett goes to take charge of the printing office at Antananarivo. The missionaries look forward with hope to a further development of the printing department, as Mr. Kingzett has been diligently studying the production of pictures by photo-zinco-

METHODIST.

At Seaham Harbour, Mr. J. Nairns, evangelist, has been conducting special services, and a number have professed conversion.

At Tatham-street, Sunderland Second Circuit (Primitive Methodist), special evangelistic services have been held, with encouraging results. In almost every case where the converts were not already total abstainers, they signed the temperance pledge.

At a public service held in City-road Chapel on Monday evening, Mr. G. W. Olver and Mr. A. A. Bestall, who are about to proceed to the foreign mission field, were formally ordained. The former goes to Bankura, to labour in connection with the Santhali Mission, and the latter to Burmah.

The memorial to the late Mr. James Barlow, which it is intended shall take the form of a joinery department at the Children's Home, Edgworth, is being largely subscribed to, and already over £2000 has been contributed or promised. The committee state that £2500 will be required to carry out the project.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The annual meeting of the Young Men's Guild of the Established Church of Scotland was recently held at Galashiels. Its members number over 15,000.

Dr. Andrew Thomson, whose life of Samuel Rutherfurd was so well received, is preparing a similar volume on Thomas Boston, author of "The Fourfold State."

About sixty persons joined the Wynd Free Church in Glasgow at last communion, a large number of these being the direct results of recent special evangelistic services.

Professor J. S. Blackie published a sonnet in The Scotsman in which he praises Rev. John McNeill, of M'Crie Roxburgh Free Church, Edinburgh, as "a man who knows what preaching means." Mr. McNeill is described in The Presbyterian Messenger as "a Scottish Spurgeon."

Dr. Morison, English Presbyterian missionary at Rampore, Bauleah, India, is seriously indisposed, and has been ordered home. At a brief notice, Miss Bayly, who has laboured in the same field, was to have started yesterday (Thursday), to take up, as far as possible, the work laid down by Dr. Morison.

SALVATION ARMY.

General Haig is anxious that the Army should commence work in Arabia.

In connection with the slum work at Woolwich a Rescue Home was opened about four months ago, and since then eleven girls have been rescued. At least four drunken wives have been converted.

The widow of a clergyman of the Church of England, in enclosing a cheque for £25 to the Army, states that she has "seen some cases of thorough reformation brought about by the efforts of the Army."

At a late case in Alameda, California, one of Bishop Taylor's sons defended the Army, and gave his services free. He said if the Army were troubled again, let him know and he would see that they had justice.

Commissioner Tucker has been to Colombo, and reports that the barracks was crowded every night with Singhalese. There are seventeen native cadets in training, and the new homes are almost ready.

The War Cry is now catering for the amusement, as well as the instruction of its readers. In its issue of last week there is a profusely illustrated "Story of the Army Drum," framed on the plan of the well-known nursery tale, "The House that Jack Built."

The Army have secured for their Rescue Home in Middlesborough a hall, where they will have double the accommodation they have at present. They will be able to receive forty girls. With this enlargement they intend to actively pursue rescue work in Stockton, Darlington, the Hartlepools, and Bishop Auckland.

Major Bullard has been making efforts during the past year to scatter good literature through Madras and the country round about by means of a "Book and Bible Cart." His little book van is texed both in Indian and English, and is sent from village to village in the neighbourhood of Madras, as well as about the city.

"Among our new recruits," writes a Salvation soldier from Middlesborough, "is a man who was led to the Saviour by his little daughter. After a hard drinking Saturday she persuaded him to attend a Sunday afternoon meeting, and when there pleaded with him to give his heart to God. He refused, but his little lassie still prayed and pleaded for and with him until he could hold out no longer. He hurried out to the penitent-form while the first hymn, which was, 'Christ for Me,' was being given out one Sunday night."

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The spiritual and financial reports presented last week at Armagh to the annual Episcopal Church Synod of the diocese, were regarded as satisfactory and adopted.

About sixty persons have professed either conversion or restoration from backsliding, in special meetings held during the last few weeks in the Methodist Church at Togherdoo, Co. Fermanagh.

At a temperance meeting recently held in the Presbyterian Church, at Sion Mills, at which an address was delivered by Mr. James Thompson, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, over one hundred and fifty new names were enrolled as total abstainers.

The death of Mr. David Ross, Q.C., County Court Judge of Co. Antrim, and Recorder of Belfast, is announced. Deceased was the son of a Presbyterian minister, and had been for many years a Sabbath-school

The annual meetings on behalf of Methodist Hom Missions have been held during the past couple of week in over two hundred centres throughout Ireland, an have been well attended and fairly successful.

A series of mission services was held last week i Knock Methodist Church by Mr. J. Townsend Trench and a similar series in Fall's-road Methodist Church Belfast, by Rev. C. Inwood, Conference evangelist.

As an instance of the progress made during recen years by the Protestant Episcopal Church, it is state that while in 1834 there were only 19,000 church members in the town of Belfast, now there are about 80,00 members.

A remarkable work of revival is going on in Crumlin road Methodist Church, Belfast. During the pas fortnight over three hundred persons have professe conversion, and on Sunday week alone seventy person were led to the Saviour.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Joh Russell Walker, Archdeacon of Chichester.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES

ALGIERS.—A religious fortnightly paper, to be calle Courrier du Dimanche, is about to appear. It will b edited by Pastor Bost, of Bouffarick.

DIJON.—The girls' school, so long directed by Mdlle Stahl, is now taken by Madame Brunet. M. Brunet who was an evangelist in the McAll Mission, will tak part in the conduct of the school.

FATHER HYACINTHE was last spring, from lack o funds, obliged to close his chapel in the Rue d'Arras Paris. It has now, however, been re-opened, and M Loyson preached to a numerous audience from "Go y into all the world, teaching all nations," referring especially to the ennobling effect of the Gospel in France

BERLIN.—At the meeting of the Church Singing Union lately held in Berlin, a letter enclosing £15 from the German Empress was read, which expressed he warm interest in the efforts of the Union. On Saturday October 15, the friends of the Home Mission Society me in Berlin. Princess William and her sister, Princess o Schleswig-Holstein, visited the mission house, and fifteen of the provincial clergy were presented to he Royal Highness.

THE BIBLE IN THE GERMAN ARMY.—Colone Klefecker is commissioned by royal command to superintend the distribution of the Holy Scriptures to th German army. The yearly requirement for this purpos is about 4000 Bibles and 18,000 New Testaments, o which number 4000 are Catholic and foreign copies Since 1831, 143,000 Bibles, and over 700,000 New Testaments have been given to the Prussian soldiers. Th British and Foreign Bible Society has almost exclusivel borne the cost of this supply. The Prussian Bibl Society celebrated its anniversary October 19, when i was stated that 8266 more copies of the Bible had bee distributed last year than in the preceding year.

CORSICA.—A lady having called at Corsica on he way to North Africa a short time ago, writing to a frien in England, gives a very sad account of the spiritua state of the people there. Accompanied by a friend she sang in the French language the hymn, "Tell m the old, old Story," to a wondering crowd. At the clos some of them cried, "That is not an old story to us it is a new one, for we have never heard it." The ladie preached Jesus in a simple way to the people, whos marked attention showed how deeply they are thirstin for the truth as it is in Him. Being under the intoleran thraldom of Roman Catholicism, they are not allowe to learn to read, and have no better idea of the Saviou than that of his being carried as a babe in the arms o the Virgin. Their condition socially is also ver degraded.

ROMISH PRIESTS.—The third report of the "Mission to Roman Catholic Priests in France" appears i Le Signal. There is a strong movement among man clergy to free themselves from the yoke of Popery Some Abbés who have taken the initiative publish a bi weekly journal, the Tribune Libre du Clergé, in which certain abuses are vigorously denounced. A simila journal, also directed by an ex-priest, advocates th abolition of the Concordat, and rupture with Rome. Th principles are very vague and oscillate between a sor of Theism and a lifeless Ritualism. The object of thi society is to lead these dissatisfied seekers to Chris and to offer those priests, who conscientiously wish come out from the Church of Rome, a home and [illegible] to some other career. So far the result of the eff[illegible] very encouraging, several ex-priests are now eng[illegible] pastoral or evangelistic work, and some in [illegible]

THE LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY

AND HOMERTON MISSION

Appeals to all the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN" for their

HELP AND PRAYERS

for the work of the Society in relieving the Destitute Poor.

WE have arranged a system of Tickets for Lodgings, Coal, Bread, and Cocoa and Bread, which are available in all parts of the Metropolis; by which means the Lord's people can dispense their own bounty. Copies of these Tickets will be sent on application to anyone interested in the Destitute Poor.

A GLIMPSE of SOME OF THE WAYS in which THE SOCIETY is PROVIDED WITH FUNDS.

WE rejoice greatly that in such circumstances the hearts of many in all parts of the land, and in all ranks of society, from the titled and noble, to the poor widow; of all ages, from the dear old saint tottering to her grave, to the tiniest child, have been stirred to help the work. The following few extracts will illustrate the varied circumstances under which money has been sent:—

"It was the wish of my dear departed sister I should send you £50 of her money. I enclose it herewith. S. A. Y."

"Having no spare money at the moment, I send you a valuable brooch, which should realise £30. D. L."

"I have, I am pleased to say, collected in this place £12 for your work among the destitute poor."

"Caroline ——'s farewell gift (£1). She is fast approaching her heavenly home."

"This is one-eleventh of all the cash I possess. I trust that, like the 'loaves and fishes,' it will soon be so multiplied by the donations of those who have enough and to spare, that you may be enabled to feed thousands and still have something left. S. M."

"Enclosed is P.O.O. for 12s., collected amongst my fellow-servants for your work. A. E. H."

"Cottage Garden Show Prizes.— Cabbages (first), 3s.; marrows (first), 3s.; geranium (second), 1s.; potatoes (second), 2s.; cultivation of garden, 10s.—19s.; 2s. added, £1 1s. Please receive cheque as above for children's outing. W. G."

A hospital nurse writes:—"The enclosed was collected amongst our patients. E. M."

"I enclose £2 17s. 4d., collected by the girls in our Sunday-school. M. C."

"Miss B—— has pleasure in sending a small contribution from her mothers' meeting."

"I enclose 10s. for your Convalescent Home. It is all I can afford, being a poor crippled widow, with a very small income...Praying the Lord may give a sufficiency for all your needs. L. P."

From the Children's Letters we extract the following:—

A very little boy addresses his letter to the poor children we help:—"My dear Children,—I have saved up six market pennies for you to have some dinner on Christmas Day; and my sister Beatrice has sent 6d., which she had given to her yesterday. With kind love, Stanley W."

"I send you the contents of my box, hoping it may bring a little sunshine in a few little hearts. "Ann A——."

"Mamma has given me 2s. 6d. for a birthday present. I send you a shilling of it, and will try and collect some more. Bertie H——."

"I send you 4s. more for the poor children, collected by my children. M. E. T. S."

"My sister Rose and I send you the enclosed for your free breakfasts; it is from the sale of our rabbits. A. M. P."

"My little daughters saw your appeal, and said they would like to help. The youngest has collected 11s. 6d. in small sums. In addition they have got up a 'juvenile bazaar,' just held in the vicarage, and have realised £1 11s. for your work. G. T. B."

"I enclose 10s. towards the free breakfasts, being a collection made by our choir boys. M. D."

"I enclose 12s. sent by the boys in this house (a master's house in a public school) for your work. E. J. E."

"My little son has collected 15s. 7d. for your work, and 2s. 7d. is taken from the box of 'little Elsie,' now taken to be with Jesus. I felt her money so precious, we could not put it to a holier use than in providing for some of Christ's little ones. F. P."

FORBIDDEN FRUIT FOR YOUNG MEN.

By MAJOR SETON CHURCHILL,

Author of "Stepping Stones to Higher Things," "Church Ordinances from the Layman's Standpoint," &c.

CONTENTS.

Forbidden Fruit: Its Raison d'Etre—Benefits of Temptation—The Moral Nature of Man—Self-Control—Human Responsibility—True to Nature—Accumulative Power of Sin—Promiscuous Intercourse—Polygamy—Marriage—Prostitution—Responsibilities of Parents—Influence of Medical Men in Questions of Morality—Impure Thoughts—Impure Pictures—Causes Exciting to Impurity—Aids to Purity—Treatment of the Fallen—Religion as an Aid to Purity.

FAMILY CHURCHMAN.—"This book is a model of the manner in which the Purity Question ought to be discussed with young men. The tone of the book is manly, straightforward, and simple, and we could wish it in the hands of every young man."

CHRISTIAN.—"The writer's wide experience in different parts of the world, combined with his knowledge of the Scriptures and deep spiritual experience, peculiarly fits him to be the author of such a book as this. We trust that every Young Men's Christian Association Librarian will order copies."

MORNING POST.—"The writer feels earnestly the importance of the work he has undertaken, and there is about his style a manliness and a healthy tone which can hardly fail to impress those to whom he addresses himself—young men."

AUSTRALIAN CHRISTIAN WORLD.—"It is a book which we can fearlessly recommend . . . . just the kind of advice which might come from a pure, high-minded, godly father to a dearly-beloved son."

THE WEST CENTRAL MISSION.

The three services held in St. James's Hall on Sunday were largely attended, the evening one especially. Mr. Pearse conducted the morning service, while Mr. Hughes preached in the afternoon and in the evening. Both preachers are devoting their discourses to a review of the social condition and spiritual destitution of all classes of London society, from the starving poor of Trafalgar-square to the dwellers in mansions. Mr. Hughes maintained on Sunday that no improvement would take place among the masses of the people until Christians look at them through the pitying eyes of Jesus Christ; he recommended us to reserve some sacred moments every day to contemplate with Christ's compassion the sin and misery of mankind.

The lady helpers of the Mission have commenced house-to-house visitation among the poor of the district; and the lay agent (Mr. Josiah Nix) is busily engaged making elaborate arrangements for the holding of open-air services in the lower quarters. At these the brass band will be utilised.

NEWPORT, MON.—We hear with pleasure that a spirit of united prayer has manifested itself among the Nonconformist pastors of this town, which is spreading to the churches. We will give particulars next week.

A NEW DEPARTURE IN MAGAZINE WORK.—Our readers have no doubt followed with deep interest the accounts we have given from time to time of such noble workers in this field as Dr. Barnardo, Miss Rye, and others. We have determined, with God's blessing and with the aid of the readers of The Quiver, to bear a hand in this Christlike work. It is a labour full of promise, and almost the only key to the vexed question of what to do with the outcast classes. For though it is impossible to straighten and untwist the gnarled and crooked thorn that for years has wound its tortuous roots into the soil and flung its perverse branches overhead, yet the tender sapling may be checked and directed, for within it there is still the law which makes it stretch its head upward towards the light. In opening this vew volume of The Quiver we inaugurate a new work. We have resolved, in the name of our readers, to adopt two "Quiver Waifs"—a little boy, who is to be under Dr. Barnardo's care, to be clothed, fed, and trained, at our expense, for a useful and godly life, and a little girl, one of Miss Rye's flock.—"The Quiver" for November.

PARIS.—The twenty-ninth part of "Recollections of a Paris Evangelist," has been published, and can be obtained of Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. The interesting work of Mons. Vignal, of which this is the report, has been carried on during the past year with much blessing. During that period M. Vignal held 235 meetings and distributed a large number of publications, taking every opportunity to preach the Gospel. He paid nearly a thousand visits, when he was able to speak on spiritual subjects, and to read and meditate on the Word, and pray. He notices that prayer generally produces a great effect, especially upon Roman Catholics, who only know the prayers which they have learnt by heart, and which are always the same. Eighteen members were added to the church in the Rue de Lille.

JAPAN.—Rev. H. Loomis, the American Bible Society's agent at Yokohama, writes:—The Vice Minister of Justice at Tokio is an earnest and very active Christian, and it is said that he spends his Sabbaths in teaching the Bible to his friends and companions.

Subscriptions Received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Monday, October 31, 1887.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.
